The New York Times has been making a Nation-wide inquiry into business conditions and prospects at the beginning of this month, as compared with the same time last year. Summing up the correspondence and reports received, it notes running through the entire mass "a feeling of confidence in the immediate future." The railroads have suffered most, but "expect a big increase over last year's business when the crops begin to move." It will take 525,000 cars to move the winter-wheat crop alone, after making allowance for farm and local consumption, says E. C. Simmons, the St. Louis hardware magnate. Automobile manufacturers, says the Times in its summary, "report business booming."

Several papers mention the country's bank clearings as a good sign. "For the first half of 1914," says the Springfield Republican (Ind.), "they were but 1.4 per cent below the same period last year," and in the early weeks of July they exceeded the 1913 record. "These figures," says the Republican, "can not be explained in any way consistent with 'hard times': in all previous periods of very severe depression in business bank clearings have fallen off from 10 to 20 per cent." Idle railroad cars are now "decreasing fast as the crop movement goes on," and, according to the Republican, "it is now admitted that the figures of idle cars have for months been swollen at least 10 per cent by the inclusion of freight cars that under ordinary circumstances would be scrapped. These cars can never be put back into service, but their inclusion in the idle-car showing made a fine hard-times exhibit and helped to intensify the 'psychological' side of business depression."

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, I want to say a few words about the question at issue here, which, as I understand, is whether the members of this commission shall receive $7,500 a year salary or $10,000 a year salary. The Senate has been debating this question for about five hours and a half and is debating it at this time, and I understand that we have devoted five hours and a half to save the sum of $15,000 a year. I like to see economy practiced, but a Congress that has expended the amount of money that this Congress has, whether it expends another $15,000 upon this board or not, is not going to make any particular dent in the appropriations or put any particular bump upon it.

I think this is a wrong time to talk economy in establishing a board of this kind. A Congress that can vote $42,000,000 for river and harbor appropriations ought not to balk on $15,000 a year. A Congress that has expended the amount of money this Congress has expended ought not to balk upon $15,000 a year when the results that are going to be obtained by such alleged economy are certain to be bad and not good.

I do not think the question is so much whether $7,500 is the proper compensation as the question. Why should this commission receive less than other commissions of equal or less importance? Why should we now have this spasm of economy upon this particular subject? I can not understand it. The reason why I am in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] is that in establishing this commission, with the powers that have been given to it, I think it is very bad policy to attach to it something that is going to lower it in the public confidence, in the public esteem, and in the public respect.

We can talk as we will, but if this commission is of the importance that is claimed for it, and that the bill says it is,

and that the Senator from North Carolina says it is, why, then, should we put upon it something that gives it not only the appearance, but will give the people the impression and the understanding that its functions are of less importance, and that this is an inferior commission to all the others?

It is my idea that the members of this commission should receive what the members of the other commissions are receiving. Then, if some Senator wants to introduce here a bill to reduce the salaries of all the commissions, I think a good deal of what has been said upon this floor now would then be pertinent to the issue; at least, it would be worthy of consideration. But when we have already established commissions and given the members salaries of from $10,000 to $12,000 each, I think we are begging the question and losing sight of the main issue when we suddenly say we must economize and we must give these men less than the others are receiving.

The Senator from North Carolina, in my opinion, made a very good argument as to why these men should receive $10,000 a year. He pointed out their functions. He showed that this commission is more important and has greater powers than almost any other commission that has been established by this Congress. He pointed out why, and he said it so well that it is not necessary to repeat it; and I could not improve upon it if I wanted to. But he conclusively shows that this commission is invested with powers and is to be composed of men who will need a higher degree of ability in the performance of their duties than almost any other commission that has been heretofore established.

To fill this position properly the man has to to be a student, a scholar, an economist, and a statesman. His qualifications, in my judgment, will have to be greater than those of most, if not all, of the other commissions, whose members are receiving ten or twelve thousand dollars a year.

Why does the Democratic Party, or why does the Senate, after giving the people what it understands has been demanded for a great many years, at the very moment when it is yielding to public sentiment, want to go and spoil its own work by parsimonious treatment of salaries and put to their act the injurious appearance that while yielding to the public demand it does so grudgingly and stingily? Why do we want to make it appear that while we organize a commission we also want to discredit it and humble it?

The contention has already been raised on the other side of the Chamber that this is only a temporary makeshift; that we have not established this commission in good faith; and it was argued here by Senators on this side that there is no foundation for any such charges.

There is not any except the salary that you are going to pay; and when you reduce the salary to $7,500 a year you lay yourselves open to this very imputation that you are not in good faith putting men here who you think are going to be of any great service, and are in a way confessing that you do not believe that this commission amounts to as much as other commissions amount to whose members receive a greater salary. That is the plain inference that is going to be drawn. It is the argument that is going to be made.

The argument that it is not a permanent commission has been sufficiently answered. It is a permanent commission, and it is a commission whose members are invested with high, multifarious, and important duties to perform. Perplexing questions will arise before it, and we have provided in this bill for a continuing appropriation. But after doing all that we ought to do in the matter, we finally taper it off by saying: "Well, we do not think it amounts to very much, anyway, and its members ought not to receive the salaries that other commissions which we have established are receiving."

The facts that these duties have been committed to other branches of the public service or to other commissions does not in any way reflect upon or take away the importance of the duties of this commission. It may be that the Federal Trade Commission, among the hundred powers with which it is invested, may do this very thing; but this bill is for a special purpose. It is to have a commission to specialize on this very branch of inquiry. It is a special field that is to be turned over to them, and its powers are as broad as they can constitutionally be made by the Congress.

While it may be true that others expected that legislative power would be vested in this commission, yet everybody knows, or ought to know, that Congress can not delegate the power of legislation to anyone else, and that this commission goes as far as any commission can go in assisting the Congress in proper tariff legislation. It has been recognized now by both parties that tariff legislation ought to be based on well-known facts, facts gathered and collated together which will enable Congress to legislate intelligently and effectively upon this subject, which has been the football of so much politics in the past. It will require men of high standing; and no man ought to be deterred from entering upon the performance of his duties because of the idea that this is an inferior commission and is only to be filled by mere clerks and statisticians. I say it requires not only statisticians, or a man who understands statistics; it requires a statesman to properly fulfill the duties of this office and to do his part in the performance of the important duties with which he will be invested under the bill. I hope that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the session is now rapidly drawing to a close and I hesitate to trespass upon the patience of the Senate. But I can not forbear making some rejoinder to the criticisms which have from time to time been directed ostensibly to this bill, but actually to the policy of the party which sponsors it. They have, I think, been designed, not so much to provoke discussion as to furnish material to the Republican campaigner, whose tendency to accept their conclusions will be justified by our failure to notice them. For this reason only I ask the indulgence of the Senate for half an hour.

It has been asserted by the Senators from Pennsylvania and Utah that the Underwood bill was the harbinger of hard times; that the country was prosperous when Mr. Taft surrendered the Presidency to his successor; that these pleasant conditions were aggravated as time passed, and but for the providential occurrence of the European war the country would, through Democratic administration, have been plunged into the horrors of a wide-spread panic. The truth of this assertion I challenge in detail and in conclusion.

The depression in commercial and industrial circles throughout the greater part of 1912 was a noticeable and depressing feature of that year. The world-wide expansion of credit, the failure of many large enterprises to meet their current obligations, the sensational exposure of the New Haven wreckers and the wide-spread ruin of its shareholders, the collapse of other great railway systems through criminal mismanagement and dissipation of their resources, the increase of European army and navy establishments, necessitating enlarged budgets and taxation, could have produced no other result. Added to this was the burden of the Payne-Aldrich bill upon the industries of the people. These conditions supplemented by the disclosures of the Pou committee were inherited by Mr. Wilson's administration as a legacy of the immediate past. They continued with varying degrees of change through the succeeding year, and were rapidly responding to the beneficent legislation of the Sixty-third Congress when the assassination of the Austrian heir apparent, in July, 1914, plunged the Old World without warning into the most awful conflict of history.

The immediate consequences of this war upon the economic and financial affairs of all neutral nations was appalling. I shall not review them, for they are too fresh in the memory of everyone. Our sufferings were acute, albeit we suffered far less than other countries. Our cotton planters were reduced to bankruptcy; our exchanges closed to transactions of every sort; business suffered sudden paralysis; all enterprise was palsied; great manufacturing establishments temporarily suspended their chief activities; and money disappeared from circulation. But for the recent monetary legislation of a Democratic Congress, panic and wide-spread disaster would have been our certain store. For these conditions no party was responsible.

This widespread disarrangement of our normal activities was at once ascribed by the Senators from Pennsylvania and Utah, with many others, as the logical offspring of the Underwood bill. In this very Chamber they made the assertion and reiterated it. They gleefully pointed to the bread lines in the great cities, to the collapse of the cotton market, to the suspension of the exchanges, and to the issue of emergency currency as a full and final vindication of their prelegislation prophecies. They gloated over the sufferings of the public, taunted Democracy with incapacity, and called upon the country to make note of the consequences of the defeat of the good old party of Lincoln.

To our reply that financial disaster was world-wide, they were derisive. To our reminder that other countries were declaring moratoriums, canceling obligations, and facing national bankruptcy, for the same reasons which caused our sufferings, they voiced loud and strident denial. They would have it otherwise.

Then came the change. Business revived. Industries stirred with renewed activity. Commerce rode upon the waves and spread her white wings of prosperity over the continent. Money poured into the lap of the Nation from every point of the compass. The farmer flourished and waxed with abundance. Cotton resumed its throne, and the great transportation systems groaned beneath the burden of their overtaxed equipment. No such times had been ours within the memory of man.

Now, these gentlemen, chagrined because the bread line disappeared and employment has become the boon of every citizen, have readapted themselves to the situation. They can not deny that prosperity is here, but they say it is here in spite of Democracy; that it is a war prosperity, a temporary prosperity, a blood-bought prosperity; that the war is the salvation of Democracy, and that with the return of peace in Europe, prosperity will spread her wings and fly away, leaving us distraught and desolate again.

Mr. President, I shall not deny that much of our present prosperity is the offspring of the great war. Mr. Seward said to the New York merchants in 1861, that there was no customer like a great nation engaged in an offensive war. The entente allies of Europe are our customers. They have given us enormous orders and quickened the currents in every channel of activity. They have set all the wheels of our machinery in motion, have taken our surplus fabrics and foodstuffs and poured the golden treasure of their centuries of accumulation into the streams of our national commerce. But to attribute all our fortunes to that single cause is unjust and unfair. Every impediment to full and free exchange, to expanding industry, and to international commerce had been removed by wise remedial legislation of this administration. But for these aids our facilities would have been inadequate for the strain of disaster immediately following the commencement of the war, or the demand for supplies which quickly succeeded the transient depression.

Prognostication is easy when it is ex post facto. I can with equal propriety and with equal truth declare that had the war never occurred the stagnation in business affairs characterizing the last year of the Taft administration, and the greater part of 1913 as well, would have disappeared under the beneficent operation of the Underwood bill, the Federal reserve act, and other acts of helpful legislation placed upon the statute books by the first session of the Sixty-third Congress, the abundant evidences of which were everywhere prevalent in the midsummer of 1914.

Republicans are fond of claiming credit for the red-letter years 1899 and 1900, but they can not deny that for more than a year after the enactment of the Dingley tariff law times were as depressed and business as stagnant as in the immediate years preceding. No reaction from the hard conditions of 1895 and 1896 was anywhere apparent prior to the Spanish-American War. The flood tide of McKinley prosperity was born with the declaration of hostilities in 1898. The country responded to like demands for war material and equipment; the Government expended its millions in fitting out its fleet and mobilizing its Army. Business caught the infection of national activity, and every occupation became endowed with renewed life. It is a truth which history demonstrates, that wars are breeders of commerce and good times. The bloody sacrifices of humanity find expression in a quickened and enlarged industrial movement responding to the demand for vast and unlimited governmental supplies. The close of the Spanish War did not terminate the prosperity which it created; that remained with us until wild and limitless speculation of our people culminated in the financial unheaval of 1901. Senators upon the other side of the Chamber can not deny this historic sequence of events nor escape the assertion that war was quite as much responsible for the good times of which they boast as it is for that which the Nation now enjoys.

Senators have taken occasion during these debates to denounce what they are pleased to term "Democratic extravagance." This seems to be their chief source of complaint, since they return to it without ceasing. It is true that our expenditures have exceeded the limit of preceding Congresses, but it is equally true that the Government has largely extended the area of its activities since 1913. This means increased expenditures, or the administration of new laws is impossible. The Senator from Pennsylvania knows this as well as anyone. He also knows that the Roosevelt administration was in this respect the most extravagant of them all, for he was a part of it, and, if I mistake not, a supporter of all its policies. Indeed, I may say without offense, but with perfect truth, that the Senator does not care a rap for extravagance in administration, except as it may supply him with political capital. He has been in public life for many years, during which time he has never lifted a finger in the effort to economize. He has been conspicuous when his own party was in power for his advocacy and support of any and every thing tending to enlarge the power of his organization; and if ever, by voice or vote, he protested against the extravagance of his own party, the RECORD fails to show it.

Since 1913 the Senator's seat in this body has generally been vacant. Only during the past month has he been constant in his attendance, his purpose being revealed by his captious and carping criticism of every movement of the majority.

With here and there an exception of which the junior Senator from Iowa is the most notable example, no effort in the direction of economy has been observable upon the other side of this Chamber. On the contrary Republican Senators have in general been greedy for appropriations for their own constituents, and eager to vote for others without regard to their nature, extent, or purpose when coupled with their own. Republicans have asked for and received many gratuities in common with their Democratic brethern. Laxatives for sick ducks, appropriations for killing coyotes and prairie dogs, for pulling stumps, and repairing river banks in the Northwest are marshaled side by side with those aimed at citrus disease, the gipsy moth, the boll weevil, and the improvement of dry watercourses. The insincerity of the denunciations of Democratic extravagance is easily revealed by reference to these common assaults upon the National Treasury. They are characteristic of the times and on a par with the man who aids his associates in plundering an outsider, and then while retaining his part of the booty denounces them for lawlessness and outrage.

It was the Republican Party which acquired the Philippine Islands, and through its still powerful influence the attempted Democratic efforts to give them over to their own people, have been defeated. These islands have cost the American people more than three-quarters of a billion of dollars. Their cost will continue so long as we retain them. And every dollar of it is a total loss. But few Senators on the other side of the Chamber have protested against their retention, and none have denied the enormous expense to which they have subjected us. Certainly the Senators from Utah and Pennsylvania have not done so. These islands are productive to their constituents, who look forward to the time when, if retained, their resources can be exploited and made to yield of their abundance. Neither have these Senators protested nor complained of our pension appropriations. They know as well as we that a great proportion of pension legislation is prompted by political considerations. It is easy to use the Treasury to secure votes. Both parties, therefore, resort to it, and pension legislation has become a common scandal. But these gentlemen dare not include such appropriations in their indictment of Democratic extravagance, lest there be a reaction to their political detriment.

Republicans boast of their construction of the Panama Canal. This stupendous enterprise, constructed at a cost of half a billion dollars, is by no means a demonstrated successful one. Its foundations are as unstable as Republican principles. One or two more slides like those of recent occurrence and it might as well be abandoned. Its location was a blunder if not a crime. The next two years will determine whether it will prove a monument of national pride or of Republican extravagance. If it be the latter, the American people will visit their resentment upon the Republican Party and justly hold it responsible for rejecting the counsel of the best-informed and wisest statesmen of the hour, who plead for a different, indeed, for the only feasible and safe location.

There has been much weeping and wailing over the shipping-bill appropriation. Against it the sharpest witticisms and the most caustic sarcasms of the Senator from Pennsylvania have been directed. He knows, of course, that his party in its last platform declared for a merchant marine, as it has done for many years before, and he merely voices the protest of that platform against the shipping bill because it provided for the purchase and construction of vessels to be owned by the Government instead of giving their cost as subsidies to private interests as a reward for purchasing or building vessels of their own. To him and his party a subsidy is a sacred thing, because it enriches individuals. A Government-owned merchant marine is anathema, since no one is benefited but the people.

Indeed, Mr. President, the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania demanding the return of the revenue bill to the committee, with instructions to report an old-fashioned protection measure, discloses the real purpose, both of Republican criticism of the bill and its advocacy of preparedness. The latter has entailed an enormous added burden upon the taxpayers of the Nation. Revenues to meet this burden must be raised by taxation. Direct taxation is always unpopular. Any system which hypnotizes and then robs the individual, though more deadly, is far preferable to direct methods which never fail to provoke hostility and suggest political reprisals. Increased expenditures, therefore, tend to promote the protection spirit and lead to a return to the good old Payne-Aldrich days. What better platform, therefore, than PENROSE, preparedness, and protection?

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], the Senator from Minnesota

[Mr. NELSON], and others have joined the Senators from Pennsylvania and Utah in their cry for protection. Indeed, they would not only forgive but commend the Democratic Party for its alleged extravagances, if, forsooth, this would lead to a restoration of the Republican protective régime. And we are told that such should be our legislative policy, because the close of the war will find the nations of Europe clogged and overburdened with huge masses of merchandise manufactured during the period of war, to be dumped upon our shores at bankrupt prices to the ruin of our people and the dismantling of their industries Nothing they declare can prevent this save a wall of protection mounting upward far beyond anything heretofore dreamed of in tariff legislation.

Mr. President, such assertions are so absurd that it is difficult to believe them to be seriously made. No such good fortune awaits the American consumer. The labor of Europe for the past two years has been dying on the battle fields, fighting in the trenches, nursing the wounded, manufacturing and furnishing supplies to the living, tilling the fields, and absorbing itself in the far-reaching and terrible requirements of nations battling for existence. Their manufactories have been converted into huge creations for the production of munitions, and commerce is suspended during the period of conflict. The raw material of industry is exhausted in responding to the requirements of war. The loom and spindle have given way to the maker of shells and dynamite.

When the war shall have ended, the demand for American goods will be as great as now, and theirs will be the vacuum to which American merchandise will be inevitably directed. My only fear is that these exhausted nations may be wholly unable to pay for the goods they need, and that our foreign commerce will suffer from the poverty which war always inflicts upon victor and vanquished alike.

The fear entertained by the Senator from Pennsylvania that the products of pauper labor in Europe may overwhelm the American market increases as the pauper himself diminishes or becomes incompetent. They are killing and maiming each other by the million, yet are they more dangerous than before. But this danger is neither so direct nor so appalling as to suggest to the Senator the expediency of excluding him or his goods. On the contrary, the more Pennsylvania can secure foreign pauper labor free of duty, the more drastic the competition with the American wage earner, the better pleased are those whom he represents here. I have on various occasions during the past two or three years been attracted by some editorials of the Saturday Evening Post regarding this subject, and with the consent of the Senate, I here append them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Saturday Evening Post, Philadelphia, June 21, 1913.]

THE TARIFF.

TARIFF AND TRADE.

According to the elaborate investigation made by the London Board of Trade three years ago, wages for skilled labor in the United States are 130 per cent higher than in England; and in the Canadian market England gets a tariff preference amounting to 33⅓ per cent. Any high protectionist who is true to the basic protectionist dogma that ability to compete depends upon the wage scale will tell you that under those conditions the United States can not possibly compete with England for Canada's trade. But the United States does compete, and with signal success.

Eliminating all those items in which we have a decided natural advantage over England—including breadstuffs, meat, mineral substances and manufactures of wood—and taking only articles as to which England is fairly on all fours with us, a Scotch investigator finds that our sales to Canada have increased 280 per cent in 10 years, while England's sales have increased only 138 per cent.

Of iron and steel manufactures, books and printed matter, boots and shoes, electric apparatus, brass manufactures, and like articles—which England, paying less than half our wages, should theoretically make much cheaper than we can—we sold Canada last year more than a hundred million dollars' worth, while England sold only $16,000,000 worth. On the other hand, England can take our cotton, make it into cloth, and beat us selling the cloth to Canada; and of textiles as a whole, England sells Canada four times as much as we do.

The tariff has nothing to do with it. The wage scale has comparatively little to do with it. Ability to compete—that is, to make goods cheaply—depends upon the efficiency of the labor. Where our labor is most efficient, as in machinery, agricultural implements, and so on, we beat England in spite of a much higher wage scale. Where English labor is most efficient she beats us.

THE LESSEN OF OUR EXPORTS.

The Dingley tariff act was passed 16 years ago this summer and the Payne-Aldrich act changed it very little. Since that time our exports have risen from one billion dollars to two and a half billions; but exports of foodstuffs, whether crude or wholly or partly prepared for use, have actually decreased. Of manufactures, excluding wholly or partly manufactured foodstuffs, we exported $310,000,000 worth 16 years ago; but in the fiscal year just closed we exported decidedly more than a billion dollars' worth.

In the first year of the Dingley law foodstuffs amounted almost to one-half of our total exports. Last year they amounted to less than one-fifth. In 1897 manufactures were but little over one-quarter of total exports; they are now almost one-half. In exports of manufactures since 1900 the United States has gained 110 per cent, Germany 87 per cent, France 71 per cent, Great Britain, 69 per cent. All the other countries pay much lower wages than we do, yet in relative gains we decidedly beat any of them. Our exports of manufactures to Europe have almost doubled in eight years. We are selling the countries of North and South America practically three times as much manufactures as we did eight years ago.

These immense gains in exports of manufactures have been made under wide-open competition with every other country. We pay higher wages, meet all comers on an even footing, and pay the freight besides. In view of which the cry that a reduction of duties from the present 40 per cent level to about 30 per cent will ruin manufacturing in this country seems excessively absurd.

MYTHICAL TARIFF BLESSINGS.

Most of the laborers engaged in steelmaking work 12 hours a day. A committee appointed by the stockholders of the Steel Corporation, headed by Stuyvesant Fish, pointed out the exhausting effects of 12 hours' daily labor in a steel mill, but at the recent annual meeting a resolution looking to the elimination of the 12-hour day was tabled.

The average earnings of laborers engaged in producing iron and steel are 22½ cents an hour, or about $16 a week when fully employed for 12 hours a day. At the same rate for an 8-hour day the men would earn only $10.72 a week, and they could not live on that. On the other hand, the Steel Corporation says it can not pay the same daily wage for 8 hours of work or even for 10, as it now pays for 12.

Volume 3 of the Government's investigation of the steel industry was recently published. It shows that in the production of pig iron labor constitutes only 6.4 per cent of the total cost; for the principal products of the steel mills it constitutes only 17.1 per cent of the total cost. Consequently, if labor were paid the same amount for an 8-hour day that it now receives for a 12-hour day, the total cost of producing pig iron would be increased only 2.6 per cent, and the total cost of producing the principal steel products would be increased only 6 per cent

Moreover, in English blast furnaces, under absolute free trade, the eight-hour day has been generally introduced, and employers find that it increases the efficiency of labor sufficiently to overcome the increased labor cost.

What benefit do our iron and steel workers actually get from a protective tariff?

LABOR ON THE FREE LIST.

Something disagreeable will happen to us, Judge Gary thinks, unless we "have protection against the cheap labor and the impoverished conditions abroad which are inevitable after the war."

The argument, as we get it, is this: With the discharge of millions of soldiers there will be much unemployed labor in Europe; wages will fall; low wages will cheapen manufactures; cheap manufactures will undersell American goods in this market, causing a fall in prices here, which will cause a fall in wages.

Therefore we should have a high protective tariff, so that competition of European goods can not cause a fall in prices here.

Meanwhile every port should be wide open, so that Europe's cheap labor—unable to get employment at home in making goods for the American market—shall pour over here and compete with domestic labor, thereby causing a fall in wages but not in prices.

We must have adequate protection against the results of cheap labor abroad, but not against the cheap labor itself. Over 8,000,000 immigrants came over here in the last census period. That their competition affected wages adversely is rather probable. If there is to be such a condition in Europe as Judge Gary suggests, we may be obliged to discard the Sixth Grade Guide to Rhetoric, upon which we have so far mostly relied in dealing with the immigration question, and go at it with arithmetic That will be a loss in some respects, because a constitutional inability to multiply two by two and arrive at the correct result will shut out some of the talent that has been devoted to the subject in the past.

THE TARIFF BOGY.

In this last fiscal year our purchases of foreign goods were smaller by $200,000,000 than in the year before, and at the end of the period commodity prices in the United States, as reflected by Bradstreet's index number, were the highest ever known. But in spite of that the country, our protectionist friends tell us, is being mysteriously ruined by the pauper labor of Europe.

The aforesaid labor is getting killed and maimed to an extent that appalls the world. The factories in which it was employed are increasingly disorganized by war. The capital behind it is being shot away at the rate of tens of millions of dollars a day. But those things were mere broken reeds to lean upon, unless we are further fortified against European competition by a very high tariff.

You might sink Europe in the sea to-morrow, and your true high protectionist would still go about pale and trembling, unless he had in his pocket the rabbit's foot of high duties to fend off the specter of pauper labor. A Europe with both arms in a sling and not a leg to stand on would still frighten him into gooseflesh unless he had the tariff horseshoe over his door.

So the tariff will, no doubt, be one of the issues of the next presidential election, and if the Republicans win we shall have another revision of it. The loudest champions of high protection do not want an intelligent tariff; they want a political one, with the usual logrolling. This is painful to contemplate; but as neither Democrats nor Republicans seem at all minded to take the tariff out of politics, there is probably no help for it.

THE WRONG AND THE REMEDY.

Originally the common stock of the Steel Corporation was thinner than water but it is not now. The last annual report shows that, first and last, $600,000,000 of net earnings have been used for the purpose of solidifying the water. One hundred and seventy-five million dollars have been paid in dividends on the common stock. Four hundred and twenty-five million dollars of earnings have been appropriated for the purchase of additional property, for new construction, and for the retirement of mortgage liens—all to the benefit of the common stock.

Six hundred million dollars is far more than three years' full wages for every hand employed by the corporation. Last year, after deducting approximately $45,000,000 from earnings for ordinary repairs and maintenance, the corporation further deducted twenty-two millions for extraordinary replacements and twenty-five millions for common-stock dividends. These two sums—applied to strengthen the common stock—would have increased the pay of every employee, from the president down, by 25 per cent.

That common stock issue was an economic crime. It puts a perpetual handicap upon higher pay, shorter hours, and lower prices; but any corporation is still at liberty to issue all the common stock it pleases—if not in one State, then in another. Here is a very tangible trust evil that legislation can easily cure. Why does not legislation go about it? The wrong is patent; the remedy at hand. We should rejoice to see one practical step taken by the Federal Government on this trust subject.

Mr. THOMAS. They graphically illustrate the well-worn and well-known truth that wages and labor cost are as distinct and different as the hills from the valley. The highest wages are frequently the attendants of the lowest labor cost, the most signal and successful example of which is furnished by the Ford Motor Co., which pays the highest wages and sells the cheapest product of its kind to be found in the markets of the world.

The Senator from Utah has of late been harping frequently upon what he is pleased to term "the Democratic deficit." It is true, Mr. President, that the dislocation of our revenues by the rude hand of war, coupled with our enormous increases of expenditures almost entirely due to the new program of preparedness, has made the financial problems of this administration a matter of constantly increasing difficulty. We will meet the situation, nevertheless, as we have met others equally embarrassing and difficult since our accession to power. But, Mr. President, the charge that Democratic administration means deficiencies in revenues, and that Republican administration means the contrary, is like many other things asserted here of late—entirely without foundation. At the end of Mr. Cleveland's first administration the Treasury was swollen with an enormous surplus. In February of 1893, President Harrison found himself at the close of his administration facing a very serious deficiency. Bonds covering this deficit were ordered and had been lithographed, when the administration decided not to use them, but to pass the situation on to Mr. Cleveland again. The financial difficulties of his administration are fresh in the public recollection. These instances are sufficient to refute the reflection cast upon Democratic financial administration by Senators who can not plead ignorance of them.

The Senator from Pennsylvania has on several occasions charged that more than 30,000 names have been added to the roll of Government employees under the administration of President Wilson. The statement has been refuted by the official declaration of the Civil Service Commission, which declares that its jurisdiction has been enlarged so as to include about that number of added positions, and that the real increase in the number of employees so named has been negligible. This refutation, however, does not concern the Senator, who, having heard the statement, persists in its repetition. Like his distinguished leader, he is looking for an issue, and seems content to find it in petty criticisms having no excuse or foundation in actual fact. I might retort by reminding the Senator that during the administration of President Roosevelt the Federal civil service was almost doubled in number. This, however, would be regarded by the Senator as an evidence of honest Republican activity. It is only the employment of Democrats which excites his resentment or arouses his wrath. Like Mr. Hughes, he would have none but Republicans on guard, since to remove one or even to fill a new position with a man of another political faith is conclusive evidence of governmental incapacity.

I have been both interested and amused by Republican criticisms of the President. The Senator from Iowa denounces him for dictating legislation. The Senator from Pennsylvania echoes the denunciation. He goes further and criticizes the President for coming to the Capitol at all. He prefers the old way of going to the White House when ordered. Other Senators declare that the leadership of the President is the leadership of a dictator; that Senators have surrendered to his domination and carry out his orders with dispatch. The junior Senator from New York, on the other hand, seriously criticizes us for not regarding the President's wishes concerning income and revenue. He declares that we have refused to adopt a single item of revenue resource to which the President directed our attention in his annual message in December last. And the Republican candidate for President declares Mr. Wilson to be inapt and vacillating. Between these varying and wholly irreconcilable criticisms, each may take his choice. The fact remains that the President in the exercise of his undoubted prerogative has exerted a proper and a wholesome influence in legislation; that his leadership has been respected and recognized, and that in all that he has requested he has been in accord with Democratic sentiment and Democratic purpose.

Just here let me ask our Republican friends a few questions. They assert with apparent confidence their abiding conviction of Republican success in November. It is fair to assume that in such an event they will formulate a legislative policy in harmony with their oft-repeated announcements. I venture, therefore, to ask the following questions:

If the Republican Party is restored to power, will it reenact the Payne-Aldrich bill or its equivalent? To this it is but fair to request a categorical answer. Will it abandon all rivers and harbors legislation? You have denounced the Democracy for the enactment of the recent rivers and harbors bill, albeit the bill received the active support of many Republican Senators, while the legislation itself originated with Republican administrations. Will you repeal the income and inheritance tax laws or modify them; and if so, in what direction? Will you abandon the policy of flood control, a policy which you expressly declared for in 1912? Will you repeal the seamen's bill, which you have denounced as destructive of the remaining vestiges of our merchant marine, although you indorsed just such a bill in your platform of 1912? In view of your criticisms during the past three weeks, these questions are pertinent and demand immediate consideration.

Mr. President, we have been reproached with abandoning all, or the greater part, of our convictions regarding tariff laws because we advocate and stand for a tariff commission. It has been said that our demand for such legislation recognizes the soundness of the Republican doctrine of protection, and accepts that doctrine to the exclusion of our convictions in behalf of "tariff for revenue only." This is strange doctrine coming from Republican lips. It is quite true that the suggestion of a tariff commission is unwelcome to some Democrats, as it was a few years ago unwelcome to practically all Republicans. And it is also true that many Republicans and some Democrats now apparently supporting the proposition are at heart thoroughly unfavorable to it. President Taft's suggestion of a tariff commission in 1909 hardly received respectful consideration. Mr. Aldrich disdained it, the interests which he represented rejected it, and none was heard to do it honor. The Tariff Board of 1911 was wrung from the reluctant hands of the Republican Party by the demands of the people, voiced through the action of Democrats and Progressive Republicans. It was opposed and derided on this floor in 1911 by Republican Senators like Hale and Heyburn, and a vote upon the measure was forced by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], who declined to consent to a vote on the Lorimer resolution until a time was fixed for voting upon the bill for creating the Tariff Board. The regular and stand-pat Republicans did not want it then, and do not want the commission now. They take it because they are forced to, and try to make a little capital out of the fact by falsely accusing Democrats of abandoning their principles by advocating it.

Mr. President, Democracy lives and learns, for it is progressive. I became an advocate of a tariff commission as a result of my experiences on the Finance Committee in 1913. In my consideration of the tariff measure of that year, I derived more substantial benefit from the incomplete and fragmentary report of the Tariff Board of 1911 than was available from any other source. I became convinced that a body of well-informed men actuated by no partisan motive and devoted to an examination in all its phases of the intricate problem of impost duties could do more to lift the subject of the tariff from the low level of politics and relieve the people of the country from the incubus of political controversy and recrimination than all the statutes we might enact upon the subject in half a score of years. I have been advocating a tariff commission ever since, and shall not be content until one is provided for and appointed. In this connection, I beg to read into the RECORD a letter from the late James J. Hill, which so fully represents my views that I submit the subject without further comment:

THE MOST IMPORTANT ECONOMIC ISSUE BEFORE THE COUNTRY TO-DAY.

[A letter from Mr. James J. Hill.]

ST. PAUL, MINN., October 1, 1915.

To the EDITOR OF THE ECONOMIC WORLD.

SIR: I have received your letter requesting my views on the importance of a nonpartisan tariff commission. It must be evident to every thoughtful person that this is the only wise, just, and permanent solution of the tariff question.

The same persons who were certain, a little more than a year ago, that the tariff had been adjusted for many years to come declare now that it must be changed to suit changed conditions. Revenue needs call for it. New industries have been established here in fields that we had not before entered. Old industries find themselves in new situations. And while the war has magnified these changes so as to make them visible to all, they are only enlarged copies of changes that take place every year, in peace, through the variation of conditions of production and exchange.

Only a permanent body can cover needs continually arising, and only a body of experts can know what treatment they require. It is fairly certain that, in the profound and world-wide changes in commercial and financial intercourse which will follow the close of this war, all tariffs must be remade. Certainly our greatest, possibly our last, opportunity to fit our tariff scientifically to our business needs will be lost if it should continue to be the stock in trade of politicians and the sport of selfish interests. The creation of such a tariff commission as has been recommended, with power to act, is by far the most important matter with which the country has now to deal.

Yours, very truly,

JAMES J. HILL.

[The tariff commission proposal referred to by Mr. Hill in his characteristically forceful style in the foregoing letter is that outlined in a pamphlet issued by the Tariff Commission League, First National Bank Building, Chicago. We understand these pamphlets are obtainable upon application to the headquarters of the league.—Editor.]

Mr. President, the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress is about to close. It has been a long and a most important one. For what it has accomplished, the Democratic Party is entirely responsible. We submit its splendid record to the people with full confidence that it will receive their approval, and that the Democracy under the leadership of its great President will be given by an overwhelming majority a renewed lease of power.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am under obligations to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] for yielding to me a few minutes of time before he concludes his interesting speech, which he commenced some hours ago.

The most extraordinary and misleading speech of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] will go to the country for what it is worth.

The people in the factories and on the farms are thinking to-day as they never thought before. They know that our increased exports are largely due to the existence of the horrible war in Europe. Everybody knows that we have been exporting enormous quantities of war munitions, and, in addition to this, the export trade of many of the European countries has been entirely suspended, thus opening new markets to the people of the United States, which will terminate when the foreign war closes.

The people know all this, and Democratic oratory can not change that fact.

Mr. President, Thomas O. Marvin, secretary of the Home Market Club, has contributed some suggestions about the Democratic revenue policy which are worthy of careful thought. Among other things, Mr. Marvin truly says that in his first inaugural address Thomas Jefferson referred to "the throes and convulsions of the ancient world" and declared that "it was not wonderful that the agitation of the billows should reach even this distant and powerful shore." Among the essential principles of our Government he mentioned "peace, commerce, and honest friendship with all nations, entangling alliances with none."

These words were spoken on March 4, 1801, and nine months later, in his first message to Congress, December 5, 1801, although the foreign situation still interfered with the revenues of the Government, President Jefferson assured Congress that "there is reasonable ground for confidence that we may now safely dispense with all the internal taxes, and that the remaining sources of revenue will be sufficient to provide for the support of the Government, to pay the interest of the public debts, and to discharge the principal within shorter periods than the laws or the general expectation had contemplated."

The principles of Federal taxation laid down by Jefferson in his inaugural address and messages to Congress are in sharp contrast with the methods employed to-day by the party in power. Jefferson looked forward with confidence to dispensing with all internal taxes. His followers, now in control of the Government, recklessly increase internal taxation beyond anything ever known in this country.

Jefferson believed that the revenues of the Government should be raised by customs duties. Many of his followers to-day would abolish the customhouses, and the Democratic Party, in the face of extraordinary need of revenue, keeps on the statute books the lowest tariff law in a hundred years. It has gone as far as it dares in suppressing customs duties, a policy which, as Jefferson said, "gives advantage to foreign over domestic manufacturers."

Other countries are increasing their tariff duties, affording protection to their industries, and making foreigners pay for the privilege of doing business in their markets, even Great Britain contemplating resorting to a tariff law at the close of the war. But our Congress, as at present constituted, refuses to provide adequate duties to protect the industrial interests of the United States.

Mr. Marvin wisely suggests that with the world facing conditions unprecedented in history, with the keenest struggle of all time approaching for control of the world markets, our Congress leaves unamended the lowest tariff law which we have had in a century and calmly invites foreign manufacturers to exploit our markets when the war ends.

In an editorial on "Preparedness against the next war," the New York Herald, August 24, 1916, said:

The next war will be commercial, brought on by the struggles of nations now belligerents to rehabilitate themselves industrially. Unless we have an adequate protective tariff, American manufacturers and American labor will be its victims. The overshadowing issue of the present campaign is, Which candidate and which political party are best equipped to meet this great business problem? At bottom it is a tariff issue.

Mr. President, that declaration from so influential and widely circuated a newspaper as the New York Herald, not Republican in politics, ought to engage the attention of every thinking man in the United States.

Beyond a question the next war, so far as the United States is concerned, will be an industrial war, and unless we are prepared to protect our own markets, the best markets in all the world, against the aggressions of foreign nations we will suffer consequences too serious to be calmly contemplated at this moment.

Jefferson declared that agriculture, manufactures, commerce, and navigation are the four pillars of our prosperity, and he said to Congress in 1801:

If in the course of your observations or inquiries they should appear to need any aid within the limits of our constitutional powers, your sense of their importance is a sufficient assurance they will occupy your attention.

It is a pity that some men with Jefferson's influence in his party did not say to the Democratic Congress of 1916:

Agriculture, manufactures, commerce, and shipping are the pillars of our prosperity; study their needs, inquire into all of the conditions confronting them, and if they need aid back them with all of the power of the Government.

The importance of these "pillars of our prosperity" has made no impression upon the mind of the President and upon the minds of those who control our Congress, and not even the upheavals of the world's greatest war draw from Congress any sign that affords assurance that they even will occupy its attention so long as the present party control continues.

Instead of shaping the revenue policy of the Government along the lines recommended by the founders of their party, the present Democratic Congress has ignored the revenue opportunities in a wise increase of customs duties, but has resorted to an unprecedented increase in internal taxation, a method of taxation which Jefferson said 115 years ago might wisely be dispensed with.

The condition of the Treasury, the extravagance of appropriations, and the revenue needs of the Government make it impossible to carry out in full the Jeffersonian theory, but his party has drifted far from his teachings when it so completely ignores the raising of revenue by import duties as it does in the bill we are now considering and resorts almost entirely to internal and direct taxation.

To tax wealth its fair share of the benefits of Government is just and equitable, but to leave the producers of wealth, in factory or on farm, unprotected from destructive competition is neither just nor equitable.

It is from productive enterprises that capital is accumulated. Capital is necessary to the development of agriculture, manufacturing, and commerce. It is from the profits of well-conducted enterprises that new enterprises spring, enlargements of plants are made, and increased employment is provided for labor. Confiscatory taxes on production strike a death blow at national development and progress. Such taxes if imposed and continued will mark the end of the accumulation of American capital. They will mark the end of business expansion and rob labor of its opportunity of gainful employment. No proposition so un-American in its spirit, so destructive in character, so damaging to American business prospects, and so dangerous to national welfare has ever before been presented to the Congress of the United States.

Senators, this is not an ordinary revenue measure; it is a program of practical confiscation and a notice to American business men that profitable enterprise is not to be permitted if those in control of the Government can prevent it. If the Democratic revenue policy becomes an established fact in this country, it means the destruction of the Republican protective policy and the opening of our splendid markets to all the nations of the world, which will be, to again quote Jefferson, "a strange speculation." That condition may be imposed upon the country by the present Democratic administration, but if so it will not long continue after the Republican Party resumes control of the affairs of the Government after the 4th day of March next.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to answer in detail, and in fact I did not rise to answer at all, the statement of the chairman of the Finance Committee made this afternoon. It will be sufficient for me to refer to the fact that in the preliminary part of his statement he rolled with the usual gusto under his tongue the epithets "special interests" and "predatory interests" and other time-worn and threadbare campaign phrases as applied to Republican economic policies.

I recall, Mr. President, the spectacle presented in the Senate the other day when the paragraph relating to the taxes on munitions was under consideration. When the paragraph imposing a tax upon the component parts entering into munitions was reached we beheld the remarkable spectacle of the Senators representing the special, shall I say predatory interests, copper interests and the cotton interests of a number of States in the South and the lead and zinc and lumber interests scurrying to cover, having notified the Democratic caucus that they would rather defeat the bill than have the burdens of direct taxation imposed upon the special interests which they represented in this body.

Cotton particularly, a sensitive matter with many of my colleagues in this Chamber whom I esteem most highly, entering as it does to the amount of 68 per cent into every 100 pounds of explosives manufactured and sent to the belligerent nations in order that they may destroy each other, was too sacred a subject for the sacrilegious hand of the tax gatherer to touch.

So I had hoped that we had heard for the last time this cheap invective applied to Republican policies and Republican leadership suggesting identity with so-called special interests, a myth conjured up during the campaign and unworthy of employment or reference in this Chamber in a serious discussion of a revenue measure, particularly after the impressive spectacle which we all witnessed and to which I have referred.

I might almost make another reference, before leaving this branch of the subject, to that impressive warfare which we witnessed between California, New Jersey, and Ohio, in which California tried to put it over on New Jersey, to use a slang term, when the wine tax became solely and exclusively an undisguised controversy in the Senate regarding the special interests of those localities.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. PENROSE. I do.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not know whether the Senator is serious or not, but I want to explain to him that the interest in the State of New Jersey is so slight that I would be ashamed to insist upon any particular reference to it. What I was trying to do was to do justice to the industry no matter where it was located.

Mr. PENROSE. I will absolve the Senator from any but the loftiest motives in his course, but I have no particular reference to him, and I am rather surprised that he should be so sensitive as to think that I had him at all in mind, although I can not help contemplating his distinguished appearance here in the Chamber extending to me the compliment of listening to the remarks which I am making. But clearly it was a controversy between the eastern wine growers and those on the Pacific slope, a controversy which to my mind was not calculated to elevate our opinion of human nature as exhibiting the qualities of fair dealing and equality and uniform treatment, particularly when we came to consider the details of the wine paragraph in the House bill and as it was amended in the Senate and the speeches made upon both sides of the controversy.

Then, further, Mr. President, the chairman of the committee proceeded with those equally time-honored and somewhat worn arguments—which, I confess, I am tired of hearing and tired of replying to or even noticing—in expatiating upon the remarkable prosperity which the country has enjoyed during the last three years. How anyone in his senses can take any satisfaction out of a prosperity which is born of a war condition in Europe is almost incredible to me, unless it is an assumption of courage, a whistling in the dark, or a declamation for campaign purposes, because we all know that the country was on the verge of a great industrial crisis prior to the war in Europe, despite what figures you give. We know that it was a fact staring us in the face and, in the opinion of every sane man, conditions still more disastrous will confront us when the war in Europe draws to a close. If the Democratic Party can find consolation out of the innumerable figures showing exports and imports and industrial output during the war in Europe, I will leave them to the happy hallucinations of their fancy, knowing that when the awakening comes it will indeed be a rude one and will terminate their control of governmental affairs in the United States for another generation.

What about the munitions taxes? Mr. President, of course they will go harmoniously on so long as the taxes are only imposed upon a few of the higher manufactured products, which are chiefly from Bridgeport or Philadelphia. After carefully exempting cotton, copper, zinc, lead, and lumber——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania has omitted steel billets—shrapnel steel. They also were included in the exemption.

Mr. PENROSE. I would just as soon have steel billets taxed as any of the other articles that are taxed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I mentioned steel billets as one of our great southern industries, in Alabama.

Mr. PENROSE. Yes. I will put that in. I forgot about that. I have no doubt the Senator from Georgia carefully looked after steel billets also. He is an attentive and diligent Senator.

The munitions tax, Mr. President, is sectional; it is ununiform; it is of doubtful validity; it is of questionable legality. In my opinion, it will fail to produce anywhere near the amount of revenue expected, and it is objectionable in many other ways. It has no analogy to the munition tax imposed by foreign Governments during the present war, because such munitions were sold to the Governments themselves, while our munitions are sold to belligerant nations abroad. It might be claimed to be an evasion, therefore, of the constitutional inhibition against taxing exports if it is to be considered from the point of view of taxation on such exports; but if it is not a tax on exports, and is a direct tax similar to other direct taxes now embodied in the law, then it clearly constitutes a double tax, since the manufacturing corporations involved in the munitions tax already pay one Federal tax on earnings and will continue to pay one Federal tax upon increased earnings due to whatever profit they may make out of munitions. If we are disposed to go further into the theoretical aspects of the munitions tax, it might be argued with some plausibility that such a tax will affect our neutrality. A neutral Government does not protect trade in contraband. It can not engage in it itself. It is merely relieved of the expense of suppressing it. If the Government tried to turn it into a source of revenue it might well be argued that the Government might lay itself open to a charge of such interest in the business as to make it a virtual partner. No candid person can deny that when the Government supplies its revenues from munitions sold to belligerent nations it becomes a partner in a traffic, which many Americans consider nefarious and objectionable, and even of a character that ought to be entirely prohibited.

The question naturally arises as to the definition of "munitions." We find "munitions" defined in the dictionary as follows:

> Whatever materials are used in war for defense or for annoying an enemy; ammunition; also stores and provisions; military stores of all kinds; hence necessary equipment or provision in general. * * *

This definition would seem to open the field to a much wider scope of taxation than is recognized in the pending bill, because that measure merely taxes gunpowder and certain high grades of manufactured arms and ordnance. The "munitions" referred to in the bill constitute but a small percentage of the total exports for use by the belligerent nations. The official reports show that there have been more than $3,000,000,000 of munitions of war, as defined to be material and provisions used in war, exported from this country direct to the war zone in the last two years. Why was not this enormous sum of money levied upon, instead of the very much smaller sum of several hundred million dollars' worth of the munitions described in the bill? Why are not these $3,000,000,000 worth of exports levied upon to procure ample revenue for the needs of the Government? They are accessible and available.

In these exports are included canned meats, army rations of various kinds, shoes, stockings, harness, saddles, blankets, kerosene, gasoline, acids, alcohol, locomotives, parts of submarines, range finders, stamped metal military equipment, swords, bayonets, bromine and other military gases, barbed wire and other products of iron and steel. Horses to the value of $128,872,000 and mules to the value of $31,186,000 have been exported for military purposes from the State of Missouri and from other States in the southwestern part of the country.

There need not be any guesswork about the articles which have been furnished the belligerent nations, and which have been just as necessary to the conduct of the war as ordnance and gunpowder made in New Jersey and Pennsylvania, even if they do come from the sacred borders of Missouri and other Western States.

Through a dispatch dated April 20, 1916, from the American consul general in London, there has been transmitted the British contraband list. I believe that since this was issued, other contraband lists have been issued in the various White Books and other diplomatic publications of our own State Department; but I need not burden the RECORD or detain the Senate any further than to call the attention of the Senate to the dispatch dated April 20, transmitting the British contraband list as of that date. It comprises the articles which have been declared to be absolute contraband, as well as those which have been declared to be conditional contraband. Among the articles found on the list are: Animals, saddle, draft or pack, suitable, or which may become suitable, for use in war; cotton, raw; linters, cotton waste, cotton yarns, cotton piece goods, and other cotton products capable of being used in the manufacture of explosives; clothing and fabrics for clothing suitable for use in war; foodstuffs; forage and feeding stuffs for animals; harness and saddlery; hides of cattle and horses; leather belting, hydraulic leather, and pump leather, and all leather undressed or dressed, suitable for saddlery, harness, military boots, or military clothing; military wagons and their component parts; vehicles of all kinds, other than motor vehicles, available for use in war, and their component parts; together with a long list of other articles, containing a large number of chemical products used in war. All of these articles are just as essential—mules, horses, clothing, and cotton—as are the rifles and the shrapnel made in Connecticut or in Pennsylvania.

I have here, Mr. President, the telegram of the consul general of the United States at London, dated June 29, 1916, calling attention to a proclamation dated June 27, supplementing previous contraband proclamations and putting a few minor articles on the list in addition to the British contraband list of date April 20, 1916, which I ask to have printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to will be found in the appendix of Mr. PENROSE'S remarks.

Mr. PENROSE. That contraband list, Mr. President, is a list of the articles which should have been subject to taxation had there been a fair spirit to tax everything furnished the belligerents and not to select a few articles that did not worry anybody in particular except in a few Republican States and put the burden upon them.

I know that there is little or no restriction on the part of Congress in any of the provisions of the Constitution regarding its power of taxation. That taxation should be uniform, to the best of my recollection, is about the only restriction; yet, Mr. President, whatever interpretation the courts have put or may put upon the word "uniformity," it is certainly neither geographical uniformity nor uniformity of any other kind or from any other point of view, when the munitions and contraband of certain sections of the country are singled out for taxation, while the vast bulk in money value of the material furnished to the belligerents is left untouched as in the pending revenue measure.

The tax, I suppose, is levied on munitions on the theory that enormous profits are being made, and it is only upon such an assumption that we can find a pretense to justification for the very remarkable way in which the tax is levied in the House bill on gross receipts.

Mr. President, was there ever a greater evidence of incapacity, was there ever a greater display of ignorance of the fundamental principles and technicalities of taxation, than when the House passed a bill levying a tax, a very heavy tax, upon the gross receipts of those engaged in the production of very highly manufactured articles? Why the mere fact, Mr. President, that such a monstrous effort was made is proof conclusive of the incompetence of the original framers of this measure.

A tax on gross receipts finds some precedent in legislation, but it has generally been levied upon a raw material or upon an article where there was an ample margin between the tax and the well-known profits, but here is a tax, it is true, amended in the Senate, but as proposed by the House, representing the economic and fiscal wisdom of the Democratic leadership in that body, in the Treasury Department, and in the Executive Mansion, levied upon the gross receipts of a business which has, as a matter of fact, proven hazardous and in some cases unprofitable; in fact, I think it is no exaggeration to say that a large majority of the manufacturers who went into the munitions business have not fared well; many have gone into bankruptcy, many more have made no money at all, some have made a fair profit, and, of course, a very few have made good profits. Taking it all in all, it is only stating the truth to say that there has been comparatively a small amount of money made by the manufacture of munitions of war in this country.

When American capitalists and manufacturers went into the business, the impression widely prevailed throughout the country that the profits were likely to be enormous. Experience has shown, Mr. President, beyond any question, that the contrary has been the fact. Its benefits have been mostly in the way of giving workingmen large wages and keeping plants running day and night, and promoting industrial prosperity, which, had it not been for the war in Europe, would not have existed in this country. When the manufacturers went into the business they, of course, had no warning or intimation that they were to have to pay to the Government a tax on contracts which were made without any consideration of such a possibility. Moreover, wages have gone up to an extraordinary degree and to an extent never contemplated. I know of concerns, in Pennsylvania, Mr. President, by way of illustration, which are paying $10 and $11 a day for labor of the most ordinary character, labor which under normal conditions would get $1.50 or $2 a day or $3 a day at the most; but, in order to fulfill their contracts, they had to have the labor, and so they are paying these enormous wages for labor, as I have said, of the most ordinary kind and of no especial skill, in the making of munitions.

Materials have also increased in price, and the inspection of foreign governments has become more rigid with every month, and particularly as the ability to produce munitions in the several belligerent countries has developed and there is much less need to rely upon the American manufacturer.

When the war broke out, many of the belligerent nations, or all of them perhaps, with the exception of Germany, were largely unprepared. They had to have munitions from the American manufacturer at any price and under any conditions. The consequence was that they were anxious to take from us, with a very lax inspection, arms and ordnance hastily turned out by unskilled workmen at any price and in any shape. Those conditions now are entirely changed. The belligerent nations have established their munitions plants, mobilized their industrial establishments, and are making their munitions for themselves, and many of the contracts which they have made in the United States they would only be too glad to get an excuse to get out of. However, inspections which were never thought of six months or a year ago, are now imposed with a heavy hand on all these munitions plants. These manufacturers, therefore, have gone into a hazardous business, in which they have either lost money—and I say this advisedly, Mr. President, and in all seriousness—or only made a reasonable profit, with certain exceptions, but with two very beneficial results to the country at this time: They have given employment at good wages to thousands of workingmen and they have established in the United States a series of plants and developed many thousand skilled workers in the making of munitions which will be of invaluable assistance to the Government in connection with the preparedness program.

I say, without exaggeration, Mr. President, that the facts I have stated above will come out clearly when the officials of the Internal-Revenue Bureau come to ascertain the net earnings or profits of these munition industries; and I have no hesitation in making the statement, and no apprehension whatever but that I will be vindicated in it, that the tax will be vastly disappointing in the amount received, and will rapidly disappear as the manufacture of munitions gradually subsides and vanishes in this country, as it will within the next six months or a year.

Mr. President, I shall not refer at length to the special taxes, including stamp taxes, that are carried in this bill, many of them oppressive and unpopular, in the existing so-called emergency-tax law which the pending revenue bill was originally supposed to have repealed entirely.

In view of the unbridled extravagance which has been previously referred to, in which millions of dollars have been squandered for all kinds of ill-advised and unnecessary projects, it would seem inevitable that when the people realize for what questionable purposes they are being subjected to these direct taxes their resentment will be intensified. For the Federal Government, making appropriations for enormous amounts, actually to go into the bowling alley or the billiard room, places of amusement for the plain people, and levy its tribute of $5 on each alley and $5 on each table, seems to me to be barbarous, unjust, and unnecessary.

Another illustration of the almost incredible crudity which seems to have pervaded the mental processes of the framers of the bill in the House is shown in the tax on theaters, amusement and concert halls. This bill as it came from the House actually places a direct tax on the gross receipts of theaters in cities over a certain population. It is difficult to imagine the lack of knowledge of practical affairs or experience with social conditions throughout the country which must prevail when a tax is proposed on the gross receipts of a theater. In the first place, these theaters, even where it is a direct tax of $25 or $50 or $100, are already burdened by taxes. City, State, and county all tax moving-picture shows and the little theaters in many of the States of the country. I know that in Pennsylvania the tax is already so burdensome that every year numbers of little moving-picture shows, furnishing occupation to the owner, his wife, and his children, and a fair living to them from it, maintained in a small town and furnishing educational features to the people of the village, have been shut up as the result of Pennsylvania direct taxes; and what will happen when the heavy hand of the Federal Government is imposed on them in addition?

As I was saying, Mr President, it does seem incredible that the House should ever have contemplated making this a tax on gross receipts. This method of taxing gross receipts is a new theory in financial legislation. If followed out, and if the Senate had not amended the bill, it would prove a genuine hardship to every theater manager in the country. Many of these theaters in Pennsylvania, I know, are run at a loss. The buildings can not be used for any other purpose than that of a theatrical entertainment. A tax so large as the last emergency tax, as I have said, closed motion-picture theaters in every State in the Union.

I shall only refer in passing to the taxes on tobacco and wines and liquors. These will produce but a small amount of additional revenue in a bill which will be totally unequal to raising sufficient revenue to meet the inevitable deficit in the public revenues.

It can be shown that money for sufficient legitimate preparedness in excess of ordinary appropriations could have been raised and saved without resort to these unnecessary taxes imposed in the pending bill. As large as are these proposed taxes, estimated at $197,000,000 in the House bill and, I believe, $205,000,000 in the bill as amended by the Senate for the fiscal year, and some $250,000,000 when the law is in full operation, this amount will be inadequate to meet the additional demands on the Treasury on account of appropriations for ill-advised projects, concerning which, at least, there was no urgency, and for the appropriations for preparedness, even though $125,000,000 should be deducted for the expenses of the Army in Mexico on account of the proposed bond issue.

In stating the amount expected to be produced by the bill I have taken the estimates of the Ways and Means Committee. I do not, however, agree with that estimate. In my opinion, it is extremely doubtful whether the estimated amount that this bill will raise will be realized. The tax from munitions is overestimated. Already establishments turning out munitions have announced fulfillment of all orders and no new contracts; hence this source of taxation is apt to diminish henceforth. Moreover, the war in Europe necessarily will come to a close sooner or later, and then this source of revenue will disappear entirely. If the tax is changed from a percentage on gross receipts to a percentage on net profits, the tax will be disappointing to the framers of the bill to a very much larger extent, because as soon as the effort to ascertain net profits of munition manufacturers is made the remarkable facts will be disclosed, doubtless to the astonishment of many persons, that many of these munition manufacturers have made very small profits, and some have worked at a loss, as I have already explained

Additional taxes on wines, experience has shown, will not bring a proportionate increase of revenues, because it will diminish the consumption of these beverages. There is a point at which whisky or wine can be taxed which is the point of highest revenue. A higher rate simply encourages illegal distilling and other violations of the law or reduces the consumption of articles of luxury like wines.

Any estimate on the death dues must necessarily be problematical. Taking it all in all, the estimates will have to stand the test of the present fiscal year.

It is difficult to ascertain the actual condition of the Treasury at the close of the fiscal year on the 30th of June last. No one outside of the confidence of the Secretary of the Treasury can become fully advised as to the financial situation. The House Committee on Ways and Means, in its report on this bill, accepted the figures of the Treasury Department statement that the net balance in the general fund was $177,000,000; the committee estimates that $197,000,000 additional revenue will be derived from the pending bill. They then propose to deduct $69,922,000 from the general fund referred to, which, added to the amount of additional revenue estimated under the pending bill, would make up a total of $266,922,000, which the committee estimates as the additional receipts required for the fiscal year 1917.

Of course, in giving these figures as I have done and in giving those which I now intend to give, they must be subject to modification within narrow margins on account of changes in appropriation bills and changes made here in the Senate in the revenue bill; but the figures are approximately correct, and it was impossible for me to change them from day to day as the Senate progressed in amending and developing the revenue bill. The final result will be conservative and far within the limitations which I will show in conclusion will be placed upon the deficit which will exist at the end of the present fiscal year in the United States Treasury.

The sum to which I have just referred—that is, the amount raised under the pending revenue law—and the amount taken from the general fund will be inadequate, as it will be seen upon a careful analysis of the available figures of the appropriations already made and of the estimated appropriations yet to be made at this session. In his statement to the House on June 28, 1916, the chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations stated that the grand total of appropriations for the fiscal year 1917, authorized up to that time, were $1,499,330,479.32. This amount is $384,393,467.30 in excess of the total appropriations for the fiscal year 1916, and, of course, since this estimate was made by the chairman of the committee appropriations have been considerably increased. There must be added $148,295,654 in the Army appropriation bill as reported to the Senate, $45,857,588 in the Navy bill passed by the Senate, and the amount to be carried in the general deficiency bill, estimated to be $17,000,000. These several amounts, for the Army and Navy and general deficiency, total $211,153,242.81, and, added to the total appropriations already made in excess of those of the fiscal year 1916, make a grand total of $595,546,710.11, or a total of appropriations for the fiscal year 1917 of $1,710,483,722.13. From this must be deducted the appropriations for the Postal Service, amounting to $322,206,579, leaving a net total of $1,388,277,143.13, or $273,340,131.11 in excess of the appropriations of 1916. The Post Office Department estimated that the postal revenues for the fiscal year 1917 would probably amount to $316,000,000, and the expenditure for the Postal Service $324,000,000. According to these figures, there will therefore be a deficit in the postal revenue to the extent of $8,000,000, and as the appropriations for 1917 for the Postal Service are $322,000,000, the deficit chargeable to the General Treasury will be about $6,000,000, which amount should be added to the obligations to be made during the fiscal year 1917, bringing the total excess appropriations for 1917 over 1916 to $279,340,131.11.

To the preparedness program may be charged $228,624,814.23 for the Army, $19,000,000 for fortifications and other works of defense, $166,164,978.67 for increase in the Navy, and $39,974,543.53 for deficiency appropriations for various military purposes, a total of $453,764,136.53. Of this amount it is proposed, doubtless after election, to finance $125,000,000 by bonds, estimated to be the amount made necessary by the Mexican performance. Deducting this $125,000,000 leaves $328,764,136.53 as the net sum of the appropriations for preparedness alone.

For purely domestic and peaceful objects the appropriations for 1917 in excess of 1916, estimated from available figures, is $45,000,000 carried in the regular annual appropriation bills, to which should be added $20,000,000 for the construction of a nitrate plant, $6,000,000 of the $85,000,000 authorized for good roads, $15,100,000 authorized by the land-bank bill, and $50,100,000 authorized in the shipping bill, a grand total of $136,200,000.

And in addition to these vast sums of money actually appropriated for the fiscal year 1917, contracts have been authorized, or are likely to be authorized, having passed the House, involving the stupendous total of $632,643,977, divided as follows: Navy increase, $480,192,027; in sundry civil act for contract obligations, $1,827,000; fortifications, $14,300,000; river and harbor act, $2,724,950; for flood control, $50,600,000; and for good roads, $79,000,000.

It is true that some of these authorizations will not be called upon during this fiscal year, but I am justified in citing them because they illustrate the reckless, lavish expenditure and the rapid gait at which the present Congress has traveled in the way of appropriating for expenses in the future, and this revenue bill will utterly fail upon its very face to meet the enormous requirements of appropriations and disbursements and authorizations for the future.

It will be recalled these authorizations binding the Government to future appropriations, together with the actual appropriations for 1917, aggregate the fabulous grand total of $2,347,127,699, authorized and appropriated during the present Congress.

And in this estimate of moneys actually appropriated from the Public Treasury or authorized by Congress, and to which the Government is committed, might be added such items, which up to within a few years would have been considered large, yet now seem insignificant, as are likely to be added during the present fiscal year to the vast sum already mentioned. I refer to the public-building bill carrying $35,000,000, the item of some $30,000,000 for which the Government will be liable during the present fiscal year should the Supreme Court declare the refund provision illegal, possibly $25,000,000 for the Danish Islands together with innumerable and constantly appearing items disbursed with a lavish hand, such as high-salaried commissions for different purposes—a million here and a million there, all adding to the burdens of the people, the impoverishment of the Treasury, and the certainty of a growing deficit in the revenues.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. PENROSE. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish merely to suggest that whereas we hear a great deal about a public-building bill it ought to be understood and known that this is the first public-building bill that has been introduced since 1913. The last public-building act passed in March, 1913, under the Republican administration. During this administration a public-building bill has never been proposed until the present bill was introduced in the House.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I am not advised as to the merits of the measure. When the Republicans passed a public-building bill they were engaged in constructing the Panama Canal or in completing it out of the current revenues, and they were not talking about issuing bonds. They had an ample surplus in the Treasury and the country was prosperous.

In my opinion—I say it in all sincerity and without any exaggeration—the Federal Treasury is now bankrupt. I am not discussing the merits of these different measures; but I do maintain that we should have a little regard for the condition of the Treasury when we throw money right and left as we have been doing for the last two years. When I refer to their merits I should like to qualify my statement by adding that, in my opinion, many of them are of very doubtful utility. We have scores of commissions, and appropriations for floods and for other temporary matters, which I have no doubt aggregate considerably over $10,000,000, in addition to the larger and more permanent projects which I have already mentioned.

I have already stated that the estimate of the chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations on June 28 that the grand total appropriations for the fiscal year, authorized up to that time, for 1917, was $1,499,330,479.32. How rapidly the tide of lavish disbursements is rising, however, is illustrated by the fact that a few days afterwards, on July 5, 1916, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means estimated the total appropriations for the fiscal year 1917 would not exceed $1,579,000,000. This total includes, in the report aforesaid, $125,000,000 to meet the extraordinary expenses or disbursements occasioned by the "Mexican situation," as it is termed, caused by the mobilizing of the National Guard and the operation of troops along the Mexican border and in Mexico. In the opinion of the committee this and any other appropriations that may be necessary to meet the abnormal and extraordinary expenses which may be incurred on such account should be financed by bond issues. Thus the door is literally opened for bond issues to an unlimited extent, furnishing very evidently unlimited opportunities to cover up deficits in the revenues, notwithstanding the fact that the United States is in profound peace and the excuse of mobilizing the National Guard is made as a reason for bond issues, furnishing a convenient method for the jugglery of Treasury accounts and for peculiar bookkeeping to cover inadequate revenue.

The Ways and Means Committee in its report on the revenue bill estimated the excess disbursements over receipts for the fiscal year 1917 as $266,922,000, to be met by revenues under this bill of $197,000,000, the balance, $69,922,000, to be taken out of the general fund. This estimate falls short of the actual requirements for preparedness alone of $61,842,126.53, to say nothing of the revenue that must be raised to meet increased obligations for domestic purposes, amounting to $136,200,000. The Ways and Means Committee also estimated that the total appropriations for the fiscal year 1917 would be $1,579,000,000, from which the committee deducted $125,000,000 to be financed by bonds; $60,727,000 as the sinking-fund requirement; postal appropriations of $324,723,000, and 5 per cent as the balance estimated that will be unexpended—$53,428,000—or a total of $1,015,122,000 for which it is necessary to provide revenue. They estimate the revenue under the present laws at $748,200,000, or $266,922,000 less than the estimated disbursements. As a matter of fact the total of appropriations, even after deducting the amount required for the sinking fund and 5 per cent of the unexpended appropriations, leaves $140,000,143 in excess of the committee's estimates of the amount necessary to provide revenue, showing that this bill is totally inadequate for the purpose and that some other method must be employed.

If Congress had exercised economy by curtailing or refusing appropriations for needless projects, or projects that could well wait, such as a nitrate plant, land-bank bill, shipping bill, flood-control bill, and so forth, it is safe to say that from $175,000,000 to $200,000,000 could have been saved to the people during the fiscal year 1917. This amount, together with at least $100,000,000 which the Treasury has lost from custom duties under the Underwood tariff law, or nearly $200,000,000, as some estimate, aggregates an amount more than sufficient to meet the authorized expenditures for preparedness during this fiscal year.

In other words, Mr. President, economy and the application of the Government to the resources of the customhouse would have placed the Government in a position to have met all the requirements of military and naval preparedness.

The estimates of revenue made by the Committee on Ways and Means and the majority members of the Finance Committee in the Senate are as misleading and inaccurate as are the estimates of appropriations. Dependence is placed upon the daily statement of the Treasury. This statement showed an apparent balance in the current fund at the close of the fiscal year 1916 of $177,000,000. It will be noticed, however, by an examination of any of the daily statements of the United States Treasury that the amount to the credit of disbursing officers is carried as an asset and included in the net balance. Thus, in the statement referred to, the $59,000,000 above mentioned is carried as an asset. It should not only not be carried as an asset, but it should be deducted from the assets, which would reduce the apparent balance referred to in the general fund to $118,000,000. But, further, there is yet to be deducted $51,366,437.50 on account of national-bank note redemptions payable from the general cash in the Treasury. This amount still further reduces the general balance to $66,635,562.50. It should be remembered the Ways and Means Committee figures on $69,922,000 to be taken from the general fund to make up the balance necessary to meet excess disbursements for 1917. At the rate at which the general balance is disappearing, there will be no general balance, but more likely a deficit at the end of this fiscal year. On July 19 there remained but $24,000,000.

In the view of several prominent authorities items are also carried in the Treasury statement as assets which should be charged to liabilities, for example: Limited tender or unavailable assets, such as subsidiary silver coin, fractional currency, minor coin, and silver bullion; deposits in the Philippine treasury, which were always considered unavailable before the change to the present system was made last October; Treasury warrants; outstanding matured coupons; and interest checks. This latter item probably is offset by daily receipts in transit, but at the end of a month or the close of a quarter the former usually exceed the latter.

The difficulty of obtaining accurate information as to the condition of the United States Treasury prompts me to make the suggestion that Congress should put a stop to the practice of juggling with these figures and provide by law specifically as to how the daily Treasury balance and public-debt statements should be prepared. It is no exaggeration to say that if any bank official should attempt to present an account of assets and liabilities in the misleading way it is now being made the practice of the Treasury Department, he would very likely discover that he had involved himself quite seriously with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency, if he had not incurred some of the penalties made and provided in such cases.

Mr. President, I know that the chairman of the Finance Committee is anxious to expedite a vote upon this measure and other Senators desire to be heard. If it should turn out that the bill goes over until to-morrow and time permits, I might continue my remarks. If it should be voted on to-day I will close and ask permission of the Senate to print a number of tables and statements which I have at hand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Permission will be granted without objection. The Chair hears none.

[Transmitted by unnumbered dispatch dated Apr. 20, 1916, from American consulate general, London, England. File No. 763.72112/2527.]

BRITISH CONTRABAND LIST—LIST OF ARTICLES DECLARED TO BE CONTRABAND OF WAR.

FOREIGN OFFICE, April 13, 1916.

The articles declared to be contraband of war in the proclamations now in force have been arranged alphabetically in the accompanying list. It is hoped that this will be convenient to all parties concerned.

The list comprises the articles which have been declared to be absolute contraband as well as those which have been declared to be conditional contraband. The circumstances of the present war are so peculiar that His Majesty's Government consider that for practical purposes the distinction between the two classes of contraband has ceased to have any value. So large a proportion of the inhabitants of the enemy country are taking part, directly or indirectly, in the war that no real distinction can now be drawn between the armed forces and the civilian population. Similarly, the enemy Government has taken control, by a series of decrees and orders, of practically all the articles in the list of conditional contraband, so that they are now available for Government use. So long as these exceptional conditions continue our belligerent rights with respect to the two kinds of contraband are the same, and our treatment of them must be identical.

SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington:

White paper issued by foreign office declares:

"Circumstances of present war are so peculiar that Government considers that for practical purposes distinction between two classes of contraband has ceased to have value," and that

"So long as these exceptional conditions continue our belligerent rights re selecting two kinds of contraband are the same and our treatment of them must be identical."

List contraband issued incorporating former conditional contraband in list absolute.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 708) to make immediately available for the use of the State of Georgia in paying expenses incurred by said State in connection with the joint encampment held at Augusta, Ga., July 22 to 31, 1914, certain sums appropriated for arming and equipping the militia of said State.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 6748) providing that Indian schools may be maintained without restriction as to annual rate of expenditure per pupil, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 12426. An act to authorize mining for metalliferous minerals on Indian reservations; and

H. R. 15958. An act to amend an act providing for the withdrawal from public entry of lands needed for town sites in connection with irrigation projects.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 12426. An act to authorize mining for metalliferous minerals on Indian reservations was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

MAINTENANCE OF INDIAN SCHOOLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6748) providing that Indian schools may be maintained without restriction as to annual rate of expenditure per pupil, which was, in line 6, after "school," to insert "Provided, That in no event shall the per capita cost at any one school exceed the sum of $200 per annum."

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

EXEMPTIONS FROM CIVIL-SERVICE REQUIREMENTS (S. DOC. NO. 544).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Civil Service Commission, in response to a resolution of the Senate, which will be read and printed for the use of the Senate.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., September 2, 1916.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: This commission has the honor to make report, in response to the following resolution of the Senate dated August 16, 1916:

"Resolved, That the United States Civil Service Commission be, and it is hereby, directed to send to the Senate a list of the Executive orders issued since March 4, 1913, exempting appointees in the Federal service from civil-service requirements or placing under the civil service employees previously appointed outside of any eligible list furnished by the Civil Service Commission; also a similar list of the Executive orders issued during each administration prior thereto, beginning with the first administration of President Cleveland, exempting appointees in the Federal service from civil-service requirements, or placing employees under the civil service previously appointed outside of any eligible list prescribed by the Civil Service Commission; also the number of Executive orders issued during each administration, beginning with the first administration of President Cleveland to and including the administration of President Wilson, with the concurrence of the commission and the number issued without the approval of the commission, and those issued during each of said administrations without having been referred to the commission."

The material submitted is as follows:

1. Copies of all "Executive orders issued since March 4, 1913, exempting appointees in the Federal service from civil-service requirements or placing under the civil service employees previously appointed outside of any eligible list furnished by the Civil Service Commission."

For convenience this list is arranged under the following general heads grouped under subheads to show orders issued with the concurrence of the commission, orders issued without its concurrence, orders issued without reference for its recommendation, and orders which it was directed to prepare.

(a) Executive orders issued since March 4, 1913, amending the civil-service rules to exempt positions from examination. (Under the present rules this class of positions is enumerated under Schedule A.)

(b) Executive orders placing under the civil service groups of employees appointed outside any eligible register furnished by the Civil Service Commission.

(c) Executive orders exempting particular individuals from examination or waiving some requirement of the civil-service rules in their behalf.

2. Copies of Executive orders issued between March 4, 1885, and March 3, 1913, inclusive, "exempting appointees in the Federal service from civil-service requirements, or placing employees under the civil service previously appointed outside of any eligible list prescribed by the Civil Service Commission."

For convenience this list is arranged by presidential administrations under headings similar to those used in the report concerning the present administration.

3. Appointments authorized by the commission under authority of Executive orders and civil-service rules.

Two exhibits which will show the number of positions affected by general orders are appended.

By direction of the commission.

Very respectfully,

JOHN A. MCILHENNY,
President.

Mr. PENROSE. That is an important communication. It is in response to a resolution adopted by the Senate requesting a list of the Executive orders made since, I believe, the first administration of President Cleveland. I ask the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] in what form he would suggest it should be printed. As a Senate document?

Mr. SMOOT. I understood the Chair to say that it would be printed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed as a document for the use of the Senate. The Chair does not know the exact number.

Mr. PENROSE. All right; that is satisfactory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be entered that it be printed for the use of the Senate. There is a confidential communication on the same subject.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask that the confidential communication, which is not of great importance, may lie on the table, and, if necessary to bring it up, it will be brought up in executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Such will be the order.

CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION AT GULFPORT, MISS.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I ask unanimous consent to submit a report from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. I am directed by that committee, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 237) authorizing the Postmaster General to provide the postmaster of Gulfport, Miss., with a special canceling die for the Mississippi Centennial Exposition celebration, to report it back favorably, without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. It will not take a moment. It provides that the Postmaster General may have a canceling die made for the use of the centennial exposition at Gulfport, Miss. It carries no appropriation.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Joint resolution authorizing the Postmaster General to provide the postmaster of Gulfport, Miss., with a special canceling die for the Mississippi Centennial Exposition celebration.

Whereas the city of Gulfport, Miss., is making extensive preparations to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Mississippi into the Union, the celebration to begin on October 1, 1917, and to continue until April 1, 1918; and

Whereas the projected celebration in said city will include industrial, agricultural, horticultural, and other exhibitions, pageants, national athletic games, tournaments, parades, conventions, and many other interesting features that will attract visitors from all parts of the United States; and

Whereas the Mississippi Centennial Exposition Commission having the celebration in charge will widely advertise the approaching events, with the result that a great increase of incoming and outgoing mail matter will be handled by the Gulfport post office; and

Whereas the governor of the State of Mississippi has issued a proclamation inviting all the States of the Union to participate and will invite the countries of South and Central America and Mexico to participate in the celebration; and

Whereas the extensive preparations being made by the citizens of Gulfport and the State of Mississippi for the celebration give to said celebration a national character and significance; Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Postmaster General of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized to prepare and deliver to the postmaster of Gulfport a special canceling die to be used in the cancellation of mail matter in the post office of that city from January 1, 1917, to April 1, 1918, said die to be of such design as may be agreed upon by the Postmaster General and the Mississippi Centennial Exposition Commission.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

THE REVENUE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent to return temporarily to page 99 for the purpose of having considered an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has been recognized. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. HUGHES. I ask the Senator to yield to me.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I am very anxious to dispose of the pending amendment to the portion of the bill of which I have charge. I hope we may proceed with that and get rid of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia object?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to go on with the pending amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia objects. The Senator from Utah will proceed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have said very little thus far upon the pending revenue measure, and I shall be as brief as possible this afternoon. For that reason I am well aware that I shall not cover the ground as fully as it ought to be covered; but I shall take occasion at this time to call particular attention to the conditions existing both with respect to the receipts of our Government and its expenditures.

IMPORTS VASTLY GREATER AND REVENUE MUCH LESS.

The imports for the last fiscal year aggregated $2,197,984,842, an increase of $523,815,102 over the previous year. This vast aggregate of imports shows how hollow the pretense is that the revenues have declined because of the European war cutting off imports. The imports were $384,976,608 greater than for the last fiscal year of the protective tariff, 1913. In that year there was a surplus of $41,340,524. Everybody wanting work was employed, and prosperity prevailed over all the land; but following the fiscal year of 1916, with nearly $400,000,000 more of imports, we have before us the greatest tax bill Congress has ever been asked to pass on. This bill provides for an estimated burden of taxation of $382,740,926.32, distributed as follows:

From income tax	$234,367,430.28
From miscellaneous tax	88,373,496.04
From estate tax	20,000,000.00
From munition tax	40,000,000.00
Total	382,740,926.32

And it is to be followed by the issue of $130,000,000 or more of bonds to provide for the expenses incident to the gross mismanagement of Mexican affairs by the existing administration, $50,000,000 of bonds to buy ships for the mercantile trade, and $20,000,000 for the building of a fertilizer plant; part of this $382,000,000 tax bill is a reenactment of a previous law, but that does not change the situation in the least, as that previous measure was a so-called emergency act. This is the third tax bill brought forward by the Democratic Party to make up for the enormous losses caused by wanton extravagance and the shameful tariff bill they passed in violation of their pledges. They promised to reduce the cost of living, while not disturbing the business of the country, and to increase our foreign trade and collect sufficient revenue to run the Government.

The appropriations were to be reduced along with the number of officeholders and many other things were to be done, not one of which has been accomplished. The cost of living has been greatly increased. The disturbance to the business of the country, before the European war brought relief, was greater than ever before in the history of the Nation. Millions of men were out of employment; imports enormously increased; soup houses were necessary to feed the starving persons out of work; the balance of trade turned against the country, and appropriations were far in excess of anything ever before known in our history. With smaller revenues and an enormous increase in expenditures, tax bills had to be put through Congress to afford relief. Each session of Congress since that time the question of increasing taxes to meet the additional appropriations, and the loss in revenue because of the blundering tariff law has occupied much of our time.

The war has been of tremendous aid to the Democrats because of the great demand for war materials. The Democrats seek to mislead the country by having it appear that such prosperity as is caused by the demand for material for the armies of Europe is a result of their tariff law. But any reasonable person knows there is no truth in that assertion. War munitions are not confined to explosives or guns. Armies have to be fed as well as the people of the countries whose workmen are occupied in fighting its battles. The soldiers and the people must be clothed, and there is a demand in various ways for our products, wholly the result of that gigantic struggle. When the war ends these demands will cease and the men now engaged in the war will return to their former employments at such wages as they can get, which will necessarily be low. Their employers will endeavor to sell their goods in the United States, the best market in the world, at whatever prices they can obtain that will save them from loss. Legislation should be passed at this session to meet that situation, but nothing is being done in that direction. Our time is taken up with useless appropriations and in devising methods of taxation to pay the bills. Great distress will naturally follow the end of the war if the tariff law is not changed, but the Democratic Party and its President have reaffirmed their belief in the efficacy of the so-called Underwood law. The only hope for the people is in the election of Mr. Hughes to the Presidency at the coming election, with a return of a Republican majority in both Houses of Congress. Fortunately the prospects for such a result are very good. But even then it will be a good while before the necessary change in the law can be made, and in the meanwhile the people will suffer.

OTHER GOVERNMENTS RAISE TARIFF RATES—AN INEQUITABLE MEASURE.

Foreign Governments are raising their tariff rates. That is the tendency the world over. Our Government is the only important one on earth that has reduced its tariff in recent years. The allied Governments engaged in the war in Europe have already agreed to adopt measures of a protective character, and to operate in conjunction so as to benefit each other. That means injury to the United States. The commercial attaché of the United States in London recently reported, according to an Associated Press dispatch, that the British Government is planning to establish soon a tariff on American goods, other than munitions of war, for raising revenue. In fact they have already prohibited the importation of some American goods, while others are received under restriction. France is also taking like measures, and these foreshadow what we will have to meet when the war ends. But the Democratic Party places confidence in a measure that opens our doors to the free admission of over 70 per cent of our enormous imports, while the rates on the remainder are insufficient both for revenue and protection. Instead of Congress preparing to meet this serious situation practically nothing is being done except to increase taxation. There was a measure of protection for dyestuffs in the pending bill as it passed the House, but as it was not sufficient protection it would have been practically worthless. In the same way we have an antidumping clause with loopholes in it that will make it of little or no value.

The New York Times, a very important Democratic newspaper, condemns the pending measure as—inequitable between sections of the country and between individual citizens, and designedly so.

It adds:

These discriminations are outdone in the munitions tax. Three-quarters of our four billions of exports is war trade, and the taxes are levied upon copper, guns, and shells and powder. The principle of the tax, so far as any principle is discoverable, is the same intentional discrimination against wealth and profits as that embodied in the income tax. The industries taxed were selected because they were concentrated and profitable. The result is that the State which has, say, one five-hundredths of the population pays one-fifth of the tax. There is no reason why business equally warlike to that of powder should go scott-free while powder shareholders may, perhaps, pay as much as $21,000,000, say $30 per share, more or less, in the form of the tax so levied that it may be paid by those who sold their shares before the tax was levied. The result is that those who have ceased to share the profits, perhaps, must pay, while those whose profits continue escape.

Many war supplies altogether escape any war tax. Business men are not alone in their grievance against discriminating legislation. There has been similar legislation against the railroads. Is there political wisdom in this economic folly? There are five or six States which might be swung out of the list of States which the Democratic cipherers are calculating upon.

SECRET METHODS TO FAVOR THE SOUTH.

The bill was drawn up in secret by the Democrats of the House committee, and the Republicans were only given a single day's notice in which to prepare a minority report. The bill was rushed through the House under gag rule that cut off amendments to a large degree and did not admit of many Members speaking on the subject, although the House has apparently nothing to do and has been adjourning three days at a time. That is the Democratic method of carrying out their ferocious attacks on the alleged gag rule of the Republicans. The bill was sent over to this body and is considered in secret by the Democratic members of the Finance Committee. But gag rule does not prevail, I am glad to say, in this body, although some of our opponents have been very anxious to adopt such a method of cutting off debate. The Democrats do their legislation in caucus. The committees of the House that are of importance, with one exception, have Southern men for chairmen. Practically the same situation rules in the Senate. Four northern States—New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and Illinois—paid $85,000,000 of the $124,000,000 collected from income taxes during the last fiscal year, while 12 southern States—Mississippi, Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, and West Virginia—paid a total of $5,389,670. Twelve northern States paid $409,000,000 of the $512,000,000 internal taxes. Eleven southern States have a billion dollars more capital than New York, but pay a mere fraction of the taxes for the Federal Government as compared with New York. Of the river and harbor appropriation bill New York received $2,917,500, but 11 southern States get $9,168,698. If the flood bill is also considered, the situation is much worse. This explains why our southern friends are eager to increase the income rates and secure the revenue by methods of taxation which relieve their States from paying a fair proportion.

A TREMENDOUS INCREASE IN APPROPRIATIONS.

The appropriations for this session of Congress will amount to nearly $1,700,000,000. The public of mature age will not forget the tremendous attacks the Democrats made on the Republicans for appropriating a billion dollars in the so-called "billion-dollar Congress." Now, when they have an opportunity, the Democrats practically treble the amount. Much of this expenditure is absolutely inexcusable, while a large part of it could be deferred without any injury to the country and with great relief to the taxpayers. Instead of reducing the number of so-called useless officeholders, as they promised, they make an enormous increase, with its consequential burden on taxpayers. They are not satisfied, but at this session are creating thousands of additional places. At least more than one-third of the $43,000,000 carried in the river and harbor bill is wasted. Twenty million dollars were appropriated for a nitrate plant, though in reality the purpose is to supply fertilizers for the use of our southern friends. Eleven million dollars have been thrown away in the establishment of an armor-plate plant, whereas the owners of existing plants offer to allow the Government to fix the price for producing armor plate. Fifty million dollars have been appropriated for the purchase of ships to be operated by the Government in the mercantile trade, and the President insisted that the Senate should pass that bill at this session. Such an appropriation is an absolute waste and an injury to shipping not owned by the Government. Our Democratic friends never give up the pursuit of money for digging out creeks and otherwise helping in their respective districts. These numerous wasteful expenditures aggregate almost as much as the amount of revenue to be derived from the increase in the income and other taxes.

THREE-FOURTHS OF OUR EXPORTS WAR TRADE.

The New York Times says that three-fourths of our $4,000,000,000 of exports is war trade. Secretary Redfield and his echoes try to make the public believe that only a small percentage of the exports, those confined largely to explosives, are the result of the war. That is a ridiculous statement and fools no one of sense. But the fact that three-quarters of the exports are the result of the war, according to the Times, indicates the great change that will take place when the war ends. Even our trade with some other countries than those engaged in the war has been increased as a result of that struggle. Our exports to Denmark for the 11 months ending with May of this year were in value $51,449,681, and last year they were over $75,000,000; but in 1914, before the war began, for the fiscal year they were only a little over $14,000,000, showing that the increase is altogether due to the war. The imports for the three years from Denmark varied only a few thousand dollars, being a little over $3,000,000 each year. We sent over $32,000,000 worth of exports to Greece in the last fiscal year, but for the fiscal year 1914, before the war began, we sent only about $1,000,000. Exports to Italy have more than quadrupled since the war began, but imports from Italy remain about the same. Exports to Norway have increased six times over since 1914, but imports from that country have declined, thus showing the effects of the war trade. The imports that came to this country before the war have been deflected in part to the nations at war. Exports to Portugal were three times greater last year than in 1914. To Russia in Europe they jumped from $28,000,000 in 1914, for the 11 months, to $175,000,000 for the 11 months of the last fiscal year. To France the increase was from $152,000,000 to $555,000,000; to Spain, from $28,000,000 to $46,000,000; to the United Kingdom, they increased from $557,000,000 to $1,352,000,000. That will give a fair idea of what the war has done for our export trade.

WHERE IMPORTS INCREASE FASTER THAN EXPORTS.

To Central American countries our exports were less in 1915, by over $5,000,000, than in 1914, and were only $3,000,000 more in the last fiscal year.

That is a part of the world where our trade, relieved to a large extent from European competition, should have shown a vast increase. But the fact that it does not do so, while imports from those countries have increased about $7,000,000, shows the absurdity of the statement put forward by Secretary Redfield in regard to exports. In the same way to the British West Indies the exports in 1915 were much less than in 1914, and show only a small increase in the last fiscal year. Exports to Cuba and other West India Islands, other than British islands, increased some $59,000,000, while the imports from those islands increased over $90,000,000. Exports to Argentina increased some $16,000,000, but the imports from that country increased $60,000,000. Exports to Brazil last year were some $8,000,000 more than in 1914, but the imports from that country were $25,000,000 more, and the total of imports was nearly four times as much as the exports to that country. In the same way imports have increased much faster from Chile than the exports to that country. We sell Peru $8,000,000 and take from her $21,000,000, counting the 11 months of the last year. To Uruguay we sell $3,000,000 less than we buy from her; while to Venezuela the difference in favor of imports is $5,000,000. Altogether we bought from South America in the 11 months of last year $189,000,000 more of goods than we sold to those countries.

To China we sold less last year than in 1914, but we bought from that country $27,000,000 more than in 1914. To the British East Indies there was an increase in sales last year over 1914 of $8,000,000, but there was an increase in imports of $53,000,000. We sold to Japan in 11 months last year some $16,000,000 more in value of goods than in 1914, but we bought from that country $32,000,000 more than in 1914. To Russia in Asia we sent over $100,000,000 more last year than in 1914, all munitions of war and other war supplies. To Africa the exports of last year were $13,000,000 more than in 1913—that is, the 11 months—but the imports from that country were $43,000,000 more.

I give these figures from the official record to show the utter falsity of the Democratic claim for a great increase in exports outside of war material. Imports from other countries have increased to a far greater extent than our exports to those countries. That situation will be vastly worse the minute the war ends and the enormous quantities of war supplies cease to be exported. We will be in a far worse condition than we were before the war began as a result in the change in the balance of trade, due to the Democratic tariff law.

And what are our Democratic friends doing to meet that untoward situation? Nothing, except to increase taxes. They provide for a tariff commission to furnish places for some of their politicians and add $300,000 to the burdens of the taxpayers. Then they made a pretense of furnishing protection for the dye industry, but it was a mere pretense. They provide an antidumping clause, but in such a way that it is of no practical value. That clause does not affect the 70 per cent of free imports in the least. The dumping clause is only effective when it can be shown that the importer has the intent of destroying or injuring an industry in the United States, or of preventing the establishment of an industry, or of controlling or monopolizing any part of the trade or commerce in such articles in the United States. It will be practically impossible to show any such intent. The dumping provision will have no effect whatever on the competition that results from the low wages in Europe. The dumping clause was devised to capture Republican votes, but Republicans are able to see the utter weakness of the provision. The foreigners can manufacture for export only as they have done in the past, and there is no way to ascertain their foreign price.

This revenue bill illustrates and emphasizes the fundamental difference that distinguishes the Republican and Democratic parties. It proposes to raise revenue by the imposition of larger internal taxes upon our own people rather than by an increase in duties upon foreign merchandise imported into this country. Although the Democratic Party has long advocated a tariff for revenue, it has been so uncompromisingly opposed to a tariff giving protection to American industry that it refuses to establish import duties high enough to supply the needed increase in national income, lest such duties might also afford American labor and American capital some advantage in the keen competition with the cheap capital and cheaper labor engaged in productive enterprise on the other shores of the Atlantic and the Pacific. The need of greater revenue is admitted. The certainty of increased import duties as a source of greater revenue can not be disputed. It is clear, therefore, that when the Democratic Party prefers to raise additional funds for governmental purposes by levying new, burdensome, and vexatious taxes it does so through continued adherence to its time-honored opposition to a protective tariff.

For that reason I say this bill illustrates the fundamental difference between the two great political parties in this country. The bill emphasizes that difference by including one item—the duty on dyestuffs, which expressly admits the efficacy of a protective tariff in the building of home industry—but at the same time refusing to indicate any intention to maintain permanently a protective duty upon dyes or any other commodity the production of which is desirable in this country.

Because the Democratic Party thus declares and emphasizes its opposition to a "made-in-America" policy, the tariff is and must continue to be a political issue before the American people. The Democratic Party insists upon making it an issue.

While I condemn the attitude of the Democratic Party in refusing to increase import duties to a degree sufficient to raise additional revenue, that is not my most serious objection to the policy of that party upon the tariff question. In my opinion the tariff is of far more value as a means of protection to American industry than it has ever been or ever will be as a source of revenue. I shall undertake to demonstrate, by statistics which can not be disputed, that even if every dollar of revenue collected at our customhouses were a tax upon the consumers of the United States, yet the removal of that tax imposes upon those same consumers, in their capacity as producers, a far heavier tax—a tax upon the whole country and its resources. The mere words of a law which purports on its face to be a tax measure does not necessarily represent the extent of its burden upon the people. While it seems a paradox to make the assertion, I shall undertake to prove that although reducing the import duties theoretically reduced the tax imposed upon us, yet the ultimate practical effect of that legislative action was to impose upon the American people, and particularly upon the wage earners of the country, a tax far more burdensome than any which could possibly have been imposed by the strongest protective tariff measure ever enacted in the United States.

The largest sum ever collected in one year at our customhouses was $333,683,000, collected in the fiscal year 1910 under a Republican tariff law. While I deny most emphatically that this tax was paid by the American people, yet, if we assume for the sake of argument that it was paid by our own people, nevertheless that sum of money was expended within the United States for the employment of American people and the purchase of American supplies. It was not lost to American industry. Even if this were paid by the American people, it would be an obligation which they should pay as citizens of the United States bound to support their Government.

THE FREE-TRADE TAX.

But let us see how this tax compares with the tax imposed upon us by the reduction of the customs duty. The Underwood tariff law was enacted October 3, 1913, and was in force 10 months up to the time of the outbreak of the European war, which everyone admits disarranged commercial relations. Since that time the abnormal influence of the war upon both export and import trade has made statistics of relatively little value for comparative purposes.

It is important, therefore, to study the effect of the Underwood tariff during the 10 months it was in operation entirely free from the influence of the war in Europe. During that period our imports increased $101,977,000 and our exports decreased $158,888,000, thus causing a reduction in our balance of trade to the extent of more than $260,000,000. In this connection we must not forget that of this $260,000,000 reduction in our balance of trade $127,453,750 of it occurred during the months of April and May, 1914, just preceding the war and at a time when war was not thought of, but after the Democratic tariff act had sufficient time after its passage to become fairly operative.

Every dollar of this sum represents a dollar sent across the ocean and absolutely lost to American industry. It represents $260,000,000 added to the business of our industrial competitors in Europe and Asia. Since it is generally admitted that a dollar expended in any active line of business in the United States changes hands from 10 to a dozen times a year, the removal of this $260,000,000 from American business meant, in the course of a year, a diminution of American business to the extent of at least $2,600,000,000. It meant a corresponding aid to the development of industry in foreign lands.

That is the measure of the annual tax imposed upon American industry by the reduction of tariff duties which diminished activity in American industry and increased activity in industry abroad. The enactment of the Democratic tariff law reduced the customs revenue to the extent of about $100,000,000 a year, but at the same time that this was done that same law had the direct effect of taking out of the channels of American business $260,000,000 in 10 months. If this $260,000,000 had been merely collected from our own people and expended in our own country for governmental affairs, there would have been no material loss to our own people and the burden would have been little felt. But the removal of $260,000,000 entirely from American enterprise and the enhancement and encouragement of foreign enterprise to a corresponding amount was an injury necessarily felt in every line of American business activity.

That is why American mills were closed or operated on part time in 1913 and 1914.

That is why over 3,000,000 men were out of employment and many of them were forced to join the bread lines and seek free shelter from the vicissitudes of the season.

That is why our railroads had long lines of idle freight cars on their sidetracks, building operations were curtailed, bank clearings declined, and bankruptcy courts were flooded with business.

The figures I have given demonstrate that such a reduction of import duties as will increase importations from abroad and decrease our export trade is a more grievous burden upon our people than any high-protective duty any political party ever proposed.

A REPUBLICAN "MADE-IN-AMERICA" POLICY.

Concisely stated the protective-tariff principle is the basis of a "made-in-America" policy. Free trade encourages people to buy where they can buy the cheapest. The protective principle assumes that it is the patriotic duty of Americans to patronize home industry, but recognizes the fact that through carelessness, or lack of information, or influenced by a desire to economize, many people buy the cheaper article, even though, in the long run, they curtail or destroy American enterprises and build up the industries of other lands. Believing it to be the duty of Americans to give a preference to goods "made in America," we advocate a protective tariff which will put our economic theories into actual practice. Democrats claim to be in favor of "America first," but they enact legislation which places foreign products first in American markets.

An economic policy which encourages purchases abroad can not be otherwise than injurious to American industry. On the other hand, a policy which induces the purchase of American goods can not be otherwise than helpful. A protective tariff is constructive—free trade is destructive.

That is a broad statement of conclusions with which our Democratic friends disagree. I shall not ask them, or anyone, to accept the statement without proof. I shall undertake to prove my assertion that a protective tariff is constructive and that a free-trade policy is destructive, and, in doing so, shall take occasion to reply to certain portions of an address recently delivered on this floor by the Senator from Colorado, Mr. SHAFROTH.

INDUSTRIAL PROGRESS UNDER REPUBLICAN POLICIES.

In his address to the Senate on July 19, 1916, the Senator from Colorado asserted that upon assuming control of the Government in March, 1913, the Wilson administration "found the business life of the Nation in a deplorably enfeebled condition."

That presents an indictment of the Republican Party and its tariff policy, for our party was in control of the Government from 1897 until 1913. It is an indictment to which the party pleads "not guilty," and we shall gladly go to trial upon the evidence before the great jury of the American people.

If it were true, as the Senator from Colorado asserted, that the business life of the Nation was in a deplorably enfeebled condition at the end of 16 years of Republican administration, then we deserve the humiliation of political repudiation. If it is not true, then the party whose spokesman has presented the indictment deserves rebuke and the Republican Party merits return to power.

Let us see what the evidence shows.

It is not practicable to secure statistics showing actual business conditions on March 4, 1913, the exact date upon which the Democratic Party took control, for official statistics are computed as of June 30, the end of the fiscal year, or as of December 31, the end of the calendar year. Inasmuch as the new Democratic administration enacted no legislation taking effect prior to June 30, 1913, the country was still under Republican legislation, though it had already suffered some of the depressing effects of the certainty of the establishment of Democratic policies. However, for the purpose of comparison, statistics as of that date are the best that are available, and, where not entirely accurate, the advantage is in favor of the charge made by the Democratic Party against us. We shall gladly give the Democratic Party that advantage in submission of evidence and still have confidence that we shall sustain our plea of "not guilty."

If I were inclined to be at all technical in producing and submitting evidence of a statistical nature, I would compare conditions in 1913 with conditions in 1895, the earlier date being in the middle of the last Democratic administration, when business was in about as enfeebled a condition as any of us imagined possible for a nation with resources such as those possessed by the United States. I undertake to say that no Democrat would criticize as unfair a comparison of conditions under the Democratic administration with conditions at the time designated by the Senator from Colorado—the close of the Republican régime.

But I shall again give the Democratic Party an advantage in the selection of the period over which the comparison is to be made. I think it will be generally agreed that by 1900, after the Republican Party had been in power three years, we had fairly recovered from the depression of the Democratic administration and that the business of the country was then at least reasonably prosperous.

With conditions in 1900 as a starting point, let us see what our position was in 1913.

Let us ascertain from the record whether we descended to a "deplorably enfeebled condition" or whether we made progress which justly excited the envy of the people of other nations and should arouse the pride of the people of our own.

Let us determine whether the Senator from Colorado has truthfully depicted the status of business America or has yielded to the temptation to malign our institutions in the hope of gaining some partisan advantage.

While it may take some research, some patient attention, and some valuable time, I believe it worth while to take stock of our resources and to review our progress in order that we may know whether in 1913 we had a country of whose government and governmental policies we should have been proud, or whether that government and its policies were such as should make us ashamed.

From 1900 to 1913 our population increased from 76,000,000 to 97,000,000, an increase of 27.7 per cent. The 76,000,000 people we had in 1900 were in a fairly prosperous condition. Since our numbers increased a little less than 28 per cent in the period up to 1913, if the conditions surrounding our people improved at a greater rate than that, it follows, as a necessary conclusion, that their status in business and social life improved in a corresponding degree.

In 1900 our national wealth was $88,517,000,000, or $1,164 per capita. Under Republican administration our wealth increased to $187,739,000,000, or $1,965 per capita in 1912, the nearest year for which figures are given in the Statistical Abstract. This was an increase of nearly 70 per cent in wealth per capita in 12 years as compared with an increase of 27.7 per cent in population in 13 years. That bit of evidence does not point to a "deplorably enfeebled condition" at the end of Republican administration.

In 1900 our national debt less cash in the Treasury amounted to $14.58 per capita, but in 1913 we had reduced it to $10.60 per capita, and had in the meantime built the Panama Canal largely out of current revenues. While our population was increasing a little less than 28 per cent we educed our per capita national debt a little more than 28 per cent. If this be an evidence of a "deplorably enfeebled condition," I trust we shall have more of it.

The total amount of money in circulation in 1900 was $2,055,000,000, but increased to $3,363,000,000 in 1913, an increase of more than 63 per cent. If a population in 1913, which had been increased 28 per cent over 1900, felt "deplorably enfeebled" by an increase of 63 per cent in the amount of money in circulation, it must have been due to fatigue incident to carrying around the increased amount of money. The amount of money in circulation per capita increased from $26.93 in 1900 to $34.56 in 1913.

But business is not transacted with money alone. In modern business we utilize bank checks to a very large extent, and we are accustomed to measure the condition of trade by the transactions of the clearing houses. Let us see the record in this respect. In 1900 bank clearings in the United States amounted to $84,582,000,000, from which sum they increased to $173,000,000,000 in 1913, an increase of more than 100 per cent. If that is an evidence that American business was "enfeebled," it requires more ingenuity than I possess to frame a line of argument by which that conclusion could be reached.

The number of national banks increased from 3,732 in 1900 to 7,473 in 1913, an increase of 100 per cent, and at the same time the paid-in capital of these banks increased from $621,536,000 to $1,056,919,000, an increase of about 60 per cent. The increase was in the smaller banks. In the same period the surplus and undivided profits of these banks increased from $391,000,000 to $988,000,000, an increase of 170 per cent. The total individual deposits in State and National banks increased in the same period from $7,238,000,000 to $17,475,000,000, an increase of 140 per cent. When a population that increases only 27.7 per cent can increase its bank deposits 140 per cent, and when the banks can strengthen themselves by increasing their surplus and undivided profits 170 per cent, it is strange that any man should find in that situation any justification for the assertion that our business was "deplorably enfeebled."

But, at the same time that Republican administrations were so conducting the affairs of the Government as to aid in producing this marvelous activity in private business, the Government itself was not increasing the burdens upon the people. Our total ordinary revenues in 1900 amounted to $7.43 per capita, while in 1913 they were only $7.44 per capita. And our revenues were in excess of our expenditures in both 1900 and 1913, whereas in 1915, under Democratic administration, total expenditures exceeded total receipts by more than $64,000,000.

The marvelously active business which these banking statistics indicate in our domestic trade has its counterpart in our foreign trade. In 1900 our total exports amounted to $1,394,000,000, which we increased by the exercise of American enterprise under sound economic legislation to $2,465,000,000 in 1913. This was an increase of 76 per cent, which is a very gratifying record for a population that increased only 27.7 per cent.

But it is not in banking and in foreign trade alone that we find these evidences of enormous industrial development under Republican administration. During the period when our population was increasing 27.7 per cent the value of our farms increased more than 100 per cent, the value of farm animals increased 150 per cent, the production of wheat increased 45 per cent, and the production of beet sugar, in which the State of Colorado is interested more than any other State in the Union, increased from 163,000,000 pounds in 1900 to 1,385,000,000 pounds in 1913, an increase of 750 per cent. If there was any one industry which profited by Republican legislative policies, it was the beet-sugar industry, which, in my opinion, should have continued encouragement in order that we may produce more sugar at home and send less of our money abroad. Will the Senator from Colorado assert that when the Wilson administration came into power it found the beet-sugar industry of this country in a "deplorably enfeebled condition"; and, if so, will he tell us when, in time of peace, the beet-sugar industry was more prosperous than under Republican protective-tariff laws?

During this same period, which the Senator from Colorado deems so injurious to American business, we increased our production of aluminum from 7,000,000 pounds to 72,000,000 pounds; production of cement, used so extensively in construction work, increased from 17,000,000 barrels to 89,000,000 barrels; the output of coal increased from 240,000,000 tons to 508,000,000 tons. That increase of 100 per cent in the production of coal had its counterpart in a 100 per cent increase in the production of copper, the use of which is a very strong indication of business conditions.

In that same period of marvelous development, which, through the colored glasses of the Senator from Colorado, looks like a period of depression, we increased our production of petroleum from 2,600,000,000 gallons to 10,400,000,000 gallons, an increase of 300 per cent.

One industry that has long been recognized as a barometer of business conditions is the production of pig iron and steel.

These products are used in construction work, and the demand for them varies according to general economic conditions. It is interesting to note, therefore, the increase in iron and steel production during the period which the Senator from Colorado says brought us to deplorable enfeeblement. In 1900 we produced 13,789,000 tons of pig iron and in 1913 we had increased the production to 30,966,000 tons, an increase of considerably more than 100 per cent. During the same time, the production of steel increased 200 per cent. If we observe such increases as those during a period when our population increased only 27.7 per cent, and call that a "deplorably enfeebled" condition, what has the Senator from Colorado to say in characterization of the fact that in 1914 there was a radical decline in iron and steel production?

In 1900 we produced 678,000,000 pounds of tin plate for the use of construction and canning industries. Our active business enterprises had so rapidly developed under the beneficent influences of Republican legislation that we produced nearly three times as much in 1913. It is of particular interest to know that in 1890 we imported a billion pounds of tin plate and had no domestic production. With the enactment of a Republican protective duty on tin plate, we began the development of a tin-plate industry of our own. Our imports have now become of slight consequence, and, at the end of what the Senator from Colorado deems a deplorably enfeebling national administration, we were producing about 2,000,000,000 pounds per annum.

The Statistical Abstract contains no figures regarding cotton manufactures for each year during the 13-year period I have been considering, and the nearest statistics available are for the period from 1899 to 1909. During that 10-year period our cotton manufactures increased from $329,000,000 to $628,000,000 and, when extended to cover a 13-year period, I have no doubt they show an increase of 100 per cent. At any rate, our exports of domestic cotton manufactures increased more than 100 per cent during that 13-year period which, in the opinion of the Senator from Colorado, found us in a "deplorably enfeebled condition."

In that same 10-year period our manufactures of wool increased from $297,000,000 to $507,000,000, an increase of 70 per cent, which is not so bad a showing for a population that increased less than 28 per cent.

If business were, in fact, deplorably enfeebled, that condition would certainly be reflected in diminished passenger and freight traffic on our railroads. But there was no recession. On the contrary, there was an increase of both forms of traffic far in excess of the rate of increase in our population. In 1900 the railroads carried less than 577,000,000 passengers, while in 1913 they carried 1,033,000,000, an increase of about 95 per cent. The quantity of freight transported increased more than 100 per cent.

This same story of steady and healthy industrial activity is supported by postal statistics. In 1900 the receipts of the postal service were $102,000,000, but business activity so rapidly increased the use of the mails that in 1913 the total receipts were $266,000,000, an increase of 160 per cent. When a 28 per cent increase in population is accompanied by a 160 per cent increase in use of the mails, there is something besides stagnation permeating our industrial life.

In 1900 the Post Office Department issued domestic money orders to the amount of $239,000,000. In the 13 years that followed, our banking business increased to the extent already shown, and money-order business increased to $624,000,000. When a population that increases only 28 per cent can increase its purchase of money orders to the extent of 160 per cent, it is difficult to understand how a United States Senator can read a story of business depression between the lines. Would he consider it an evidence of bad conditions in his own private business if he had an increase of 160 per cent with only a 28 per cent increase in the scope of his trade?

These facts clearly and indisputably demonstrate that through the 13-year period I have discussed, while the Republican Party was in control of the affairs of the Government, we enjoyed a steady advance in material prosperity. There was one brief check to our advance, it is true, but the interim was short and of no lasting effect upon the onward and upward sweep of our industrial progress. And during that period of material prosperity, we were not neglectful of higher considerations. In 1900 we spent $215,000,000 on our public schools but increased this to $534,000,000 in 1913, an increase of 148 per cent in public-school expenditures for the benefit of a 28 per cent increase in population.

THE PANIC OF 1907.

In a very adroit but not entirely frank, and far from accurate, statement the Senator from Colorado said that "the depressing effects of the 1907 panic extended through the balance of the Roosevelt administration, through all of the Taft administration, and into the first part of the Wilson administration." I shall not attempt any extended discussion of the panic of 1907, nor shall I deny any responsibility the Republican administration should bear. I do deny, however, that the effects of that panic extended through the balance of the Roosevelt administration or through all or any part of the Taft administration. I shall present evidence which will conclusively prove that the Senator is not justified in his assertions.

Preliminary thereto, however, permit me to say that the American people have already passed judgment upon the administration which may have been partly responsible for the panic of 1907. It is common knowledge that prior to the panic of that year the executive branch of the Government had been conducting a crusade against a class of people whom it characterized as malefactors of great wealth. In my judgment, there was justification for a part of that crusade. It was at that time and still is my opinion that the crusade gathered a momentum which carried it beyond the point of reason. This was recognized by President Roosevelt himself, who called a halt when he realized the extent to which enthusiasm had carried his colaborers.

But while I was then and still am of the opinion that the crusade, however wisely begun, was carried to unwise extremes, yet I have never for a moment doubted the sincerity of the man who started that crusade. Neither is there any doubt on that point in the minds of the American people. That has been twice conclusively proven. In 1908 the Republican Party nominated and the American people elected a candidate who was the personal choice of Theodore Roosevelt. William H. Taft was nominated and elected President in 1908 through the influence of Theodore Roosevelt with the American people. His election was to all intents and purposes an indorsement of the Roosevelt administration. In fact, throughout the 1908 campaign there was no argument or plea that aroused more enthusiasm in public meetings or that won more votes for the Republican candidate than did reference to and commendation of the administration of Theodore Roosevelt.

Not only was Mr. Taft the personal choice of Mr. Roosevelt, but the platform on which Mr. Taft ran contained an unqualified indorsement of the Roosevelt administration. At the head of the Democratic ticket was Mr. Bryan, who was then and probably is now the most popular man in the Democratic Party. The platform upon which Mr. Bryan ran contained a scathing denunciation of the Roosevelt administration and of the Republican Party. Nevertheless, and notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Bryan polled a hundred thousand more votes than did Mr. Wilson in 1912, yet Mr. Bryan fell 1,269,000 votes behind the vote for the Republican nominee. If the Republican Party or the Republican President were responsible for the financial flurry of 1907, they were never censured by the American people.

Moreover, the election of 1912 disclosed another demonstration of the truth of the assertion that even though his administrative course may have precipitated the panic of 1907, yet the American people did not lose confidence in the integrity and general wise judgment of Theodore Roosevelt. Although he ran on a third-party ticket and with an organization hastily brought together, he received the votes of 4,119,507 American citizens, which, together with the 3,484,956 votes polled for the Republican nominee, made a total of 7,604,463, or more than 1,300,000 votes in excess of those polled for the Democratic nominee.

While it may be true that the crusade against bad business led to the panic of 1907, statistics published under the approval of the present Secretary of Commerce show that the effects of that panic were of brief duration, that the industries and the commerce of the country rapidly resumed their normal stride, and that we were on a rising tide of prosperity at the time the Democratic Party came into power in 1913.

THE DEPRESSION OF 1913–14.

The Senator from Colorado made the assertion that no better index of the business conditions in the country exists than the reports of Bradstreet's and Dun's commercial agencies, and that "for the last year" they have been noting a marked increase of activity in industry and commerce. This is undoubtedly true. There will be no disputing the statement that the reports of the commercial agencies are a good index of business conditions, and that "for the last year" there has been a marked increase of activity in industry and commerce. The "last year" has been a year of war which gave us the largest foreign trade in our history.

Since the Senator from Colorado considers Bradstreet's reports a good index of business conditions, I should like to quote a few statements from the publications of that periodical during the period of time when the Senator from Colorado said that "the channels of commerce were sluggish and the currents of trade were stagnant."

In its first issue of the year 1912 Bradstreet's opened its comment on the state of trade with this assertion:

At the advent of the new year the undertone of trade and industrial conditions seems to be of an encouraging character. At the moment retail lines present the most active branches of distributive trade, while in industrial pursuits iron and steel and textile mills have enlarged their working forces.

At the end of the first three months of 1912 Bradstreet's said that bank clearings for the month of March apparently spelled betterment in the trend of affairs in general.

This fact is reflected in a total of $14,319,021,715, which sum first of all indicates an increase of 12.1 per cent over the preceding month and a general increase of 7.6 per cent over March, 1911.

It is apparent that business was on the upgrade rather than down grade in 1912.

In opening its reviews for 1913, Bradstreet's said that—

Nineteen hundred and twelve was a year of remarkable achievement in agriculture, in trade, and in industry. It saw set up many new records of crop yield, of commodity price movements, of foreign and domestic trade, and of manufacture. * * * Briefly stated, it was a period of peaceful progress and plenteous production during which were laid some firm foundations for a season of prosperity in the current year.

If the Senator from Colorado has, as he professes to have, great regard for the comments of Bradstreet's upon industrial conditions, how can he harmonize that statement, made at the opening of the calendar year 1913, with his assertion that—

Commerce was sluggish and the currents of trade stagnant.

The quotation I have just made from Bradstreet's was published only two months before the Democratic Party assumed control of the affairs of this Government. At the end of three months after the Democratic Party had assumed control, and four months before it had enacted its destructive tariff law, Bradstreet's opened its review with this statement:

Varying factors are presented by this week's reports, financial pessimism, plus apprehension over tariff changes, being in sharp contrast to very favorable returns as to actual current trade and as to crops. * * * The financial situation, involving as it does stock market liquidation, tight money, and more than usual difficulty in making collections, together with the certain degree of uncertainty regarding tariff matters, continues to hold up operations for the far future.

When the Underwood tariff law, which was enacted on October 3, 1913, had been in effect one month, Bradstreet's said:

Bank clearings for the week ending October 30 aggregated $3,181,423,000, a decrease of 12 per cent over last week and of 7.9 per cent over the same week last year.

In its first issue for 1914, reviewing the business year 1913, Bradstreet's said:

Nineteen hundred and thirteen was a year of disquiet and disappointment alike in foreign and domestic finance, trade, and industry. The disquiet was world-wide, though until the latter part of this year not so much in evidence at home as abroad.

I direct the particular attention of the Senator from Colorado to the statement that it was not until "the latter part of the year," when the Underwood tariff law took effect, that the depression was severely felt in this country. I shall make only a few quotations from Bradstreet's reports at the end of the first three months of 1914, showing conditions from various viewpoints:

There is a good deal of irregularity in current trade reports, and while business in many lines makes an acceptable comparison with last year, the nub of the various complaints now heard is found in the tendency patent to buy in small lots for immediate use rather than to make heavy purchases for distant prospective wants. * * * Sentiment in the iron and steel trades is even less favorable than it was. This is directly traceable to the fact that demand is exceptionally light and because of retrenchments by some of the leading railways. * * * Pig iron is very dull, and prices on southern grades are lower. * * * The quarterly report of failures and liabilities is not very encouraging. There were more failures in March than a year ago, and the liabilities were likewise the largest ever reported in that month. The first quarter's total is larger than a year ago, and larger than in any previous first quarter since 1896, exceeding even the first quarter of 1908 by a fraction of 1 per cent.

But the most interesting, the most useful, and the most convincing expressions from Bradstreet's regarding business conditions are those early in the months of June and July, 1914, before we heard even the rumblings of the approaching storm in Europe. The Underwood tariff law had at that time been in effect only 8 or 9 months. It was in effect only 10 months prior to the sudden outbreak of the war, on August 1, 1914. In its issue of June 27, 1914, Bradstreet's said:

Foreign trade in May was smaller than in April, owing mainly to a decrease in imports, but compared with May a year ago imports were much larger, while exports were considerably smaller. The result was a balance in favor of imports of nearly $2,000,000 as against a balance in favor of exports a year ago of nearly $61,000,000.

I trust the Senator from Colorado and his colleagues who helped pass the Underwood tariff law do not fail to observe the full force and significance of that statement. Under the Republican tariff law we had in May, 1913, an export balance of nearly $61,000,000, whereas in May, 1914, under the Underwood law, we had an import balance of nearly $2,000,000. It makes a vast amount of difference whether trade is in our favor or against us.

On July 4, 1914, Bradstreet's printed its review of the first half of the calendar year. It said:

Good and excellent crop reports, quieter distributive trade, and dull and depressed industry and manufacture are the salient features of this week's advices. * * * Collections this week are rather slow, though crop movements may tend to improve this. * * * Failures for six months of 1914 number 7,745, a total of 8.4 per cent larger than last year and 2.4 per cent heavier than in 1908. Liabilities for six months aggregate $149,969,754, a sum 31 per cent larger than a year ago, but 16 per cent smaller than in the first half of 1908.

Regarding foreign trade movements, Bradstreet's for July 11, 1914, said that—

Import trade in May showed a large increase, 22.8 per cent, over May, 1913. Our exports fell off 16.9 per cent. In imports the feature was the large gain in receipts of foodstuffs, while in exports a notable tendency was to lessen the shipments of manufactures.

As the Senator from Colorado has well said, Bradstreet's is not a political publication. It is entirely nonpartisan, and yet it would be difficult for any Republican Senator to make a statement that in effect more severely condemns the Underwood tariff law than does the Bradstreet's review from which I am quoting. Continuing, Bradstreet's of July 11, 1914, says:

Thus, of the total increase in all imports of $31,000,000, foodstuffs showed a gain of $14,036,000, or 50 per cent increase on a year ago. Crude materials for use in manufacture gained $13,340,000, or 27 per cent, while manufactures for use in manufacture fell off about $14,000,000, or 13 per cent, and manufactures ready for consumption increased about $7,000,000, or 24.6 per cent, making a net decrease in all imports of manufactures of $7,000,000, or 16 per cent.

That statement is well worth the studious attention of every man who is a sincere believer in the maintenance of the economic policy very aptly described by the expression "America first." A 50 per cent increase in our imports of foodstuffs could not be otherwise than injurious to the American producers of foodstuffs who were ruthlessly thrown into competition with foreign producers. Imports of manufactures ready for consumption increased 24.6 per cent, showing that we were increasing our purchase of the products of foreign labor to the detriment of those of our people who are engaged in manufacture at home.

At the same time that those changes were taking place exports of manufactures from this country fell off $20,000,000, or 18 per cent, and exports of food products fell off $6,000,000, or 17 per cent.

Those figures cover only the month of May. Bradstreet's report for eight months, under the new tariff law, shows a decrease in our export balance of 36.3 per cent. Our exports of crude materials increased $29,000,000 during the eight months, showing that we were sending our raw materials abroad to be made into manufactured products by foreign labor.

Contrast the conditions in the middle of 1914 with those in the middle of 1915, when the war had been 11 months in progress. The first issue of Bradstreet's in the month of July, 1915, asserted that—

War orders are of enormous proportions. Brass mills in New England, sold far ahead, are intensely active; tin-plate plants are overflowing with orders, subletting of contracts being a feature; steel mills are doing more; specifications for finished steel are larger; the amount of pig iron is increasing; idleness continues to decrease; effects of war orders are sprouting out to other lines, percolating, as it were, through general trade; money is easy, and country banks are drawing funds for crop-making processes. * * * Our Chicago correspondent says the value of war orders placed throughout the country is $1,500,000,000, which at a profit of 20 per cent yields $300,000,000. Buffalo reports a large rush order for steel rails, also a large contract for steel with which to make shrapnel. A local plant manufacturing benzol has sold its full output for export. Baltimore says manufacturers of workingmen's shirts and overalls are working full time, in some cases overtime. From New Haven comes the report that some brass manufacturers have enough orders on hand to keep up activities for the next five years.

It is needless to continue these quotations from Bradstreet's. The story is pretty clear to every reader of the daily press. From a state of industrial depression due to tariff legislation which turned our export trade into an import trade—turned our producers into consumers—we were rescued by the outbreak of the war, which created a demand for a vast line of products and gave us a war-order business, which, as Bradstreet's very pertinently says, percolated through general trade.

Some of our Democratic friends are inclined to deny that the business activity we are now enjoying is a "war-order" prosperity. Others do not make express denial, but assume that by some mysterious means the present administration has brought about a revival of industrial enterprise. In all Democratic quarters there is a feverish hope that the American voters will be content with good wages and high prices, however attained, and will not study the economic conditions and the abnormal circumstances which exist.

In order to make my demonstration more comprehensive by submitting more specific evidence from a different viewpoint, I shall present a table showing the values of exports of 47 classes of articles that are essential to the maintenance of modern warfare. I shall give the export figures for a period of 10 months under Republican tariff laws, then for a corresponding period under the Democratic tariff prior to the outbreak of the war; next for the first 10 months of the war, and, finally, for the corresponding 10 months of the second year of the war. I can not conceive a fairer or more conclusive method of studying this question, if one desires to get the actual facts.

It will be seen that our total exports of these 47 classes of commodities amounted to $734,476,000 under the Republican period, but during the Democratic period the depressing effect of tariff legislation decreased the exports to $630,652,000. The first 10 months of the war increased these exports to $1,360,266,000, while continuation of the war raised the exports to $2,383,598,000 for the corresponding period in the second year of war.

But while I have a due regard for the opinions expressed by Bradstreet's and by any other commercial institution which makes a specialty of collecting facts and drawing conclusions therefrom, yet there rests upon every American citizen the ultimate duty and responsibility of studying the facts for himself and drawing his own conclusions as a test of the accuracy of the conclusions drawn by others. I have made a few excerpts from the opinions expressed by Bradstreet's. Since they are mere excerpts, they are open to the suspicion that they were selected to support the views I had already formed. I have made these quotations merely for the purpose of demonstrating that whereas the Senator from Colorado quoted Bradstreet's to show the excellent condition of industry and commerce in the United States at the present time, he could have found, if he had been so disposed, equally strong expressions showing the depression which resulted from the enactment of Democratic tariff legislation. Since there may be some doubt as to the fairness of my selection of quotations, just as there may well be a belief that the Senator from Colorado sought only those particular quotations which supported the cause he represents, I shall avoid any criticism that might thus be made by setting forth further statistics, in order that those who hear or read my remarks may ascertain for themselves whether my views are correct as to fundamental economic conditions in the United States during the closing months of the Republican administration, as compared with the Democratic administration prior to the outbreak of the war in Europe.

These statistics are also taken from Bradstreet's Review and compare the first 10 months under the Democratic tariff law with the corresponding 10 months in the previous year under the Republican law. I choose those periods for comparison for the obvious reason that the Underwood tariff law was in force only 10 months prior to the European war. The Underwood tariff law took effect October 3, 1913. During the remaining three months of that year and the first seven months of 1914 up to August 1, when the war began, there were 13,120 business failures, with total liabilities of $261,847,114, as compared with 11,736 failures in the corresponding 10 months in the last year of Republican administration, with total liabilities of $214,243,203.

In the calendar year 1912 commercial failures amounted to $98,816,000, while in 1913 they amounted to $115,863,000 and in 1914 to $175,298,000.

During the 10 months the Underwood tariff law was in effect prior to the war building expenditures amounted to only $679,000,000, as compared with $750,000,000 in the corresponding period in the previous year. For the calendar year 1912 building expenditures amounted to $879,000,000, while in 1913 they dropped to $814,000,000 and in 1914 to $729,000,000.

During the calendar year 1912 new companies with capitalization of $100,000 or more each, were organized with a total capitalization of $2,295,172,000, while in 1913 the aggregate dropped to $1,534,254,000 and in 1914 the depression had become so great that the total was only $894,947,000.

It is evident from these figures and also from the fact that bank clearings for the 10 months of the Underwood tariff law were $3,300,000,000 less than during the corresponding period under Republican administration that there was in 1913–14 a cessation of active enterprise, a halting of general industrial activity, and a well-founded apprehension on the part of careful business men that the economic policies of the Democratic Party would destroy rather than conserve or construct American industry.

STATISTICS FROM A DEMOCRATIC SOURCE.

The efficacy of a protective tariff system in promoting industrial development and in maintaining sound and active business conditions is attested not only by Bradstreet's but by the first annual report of the present administration giving an annual review of the foreign commerce of the United States. Although that report was not submitted until February, 1914, it covered the fiscal year ended June 30, 1913, a period entirely under Republican tariff legislation, though the statistics for the period were compiled by a Democratic administration.

Although we were supposed to be at that time, according to the Senator from Colorado, in a "deplorably enfeebled condition," that report declares that our foreign commerce for 1913 exceeded that for any previous year. The total of imports and exports is of less importance, however, than the character of the exports and imports. If we were increasing our imports of manufactured goods and decreasing our exports of manufactures, the showing would be bad for us, for it would show that we were paying foreign workmen to do the work we should do in our own mills. But no such showing is made. On the contrary, it is demonstrated that under Republican tariff laws we were increasing our exports of manufactures and decreasing our imports.

Commenting upon this phase of the statistical showing, the report says that the chief increase in imports was in manufacturers' materials—the commodities needed in order to keep American mills busy. The chief increase in exports was in manufactures—the product of American labor. What a magnificent tribute the newly inaugurated Democratic administration thus paid to the success of the Republican economic policy!

The report further says that—

Imports of foodstuffs, both those in a crude condition and those partly or wholly manufactured, show a slight decrease and formed a smaller percentage of the total importations than in the preceding year. Manufacturers' raw materials imported increased 79 million dollars and formed 35.04 per cent of the total, against 33.63 per cent in 1912. Manufactures for further use in manufacturing increased 56 million dollars and formed a larger percentage of the total than ever before, being 19.27 per cent, against 18.84 per cent in 1911 and 17.77 per cent in 1912. Manufactures ready for consumption increased 48 million dollars, forming 22.51 per cent of the total imports, against 23.9 per cent in 1900 and 29.23 per cent in 1890.

The increase in exports occurred chiefly in manufactures. The group, manufactures ready for consumption, showed an increase of 104 million dollars over 1912, the former high-record year, and formed a larger share of the total (31.97 per cent) than in any preceding year. Manufactures for further use in manufacturing increased 61 million dollars and formed a larger percentage of the total exports (16.83 per cent) than in any preceding year. Manufacturers' raw material exported increased but 9 million dollars and formed a smaller percentage of the total exports (30.13 per cent) than in any year since 1906. Manufactured foodstuffs increased but 2½ million dollars; but crude foodstuffs showed an increase of 82 million dollars over 1912, this increase occurring chiefly in wheat, of which the exports amounted to 89 million dollars, against 28½ million in 1912; oats also showing an increase of 12 million dollars when compared with 1912. This unusually large increase in the exportation of wheat and oats brought the total exports of agricultural products to the highest total in value in the history of the export trade, aggregating $1,121,290,345 in 1913, against $1,048,433,768 in 1912 and $1,054,405,416 in 1907, the former high-record year.

The imports by great groups, compared with the preceding year, were as follows:

Groups.	1912	1913
Crude materials for use in manufacturing	$555,986,041	$635,210,201
Foodstuffs in crude condition, and food animals	230,358,230	211,746,503
Foodstuffs partly or wholly manufactured	196,100,608	194,240,229
Manufactures for further use in manufacturing	293,739,134	349,491,928
Manufactures ready for consumption	360,018,963	408,178,704
Miscellaneous	17,091,958	14,227,651
Total	1,653,294,934	1,813,095,234

The exports by great groups, compared with the preceding year, were as follows:

Groups.	1912	1913
Crude materials for use in manufacturing	$723,008,839	$731,758,513
Foodstuffs in crude condition, and food animals	99,899,270	181,907,266
Foodstuffs partly or wholly manufactured	318,838,493	321,204,373
Manufactures for further use in manufacturing	348,149,524	408,806,949
Manufactures ready for consumption	672,268,163	776,297,360
Miscellaneous	8,155,539	8,531,897
Total domestic exports	2,170,319,828	2,428,506,358
Foreign exports	34,002,581	37,377,791
Total exports	2,204,322,409	2,465,884,149

The broadening field for the exports of our domestic products is sharply illustrated by the figures of the fiscal year 1913. Exports to the other sections of America formed 30.96 per cent of the total against 16.24 per cent in 1900, 15.50 per cent in 1890, and 11.08 per cent in 1880; while those to Europe formed 59.98 per cent of the total against 74.60 per cent in 1900, 79.74 per cent in 1890, and 86.10 per cent in 1880.

FACTS REGARDING SPECIFIC INDUSTRIES.

I have now shown by indisputable statistics that under Republican tariff policies we experienced a rapid and practically continuous industrial growth up to the time when the Democratic Party secured control of the Government and enacted a tariff law whose rates of duty were so low as to constitute in effect free trade. I have shown that because of the enactment of the Democratic tariff law our imports increased, our exports decreased, domestic business declined, our bank clearings fell off, productive enterprise was halted, and business failures increased. The statistics I have presented are general in their character, showing the effect of a free-trade policy upon our business life as a whole.

I have asserted that a protective tariff is constructive while free trade is destructive. Perhaps there are some who will not be satisfied with the demonstration made by the general statistics I have submitted. For their particular benefit and for the information of all who may be interested, I propose to submit some specific facts regarding particular industries for the purpose of further proving beyond possibility of dispute the constructive effects of a protective tariff and the destroying influence of reduction or removal of the protective duty.

Mr. President, I do not stand here advocating a tariff for the protection of the industries of Utah alone. While I am a Senator from the State of Utah I am a Senator of the United States, and deem it my duty, regardless of the special interests of my own State, to advocate such legislation as will redound to the benefit of the Nation as a whole. It is true that the wool growers of Utah, the zinc and lead and sugar producers of that State, earnestly desire a protective tariff upon their products. It is my opinion that such a protective tariff is not only justified but absolutely essential to the largest possible success of those industries.

But we are not so narrow in our vision as to be deluded with the idea that we can be prosperous through a protective tariff upon our own products if all other industries of the United States are impoverished by ruinous competition with the products of cheap labor, cheap raw material, and cheap land in Europe, South America, or Asia. We depend upon other sections of the United States for the greater part of our market for the products of Utah and, in order that we may have an active demand for our goods and a correspondingly satisfactory price, those who are engaged in other enterprises must themselves be prosperous.

PEARL BUTTONS.

We desire, for instance, to sell the products of our wool to the pearl-button producers of Illinois, who are so ably represented in some respects, but I believe ill-advisedly represented in other respects, by a distinguished Senator [Mr. LEWIS] who is a member of the opposite party. In order that the pearl-button producers of his State may be liberal buyers of wool products, it is necessary that they be protected from the low-waged labor of Japan, Germany, Austria, and other countries. In order to demonstrate the necessity for a protective tariff upon pearl buttons, I desire to call attention to the fact that 25 years ago there was no pearl-button industry in this country. About that time the McKinley bill was passed and in it was inserted a protective duty upon pearl buttons, with the result that an industry was built up now employing some 22,000 men and women. The rate of duty imposed by the Republicans was not sufficient to be prohibitive of imports, as is evidenced by the fact that during the fiscal year 1913 we imported pearl buttons to the value of $91,000, from which the Republican revenue law collected, in round numbers, $70,000. When the Underwood law was passed in October, 1913, the duty was very materially reduced, with the result that in the remainder of that fiscal year, covering a period of only nine months, we imported $170,000 worth of pearl buttons from which the Democratic revenue law collected approximately $61,800 of revenue. The imports were at the rate of $226,000 per year, or two and one-half times the imports under the Republican law. I challenge the Senator from Illinois to assert on this floor that this increased importation of pearl buttons had no injurious effect upon those citizens of his State who are engaged in this industry. It is a small industry, it is true, but it is one of those thousands of industries which go to make up our industrial commonwealth.

TABLE CUTLERY.

I am here to plead also for the table-cutlery manufacturers of New York, New Jersey, Ohio, and other States, some of which are represented on this floor by men who voted to reduce the import duty on cutlery. In the manufacture of table cutlery there was invested in 1913 more than $5,300,000 and the average production was in the neighborhood of $3,500,000. Some 4,000 men and women find employment in that industry. Evidence before the Finance Committee shows that daily wages in this industry range from $1.80 for unskilled labor to $3.15 for skilled labor, as compared with 75 cents per day to $1.42 per day in Germany and England. Under the latest Republican tariff law this industry was protected by both specific and ad valorem duties which produced a revenue amounting to about 42 per cent. Nevertheless, there was a sufficient importation to demonstrate that the duties were not prohibitive. We built up no monopoly of table-cutlery production under that law. The act of October 3, 1913, passed by a Democratic administration, reduced the tariff rate, with the result that importations more than doubled up to the time of the outbreak of the war in Europe, which temporarily shut off foreign competition. Since the war began we have made heavy exportations of table cutlery. I challenge the Democratic Senators from New York, New Jersey, or Ohio to assert on this floor that American workmen should be required to compete with the foreign workmen at the wages I have stated without the protection of the rate of duty imposed by the Republican tariff law.

TIN PLATE.

Mr. President, one of the important industries built up in this country as a direct consequence of the enactment of a Republican protective tariff law is the tin-plate industry, to which I have already alluded, and which had its origin in the State of Indiana. Study of the history of the American tin-plate industry should be of particular interest because we manufactured none of this article in this country prior to 1890, but imported our supply from Wales. The McKinley bill of 1890 imposed a duty of 2.2 cents per pound, and under the assurance thus given that the American producer would have a tariff advantage which would equalize the disadvantage of higher wages which he must pay, tin-plate factories were established first in Indiana and then in other States.

In 1913 Indiana was represented by two Democrats, who voted to reduce that duty. Let us see the difference in the effect of the Republican constructive tariff and Democratic destructive legislation. From no industry at all in 1890 we built up tin-plate production to an annual output of 18,000,000 boxes of 100 pounds each, valued at about $62,000,000, in 1912. During that same time the price of tin plate to the user was reduced from about $6 per box to about $3.20 per box. After the industry had been firmly established under the McKinley rate of 2.2 cents per pound the rate was reduced by the Payne law of 1907 to 1.2 cents per pound. Statistics show that in the matter of labor cost Wales has an advantage over the United States of about 34 cents per hundred pounds, in cost of raw material 10 cents per hundred pounds, on capital cost 13 cents per hundred, and on freight cost 40 cents per hundred, thus showing a total advantage in favor of the Welsh producer of 97 cents per hundred pounds. The Payne rate of $1.20 per hundred pounds was therefore declared to cover the difference in cost of production. The Underwood law, however, cut the duty to 15 per cent ad valorem, or about 46 cents per hundred pounds. Fortunately, the outbreak of the European war has protected us from an invasion of our markets by the factories of Wales, but American tin-plate producers were considerably startled by the announcement that 2,000 tons of tin plate have recently reached our ports from China, and that the Chinese Empire is rapidly developing a tin-plate industry which hopes to invade and capture a large portion of the American market. With all the necessary raw material at hand and with the cheapest labor to be found anywhere on the globe, China is in a fair position to take advantage of the low tariff rate imposed on tin plate in the Underwood tariff law.

DYESTUFFS.

Mr. President, I shall not hope to say anything new upon the subject of a protective tariff on dyes, but in attempting to make an address of rather comprehensive character, I shall touch upon this subject not only for the purpose of emphasizing the need of a dye industry, but also for the purpose of incorporating in my remarks some comment upon the practical admissions that have been made by our Democratic friends as to the effectiveness of a protective tariff in building up American industry. In this connection it is amazing that some Democrats criticize the Republican Party because it did not during its years of control of national policies enact a tariff law which would build up a dye industry and make us industrially independent. I have never contended that a Republican tariff law was perfect. I have always believed that some of our tariff rates were too low, even under Republican administrations, and I think quite possibly some of them were higher than necessary. In the past few have realized the importance of establishing a dye duty high enough to insure the establishment of an adequate dye industry in this country. I have pleaded for adequate protection for this industry time and time again. We have now learned by experience, and have learned not only the importance of a dye industry, but the absolute necessity of a protective tariff as a means of securing it. Our Democratic friends acknowledge the necessity of a protective duty in order to encourage American capitalists to embark in this enterprise on such a scale as to give assurance of permanency, and yet they are unwilling to establish a protective tariff at such a rate as to assure the adventurous captains of industry that when their dye plants have been established they will be secure against the destructive competition of a nation which has grim determination to monopolize the dye industry of the world. With a lack of foresight and a vacillation of policy it is characteristic of the Democratic Party to induce men to invest their capital in an enterprise which they are willing shall later be destroyed. This policy is quite consistent with that which they have pursued in foreign affairs. They have asked and encouraged the American people to go into Mexico and South America to invest in industry which should bring trade to the United States, but when a crucial test has come they have refused to give those same people the protection to which they are entitled as American citizens under the treaties made in good faith with those Southern nations.

So long as the Democratic Party remains in power there is no encouragement for any reasonably cautious man to invest his money in South American countries or in the development of a dye industry within our own borders. Personally, I advocate a high duty on dyes for three reasons. First, it will develop a new industry in this country and directly give employment to a large number of American workmen and provide a field for a larger amount of American capital. Second, it will make other industries which are users of dyes independent of foreign countries, whereas they are now entirely dependent. Third, we have had a demonstration in the case of Germany that dye plants can be readily transformed into factories for the production of explosives. In my opinion, there is nothing that we could do that would more effectively contribute to military preparedness than the establishment of a dye industry so extensive as to insure the production of all our dye material in our own country. If we should unfortunately be involved in war, every one of such dye plants would be immediately available for the production of the first essential of modern warfare.

SEWING MACHINES.

One of the great industries we have built up in this country is the manufacture of sewing machines. The largest sewing machine company in this country maintains factories also in Canada, Germany, Russia, and Scotland. It maintains factories in these countries because of the lower cost of labor. Naturally, a large part of its product in those countries is sold to users in those countries. Under a Republican tariff law, sewing machines imported into this country must pay a duty of 30 per cent ad valorem, while parts of sewing machines paid a duty of 45 per cent. The Democratic tariff law of 1913 put all these commodities on the free list. During the last quarter under the Republican tariff law our importations of sewing machines amounted to less than $18,000. During the first quarter under the Democratic free trade law the imports were $32,000, during the next quarter $219,000, during the following quarter $317,000, and in the next quarter $268,000. I challenge any gentleman on the other side of the Senate to assert that it is desirable for us to buy sewing machines made in Germany, Scotland, Canada, or Russia rather than machines made in America by American labor and American capital, particularly when the price of the machines to the retail buyer is the same in either case.

KNIT GOODS AND HOSIERY.

Mr. President, I have already stated that in my opinion Republican tariff laws have been imperfect and that sometimes our rates have been too low, as they have also, perhaps, been too high. One instance in which our rate was too low is found in the duty on hosiery. For instance, under a Republican tariff law the importations of higher grades of hosiery increased from $3,000,000 in 1898 to nearly $7,000,000 in 1907. In order to remedy this condition the Republican tariff law of 1909 slightly increased the import duty on the lower grades and the importations decreased from $6,400,000 in 1909 to $2,700,000 in 1913, a decrease of $3,700,000, or 60 per cent. This was a saving of $3,700,000 to American labor and American producers of raw material. That Republican tariff legislation kept $3,700,000 of money in this country for the development of American industry. The Underwood law greatly reduced the import duty on hosiery, and, as a consequence, importations for the 10 months the Democratic tariff law was in force, prior to the war, increased 26 per cent as compared with a similar period under the Republican law, and foreign producers were making every preparation to increase their sales in this country to an even greater extent when the war shut them off from our market and gave us an abnormal market for our product.

What is true of hosiery is true of other knit goods, the importations of which increased from $302,000 to $2,821,000 during the 10-month periods already mentioned. It is asserted by practical operators in the knit-goods industry that they were seriously injured as a result of the enactment of the Underwood tariff law, not so much because of the amount of importations as because of the lack of confidence created among the buyers. The general depression which followed the enactment of the Underwood law caused all lines of industry to buy sparingly, because of realization of the fact that the foreign producer had an open door to our market and would almost certainly cut his price to such an extent as to drive the American producer out of the field.

Hosiery, Mr. President, is an industry in which the State of North Carolina is very extensively interested, and in which it will be much more extensively interested in the future. I do not pretend to be a better representative of the interests and the sentiment of North Carolina in matters of general governmental policy than are the distinguished gentlemen who represent that State on this floor, but I do undertake to assert that the hosiery manufacturers of that State, the employees in those factories, the retail merchants, the bankers, and the professional men, all of whom are indirectly benefited by the building up of a hosiery industry, agree with my views on the subject of a protective tariff rather than with the views of the gentlemen who helped reduce the protective duty on that important article of industry and commerce.

ALUMINUM LEAF.

Mr. President, it may seem a trivial matter to mention industries which are so small as to be unknown to a vast majority of the people of this country, but our prosperity is very largely founded on a multitude of small industries which afford employment to people in small communities rather than upon industries which afford employment to large numbers of people in congested districts. For my own part, I prefer to encourage that line of manufacture which will develop small industries scattered over a wide area rather than those which tend to draw so large a proportion of our citizenry to the congested districts of our large cities. I have in mind in this connection the aluminum leaf industry, which is conducted quite extensively, although in a small way in each individual instance, in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Ohio, and Illinois. Aluminum leaf is used chiefly for ornamental purposes and by sign painters and bookbinders. Very frequently the producer has his factory in his own home and utilizes the assistance of his family. Notwithstanding the Republican import duty of about 70 per cent ad valorem, German producers were selling so extensively in this country that the Ways and Means Committee of the House was asked in 1913 to increase the duty. That request was refused, and the duty was reduced to about 25 per cent ad valorem, under which rate German factories immediately began to supply our market, and the aluminum leaf beaters of this country were compelled to discontinue their operations.

As in the case of a great many other industries, the war shut off foreign importations, and the American aluminum leaf beaters resumed operation and are now successfully plying their trade. They do so, however, under the handicap of the certain knowledge that as soon as the war is over Germany will be as free to seize our market as she was before the war began. Under present tariff laws there is no encouragement whatever for any man to attempt to build up an extensive aluminum leaf industry in this country. I challenge the Senator from New Jersey to defend the reduction of the duty on aluminum leaf.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

My interest in manufacturing industries is no more earnest than my interest in agricultural industries, for I recognize the fact that the very character of our resources makes agriculture our fundamental industry. Among our agricultural products which need the aid of a protective tariff in order to successfully meet foreign competition is sugar. To this subject I shall devote no attention on this occasion for the reason that my own State is largely interested in this industry, and I desire to avoid even the appearance of being a special pleader on the tariff question. But there are other branches of agriculture in which other sections of the United States are deeply interested, and I stand here to plead their cause.

It has been the consistent effort of the Democratic Party for many years to create the impression that the protective tariff is of benefit to manufacturers only and of no benefit to agricultural producers. This is not the fact, as the records will show. Agriculture reached its greatest depression during the period from 1893 to 1897, when Democratic tariff laws were in effect. Although there were hungry thousands in our cities, the farmers of the Middle West used for fuel the wheat and corn they could not sell. This depression was due no more to the reduction of the tariff on agricultural products than to the reduction of the tariff on other commodities, creating a general depression throughout the country and diminishing the demand for agricultural products.

As I have frequently remarked, the only fair basis for comparison of imports is the 10 months' period during which the Democratic tariff law was in effect prior to the war. I shall, therefore, present a very brief table of statistics showing the imports of certain important agricultural products during that 10 months' period as compared with a corresponding period in the previous year under the Republican tariff law, from which table it will be seen that our imports of $72,694,000 in the Republican period were increased to $174,622,000 in the Democratic period.

	Ten months ended July 31—
	1913, Republican peace period.	1914, Democratic peace period.	1915, Democratic war period.
Meat and dairy products	$12,460,501	$40,545,512	$30,421,210
Wool, classes 1 and 2	13,997,460	38,118,561	54,240,425
Breadstuffs	13,413,245	34,945,247	14,916,762
Vegetables	9,046,224	13,760,680	8,172,462
Cattle, hogs, sheep, etc	8,649,817	22,943,695	17,931,670
Hay	1,027,696	1,505,389	83,199
Broom corn	11,241	155,220	1,582
Plants, shrubs, etc	2,065,103	2,221,873	2,242,683
Seeds	11,872,964	19,336,225	20,501,362
Eggs	[1] 150,000	1,089,941	376,504
Total	72,694,351	174,622,355	148,937,859

[1] Estimated.

While those imports were small compared with our total production, I assert that they materially affected the prices our producers received, because those imports could have been very largely increased if the American producer had not met the competition.

EGGS.

Mr. President, as we citizens of Utah have no direct interest in the fish industry of the coast country, neither have we a direct interest in egg production so far as it relates to foreign competition. We feel considerable concern, however, when we learn of the extent to which Chinese egg producers have been able to sell their product along the Pacific coast. We are sorry to say that this invasion of our markets has been so extensive that the State legislatures of Oregon and California deemed it advisable to enact legislation calculated to exclude Chinese eggs from sale in those States. There could scarcely be a stronger testimonial to the soundness of Republican protective tariff policies than this action on the part of State legislatures in trying to make up, by local legislation, for the faults of laws passed by a Democratic national administration. It is unfortunate that the Supreme Court of the State of Oregon has declared the statute in that State unconstitutional, for the farmers and the egg consumers of Oregon are now entirely without protection from the cheap product of China.

Removal of the duty on fresh eggs and reduction of the duty on dried eggs hurt American industry in two respects: It permitted importations and a consequent drain upon our finances, and also encouraged American capital to go to China for investment in the egg industry. An American factory producing dried eggs has been closed and the same concern has begun operations in Hongkong, China.

During the 10 months the Underwood tariff law was in operation before the outbreak of the war, 6,000,000 dozen eggs were imported, chiefly from China, compared with none at all during the corresponding period under the Republican tariff law when there was a duty of 5 cents per dozen. Since the outbreak of the war importations of fresh eggs have somewhat diminished, but there has been a corresponding increase in importation of dried eggs, no figures being available except a statement in a consular report from China that consignment had been arranged for the shipment of 7,500,000 pounds of dried eggs to New York City and another for 656,000 pounds to Seattle. Since it takes three dozen eggs to make a pound of dried product, it is evident that these two shipments, amounting to 8,000,000 pounds, represent an importation of 24,000,000 dozen Chinese eggs. I have no hesitancy in asserting that the man who orders eggs at a restaurant or hotel, or the housewife who buys them in the market, has not procured them 1 cent per dozen cheaper on account of these large importations, though it is altogether probable that the bakers and restaurant keepers who have purchased these eggs from the importers have made a considerable profit by buying the cheaper product "laid in China."

For a great many years the State of Oregon was represented on this floor by two Republican Senators, who supported Republican protective tariff principles. It is difficult to believe that the people of the State have changed their views upon the question of a protective tariff, especially since their legislature passed and their governor signed a local measure designed to accomplish the same purpose as a protective tariff, so far as it relates to importation of eggs. I challenge either of the Senators from Oregon who supported the Underwood tariff law to defend this reduction or removal of the tariff on eggs, and challenge them to assert here that they deem it wise economic policy for the United States to encourage the sale of cheap Chinese eggs in America.

I was considerably impressed a month or so ago when the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], in the discussion of questions relating to the Military Establishment, made the assertion that the American soldier, like the American laborer, demands to be better fed, better clothed, and better taken care of than those of any other nation on earth. He asserted that if we placed our Army on the same basis with some other army, we would not have a corporal's guard in the United States. With this I entirely agree, but I am utterly unable to harmonize his statement of facts in this regard with his action in voting for a tariff-for-revenue-only bill. I assume from his declaration that he approves the demand of the American soldier and the American laborer to be better fed, better clothed, and better cared for than those of other lands. If this be his attitude, how can he justify his vote for a tariff law that does not make allowance for the difference in the standards of living here and abroad? I have no hesitancy in asserting the belief that the people of his State agree with his attitude upon the standard of living which should be maintained in this country as compared with the standards maintained across the sea, but it is difficult to believe that if they entertain that view they also agree with him in his attitude in favor of what is practically free trade in the commodities with which we have serious competition from abroad.

I could proceed and show similar conditions with nearly every paragraph of nearly every schedule of the present Democratic tariff act, but I shall not take the time of the Senate to do so.

LIST OF FACTS PROVEN.

In the wide range which I have attempted to cover for the purpose of demonstrating to a mathematical certainty that a protective tariff is constructive while free trade is destructive, I have conclusively established six things:

First. That under a protective tariff we enjoyed an industrial prosperity which increased much more rapidly than our population.

Second. That this prosperity continued up to the time of the enactment of the Democratic tariff act of 1913.

Third. That immediately following the enactment of that law our imports increased and our exports decreased, causing a loss of $260,000,000 in our balance of trade in the 10 months before the war began.

Fourth. That this drain upon our wealth caused the curtailment of American industry, made business men apprehensive as to the future, discouraged new undertakings, diminished all lines of business activity, threw workmen out of employment, and increased the number and magnitude of commercial failures.

Fifth. That this condition of depression continued until the outbreak of the war in Europe cut off imports and gave us an abnormal and enormous demand for our products, chiefly of those classes essential for the conduct of modern warfare.

Sixth. That the evidence of the general constructive effect of a protective tariff and the destructive effect of a free-trade policy is confirmed by numerous citations of the effect of those policies upon specific industries of varied character and located in various sections of the United States.

No mathematical demonstration could be more conclusive than the showing thus made. From every viewpoint that it is possible to take, we reach the conviction that a protective tariff is absolutely essential to the prosperity of American industry if we are to maintain the higher scale of wages and the higher standards of living which we have adopted in this country.

With such evidence as this before them, the great jury of American voters will declare when they render their verdict in November that the Republican Party is not guilty of the charge that it brought the business of this country to a "deplorably enfeebled condition." Rather will the jury record an expression of confidence in the policies and principles of that party and will rebuke the party whose legislation and administration brought on a period of depression relieved only by the extreme necessities of nations involved in the most sanguinary war in history.

THE TARIFF AND REVENUE.

Turning now from a study of import duties as a means of protection to a study of such duties as a source of revenue, which is the immediate question before us, we find that Democratic tariff legislation was ruinous not only to the industries of this country, but to the finances of the Federal Treasury itself. Not long ago a very interesting and instructive computation was made showing that from August, 1897, when the Dingley tariff law went into effect, down to the repeal of the Payne-Aldrich law, a period of 194 months, our total ordinary receipts amounted to $9,677,952,080, or an average of $49,886,351 per month. During the same period the ordinary disbursements amounted to $9,293,083,392, or an average of $47,902,492 per month. This shows an average monthly surplus of nearly $2,000,000 under Republican laws governing revenues and appropriations.

During the first 27 months under Democratic legislation, up to the time this computation was made, the average monthly ordinary revenue was $58,505,483, and the average monthly expenditure $60,070,670, or an average monthly deficit of $1,565,187.

Under this administration the Government has had poverty continually staring it in the face.

That poverty has existed in spite of continually increasing taxes imposed upon our own people. In the last fiscal year of the Republican tariff law we collected 47 per cent of our revenues from the customs tax upon foreign goods imported into this country. During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916, we collected only 30 per cent of our revenue from foreign importers and 70 per cent by means of internal revenues paid by our own people. The same administration which enacted laws tending to destroy American industry increased the burden of taxes American enterprise must pay.

The relative merits of Republican tariff laws and of Democratic tariff laws, from the standpoint of revenue, can be very clearly seen from a comparative table of imports, customs revenues, and average duty rates for the past seven years. In order that the comparison may be very conveniently made, I have had a table prepared by fiscal years. It must be borne in mind, however, that the Democratic tariff did not take effect simultaneously with the beginning of a fiscal year, nor did all the provisions of the Democratic law take effect at the same time. In general, the law went into effect on October 3, 1913. In the case of wool the Republican rates were continued two months, and in the case of Angora goat hair for three months, and in the case of wool manufactures for three months. On sugar and molasses the Republican rates were continued for five months. We must remember, therefore, in considering the comparative statistics, that the revenues for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1914, were derived entirely from a Republican tariff up to October 3, 1913, and in part from Republican tariffs up to March 1, 1914. But for this fact the revenues would have been much smaller than they were.

The following tabulation shows imports, customs revenues derived therefrom, and average rate of duty for fiscal years ended with June 30 for the past seven years:

Year ended June 30—	Value of imports.	Duties collected.	Average duty rate.
			Per cent.
1910[1]	$1,556,947,437	$333,683,445	21.4
1911[2]	1,527,228,105	314,497,071	20.5
1912[3]	1,653,264,934	311,257,348	18.8
1913[4]	1,813,008,231	318,142,344	17.5
1914[5]	1,893,925,657	292,128,523	15.4
1915[6]	1,674,169,741	209,268,107	12.5
1916[7]	2,197,883,510	211,863,222	9.72

[1] Payne law took effect Aug. 6, 1909—seven months.
[2] First full year Payne law.
[3] Democrats came into control. Revision of tariff by schedules undertaken; vetoed by Taft.
[4] Democrats in complete control. General revision under way.
[5] Underwood law took effect Oct. 4, 1913—nine months.
[6] Eleven months war period.
[7] Full war period.

If this amount of $2,197,883,510 imports had paid the same average rate of duty as was paid on imports for the year ending June 30, 1913, under Republican law, namely, 18 per cent, the amount collected would have been $395,619,031 instead of $211,866,222, the amount collected under the Underwood law, or a gain to the Treasury of the United States of $183,752,809. With this additional amount collected from customs, with the unnecessary and extravagant appropriations of at least $150,000,000 in this year's appropriations which should and could have been saved to the Government, it would have amounted to $333,752,809, a sufficient amount to meet the unjust taxes imposed upon the people by this pending revenue bill.

Thus we see that by their repeal or reduction of duties upon foreign goods imported into this country the Democratic Party cut off more than $100,000,000 a year of national revenue, at the same time throwing open the doors of our markets to the goods of the foreign producer. That reduction of customs revenue at the beginning of an administration which has had no parallel in extravagant expenditures made necessary the raising of revenue from other sources. The sources to which recourse was had were the income tax, increased corporation taxes, and various stamp taxes and license taxes not previously imposed upon the American people in time of peace.

This increase in taxation, coincident with legislation which throws the American producer into ruinous competition with the cheap labor of Europe and Asia, is doubly subject to criticism because it not only discriminates against American citizens but against one portion of the American people and in favor of another portion. Under the system of taxation established and maintained by the Democratic Party revenues are collected in an unfair and indefensible degree from the residents of the Northern States while the people of the South are correspondingly relieved of the tax burden.

In order to show in detail that this is true I shall compare taxes paid by 12 Southern States with taxes paid by 12 Northern States, the 12 Northern States being so selected as to represent the East, the Middle West, and the extreme West.

The 12 Southern States are Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia.

The 12 Northern and Western States are California, Connecticut, Illinois, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin.

Here is a table that shows what each of these States in the two groups paid in the form of war taxes, corporation taxes, and income taxes, respectively, during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916:

That comparison of figures should be of interest to all American citizens who believe in fair play and of special personal interest to residents of the northern and western States.

I do not believe there are many people who believe in the policy of Rob Roy, appropriated by the Democratic administration:

Let him take who has the power; let him keep who can.

When the present bill becomes a law the unfair and indefensible discrimination will be further increased.

We Republicans are frequently asked, "What would you have done?" this question applying particularly to the management of foreign affairs. There is no reason why the same question should not be applied to domestic questions and, among others, to the question of revenue legislation.

That we would have enacted an income-tax law is evidenced by the fact that a Republican Congress passed the act submitting the income-tax amendment to a vote of the States. We would have continued the policy of customs duties high enough to provide both revenue and protection, revising the duties from time to time upon information secured by a tariff board. Such import duties, together with the usual internal revenues and the income taxes, would have produced sufficient funds to pay all the wise expenditures of the Government. We would have kept our expenditures within those revenues for all the ordinary purposes of government. We would have continued the tariff board for the purpose of gathering and submitting to Congress information upon which scientific revision of the tariff could have been conducted. We would not have imposed war taxes in time of peace; we would not have destroyed the protective tariff; we would not have enacted a less-than-revenue tariff law; we would not have undertaken extravagant and useless expenditures.

I have now enumerated four serious mistakes made by the Democratic Party in fiscal legislation:

First, the abandonment of the protective policy.

Second, reduction of import duties below the point of needed revenue production.

Third, imposition of burdensome and irritating internal taxes as a substitute for a portion of the import tax upon foreign goods shipped into this country.

Fourth, imposition of taxes which bear unequally and unfairly upon different sections of the country.

Those four mistakes relate to the raising of revenue. A fifth but no less important mistake made in fiscal affairs is in the matter of appropriations.

The Democratic Party was amply warned as to the effects of its revenue legislation. It knew, or should have known, that receipts of the Federal Treasury would be reduced. It was pledged to reduction of expenditures, to the reduction of the number of offices, to the adoption of more economical methods in Government service.

In the face of certain reduction of revenues and in spite of its pledge to reduce expenses, it proceeded to make the largest appropriations in our history, as shown by the following comparisons of appropriations for the fiscal years 1912 to 1917.

The increase for 1917 over 1916 was $515,446,670.

The increase in 1915, 1916, and 1917 over 1912, 1913, and 1914 is $716,664,415.

Agricultural appropriation act, protection of the watersheds of navigable streams, 1918	2,000,000
Federal farm-loan act, subscription for stock of Federal land banks, if not subscribed by national farm-loan associations	9,000,000
Total	316,875,366

So the total direct and authorized appropriations and contracts amounts to the enormous sum of $1,947,259,048.64.

O national preparedness, what wanton extravagance has been charged to thy name!

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE and Mr. BANKHEAD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, it is very desirable that there should be a brief executive session. I have been authorized by the Committee on Foreign Relations to make an important report to the Senate. I wish to make the report in order that it may be printed for the information of the Senate. I am told by the executive clerk that the Executive Calendar will not take more than three or four minutes to dispose of. I am going to move, with the consent of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], in charge of the revenue bill, an executive session; but I wish to repeat to Senators that the executive session will probably not take more than 8 or 10 minutes, and then it is the purpose of the Senator from North Carolina immediately to move that the Senate resume legislative session.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to state in that connection that I shall insist upon going on with the revenue bill to-night. I trust, therefore, Senators will not leave on account of the executive session and will not leave at all this evening until we have finished the consideration of this bill.

Mr. STONE. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will allow me, I desire to add that I shall ask the Senate to remain in session until we have finished the bill or have been able to reach some satisfactory agreement as to a time to vote upon it. I hope that we may finish the bill to-night; but, of course, I do not mean to say that I would want to stay here or would want to keep Senators here later than 11 o'clock, say. If we can not by that time finish the bill, then I will be glad to have an agreement to have a vote early to-morrow.

Mr. GALLINGER. Would not the Senator think it wise, in view of the fact that some other Senators wish to speak, to ask unanimous consent for a vote on this bill at 12 o'clock to-morrow, with a recess from this evening until 10 to-morrow?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. Pvesident, in order that there may be no misunderstanding, I will not consent to any agreement to fix the time to vote on this bill until the amendments which I have proposed are voted upon. I offered an amendment at half past 10 o'clock this morning, and it has now been debated for seven or eight hours.

Mr. STONE. I wish to ask Senators if these matters can not be arranged after the executive session?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think they can be arranged then just as well.

Mr. STONE. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

THE REVENUE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the order of the Senate heretofore made fixing the hour of half past 6 as the hour for taking a recess or adjourning be suspended for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina that the previous order of the Senate as to the limitation of the length of the daily session be suspended for the day.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I ask for order in the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate can not proceed unless there is order. The Senator from Iowa has the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I duplicate the request that we should have order. The Senator from Iowa submitted an amendment a number of hours ago, but general discussion has intervened, and I think the Senator is entitled now to speak to his amendment and have it voted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The remarks of the Senator from New Hampshire are well timed. The Chair asks Senators to be in order, so that the Senator from Iowa may be heard.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I hope that the suggestion I made a few moments ago will not be accepted by anyone as indicating an intimation upon my part to prolong the consideration of the bill before us. The amendment which I offered, and which every Senator here, of course, has forgotten, was submitted about half past 10 o'clock this morning. It is now half past 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and if there have been any words said in the meantime respecting the amendment which I offered, I am sure that they could be compressed within the limits of 10 or 15 minutes.

I have no objection whatever to general debate; it is very illuminating and very helpful—I mean on the stump instead of here in the Senate—and I have no doubt these arguments will be found persuasive throughout the country. The only application that I observe which they have to the amendment which has been offered is this:

My Democratic friends have proven very conclusively that the Republicans are absolutely incompetent, if not enemies of their country; my friends on the Republican side have proven, with equal conclusiveness, that the Democrats are absolutely unworthy to pass upon the affairs of a great Republic. If both of these things be true, we certainly have vast need of a tariff commission when we come to compose a tariff law. If that be not the application of these very eloquent and very learned arguments, I fail to catch the application.

Let me remind you what the amendment is. It is to strike out "$7,500," proposed in the House bill as compensation for the members of the tariff commission, and to substitute a compensation of $10,000 per year.

Mr. President, we are progressing. There are but two classes of statesmen now who do not need the services of a tariff commission, and I am sure those classes are diminishing in number all the while. First, there are those who believe that no duty can be too high. I agree that a tariff commissiol can be of no value to men who hold that economic view. There are men apparently who believe that no duties can be too low. A tariff commission can not be helpful to those men, but between the two there is a great army both in Congress and out of it who believe that there are limits both up and down for tariff duties, and I care not whether the student is a disciple of protection or whether he is a believer in a tariff for revenue alone, the work of a tariff commission is absolutely indispensable to him. If, on the other side of the Chamber, you are making an inquiry to ascertain the maximum revenue that can be derived upon imports with the minimum imposition of duties, you need a tariff commission—a body of men who have carefully observed the workings of the commerce of the world. If, on the other hand, on this side we believe that there should be duties upon all competitive imports that will fairly and adequately protect the American factory and the American workingman we need to know what duties will accomplish that result. I want the commission to be composed of three of the biggest and brainiest Democrats in the United States and three of the biggest and brainiest Republicans in the United States—three men who believe in the theory which our Democratic friends adopt for a tariff law and three men who believe in the theory or policy which the Republican Party adopts for a tariff law; and if the President of the United States fails in his appointments to recognize the real spirit of this law, he will be false to the duty which the statute will impose upon him.

Mr. President, it is only a question of compensation so far as the technical amendment is concerned; but the real question is the standing of the commission in the affairs of the country, and the influence which its investigations and reports will have upon the legislation of the country. I say no more. I only reassert that if we reduce this compensation below the salaries which we have provided for other commissions and tribunals which are not more important, we will have said to the country in advance that we are not sincere in our belief respecting the helpfulness of the commission we are about to create.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I am just as earnestly in favor of the commission, and believe as much in the necessity of the commission, and that the commission should be permanent, as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. My conviction on the subject grew out of an effort, three years ago, to help make tariff schedules, and a consciousness of the necessity for such an organization to give facilities to do the work intelligently. So upon that line of the argument I fully indorse everything that he says. I do not believe the character of a commission will be affected one particle by changing the salary from $7,500 to $10,000, any more than I believe a change of the salary of a Senator would change the character of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not yield to the Senator. I am going to say what I have to say in about three minutes more, and sit down.

The sole question is, first, would the difference in the salary affect the character of the men who will go on the commission? I do not believe a Senator believes that it will. I do not believe the salaries have affected the other men who have been appointed recently on commissions. I am opposed to creating any more commissions at over $7,500 salary. We succeeded a few days ago in cutting down the salary of the members of the Shipping Board to $7,500. Without regard to party, we voted for it and cut it down. We came very near stopping the $10,000 salaries of the Rural Credits Board, and I believe to-day we would stop it. The first chance I get I am going to vote to reduce the salaries of the members of the Federal Trade Commission. If we put this up to $10,000, it is the end of the fight on this subject with reference to these commissions. You can not stop any of them.

It is not a reflection upon this board, because we have just done the same thing in our last action as to the Shipping Board. The Senate amended the House bill, and cut it to $7,500.

Our judges of the Circuit Court of Appeals get $7,500 a year. Their position is just as high and they draw just as able lawyers as are found in the country, and this commission will draw to itself just as able students of economy or students of statistics or students of the tariff as there are in the country if the salaries are left at $7,500.

It is simply a question not as to the character of the men but whether you want to increase these salaries. I am opposed to paying the increase to them. The House of Representatives fixed the salary this time, not the Committee on Ways and Means. The Committee on Ways and Means reported it out at $10,000. On the floor Republicans and Democrats joined, by an overwhelming vote, and cut the salary to $7,500. The Committee on Finance agreed to a salary of $7,500. The Democratic conference agreed to a salary of $7,500. It is all right if the Senate wants to change it, but I believe in the $7,500 salary, and I have voted for it all along.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia has largely answered what I would have asked, because I am in complete sympathy with him; and I only wish to ask if the salaries of the members of the legislature of the State of Georgia or the State of Illinois, or the Members of the House, or, as he has already suggested, if the salaries of the Members of the Senate were increased, whether it would increase the quality or the character of the men?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not one particle.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that is entirely correct, and I am in complete sympathy with the Senator from Georgia all the way through. I will vote to reduce the salaries of the commissions now appointed—the Federal Trade Commission, the Federal Reserve Board, and the others. The idea that the respectability, the ability, or the dignity of a commission, or the appointive officials on it, is fixed by the compensation is an erroneous one. If that is so, then let us double our salaries and double our respectability. [Laughter.] If one is a good argument, the other is a good argument.

Senators know very well that for some years a Member of the House and of the Senate has had no time to carry on any private occupation. Since I became a Member of this body in April, 1913, I have wholly abandoned my profession. It is five years in September since I have been in a court room or earned a dollar in any legitimate occupation [laughter], in anything relating to my profession. I see that the Senators are quick to understand. I wished to see whether there was that lively sense of apprehension when I used the phrase. Having satisfied myself in that indirect way, I will now withdraw it.

Mr. President, $7,500 has compensated Members of Congress for a long time. We knew when we were candidates what the compensation would be, and, so far as those who are now sitting are concerned, for their tenures of office, it is fixed. It can not be increased in any lawful way. But $7,500 will compensate this board as well as it compensates us or the other branch of Congress, the House Members. If we undertook to raise the compensation of our successors, I know full well what the cry would be. Some of the older Members of this body know it. Some who have served for many years in the House know it. The instant you undertook to raise the compensation of Representatives or Senators to $10,000 or $12,000 from one end of this country to another, from a large part of the public press of this country, would go up a shout of "Salary grab." I have heard that, both in State legislatures and elsewhere, until I am tired of it.

Within the last 10 years we have doubled the salaries of members of the Illinois Legislature, and I do not believe that membership is one particle better than it was before. In that time about the same charges and scandals of a more or less vital character have happened in the Illinois Legislature, with double the salary, as happened before. It has not increased either the character or the respectability of any legislative body with which I have any acquaintance. I do not reflect upon the legislature and say it is any worse than it was before, but I do say it is no better than it was before. The mere matter of salary decides nothing. Public opinion and character determine it. If these gentlemen who wish to serve on these boards can not serve for $7,500 a year, then it is time Members of Congress ceased serving for $7,500 a year.

I am tired of bureaucrats, anyhow, myself. I do not care with what party they are affiliated. This Government now is a bureaucrat-ridden Government. A lot of supercilious gentlemen, with affiliations both Republican and Democratic, are sitting at the heads of departments, great and small, who could not be elected town constable in Georgia or in Illinois. They know nothing of public sentiment. They care less. They are routine in their characteristics. They care little for the gentlemen who have to bear the burden and heat of the day in both political parties. They make it impossible for a man to be self-respecting when he goes back home, if he spends his time wearing out his shoe leather around departments here more than legislating. I do not care what administration it is, whether it is Democratic or Republican, it is the same old thing. I will never vote while I am a Member of this body to pay any appointive officer more than the Members of Congress are willing to pay themselves in common decency and to maintain their own self-respect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. CUMMINS and Mr. SMITH of Georgia called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] and will allow my vote to stand. I ask that this announcement shall stand for the rest of the votes to be taken on this bill to-day.

Mr. CURTIS. On account of the double transfer that has been made, I vote "yea."

So Mr. CUMMINS's amendment was rejected.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I should like to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 32, line 17, after the word "association," add the words "and cooperative banks organized and operated for mutual purposes and without profit."

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, in the State which I represent there are a large number of cooperative banks which are entirely mutual in their character and which are not operated for profit. They are in the same class as the domestic building and loan associations, and I think they should be included in the provision in the bill which excludes from taxation organizations of that character.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts is a very proper one and it ought to be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I desire to present an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill under the head of free list the following: "news print paper and materials entering into its making."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I am prompted to offer this amendment from the fact that the greed of the Paper Trust has driven the price of paper up to an almost inordinate figure. Many small papers have been driven out of existence through the advance in the price of print paper and many of the large papers of the country have curtailed their size in consequence of it. I met yesterday in this city a gentleman connected with one of the papers here who said that the increase in the cost of print paper had driven up their weekly expenses $100.

I believe this would result in the lowering of the price of paper. To my mind there is no warrant for the maintenance of a duty on paper. I feel that the diffusion of public intelligence demands this correction in this instance, and I trust the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, we have adopted an amendment to the present bill which places all print paper upon the free list where the invoice price is less than 5 cents a pound.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I realize that, but there is print paper that has been forced up to a price of over 5 cents, and I am sure in instances to 8 cents. I am perfectly conscious of the adoption of the amendment yesterday, but there is no reason or warrant for the maintenance of the duty on print paper. The Paper Trust, as I said, has fattened through greed at the expense of every paper user in the land.

Mr. SIMMONS. News-print paper has not reached 5 cents a pound; it has not yet reached 4 cents a pound; I think not much over 3 cents. We put it very much above the present price, anticipating that possibly there might be an additional rate. The representatives of the newspapers who called upon me with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] thought that 5 cents a pound would certainly secure to them the benefits that we expected when we adopted the present tariff law by the rates fixed there.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am conscious of the fact that it was raised to that limit, but while the Senator says gentlemen called on him with reference to this print paper, representatives of papers and magazines and other publishers have called upon me with reference to it, and it took very little argument to convince me that this was a most unwarranted abuse and it should be abolished by putting it on the free list. I ask for the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate in reference to this matter, but I do not think the amendment should be adopted without careful investigation. There is no dividing line in the trade directly between news print paper and other print paper. It is a matter that was in controversy for a great many years. At the time the present tariff law was enacted it was the consensus of opinion that the price of 2½ cents would cover the price of paper that was ordinarily used by the newspapers. There were no reasons why the revenue should be lost and other print paper placed on the free list; and Congress at that time determined to adopt 2½ cents as the dividing line between the paper that should go on the free list and that that should be taxed.

On account of the very great increase in the price to-day newsprint paper is rising above the 2½ cent rate, but it has not so greatly risen above it. To the small newspapers it is approaching 3½ or 4 cents, but to the average trade the price is not above 3 cents.

When the Committee on Finance placed the amendment in the bill and raised the limit to 5 cents for the admission of paper into this country free of duty they certainly reached the outside limit so far as the tariff is concerned, because all the class of paper that is used to print a newspaper on will be imported into this country at a price not less than 5 cents a pound. There is no reason to abandon the revenue on the print paper that is above 5 cents a pound, because the Almighty knows this Government needs some revenue to-day, and it is going to need it, and all the revenue is not very great. There is no reason on earth, after we kept the faith establishing a line of demarcation as to the admission of news-print paper free of duty, why we should abandon the revenue that is derived on other classes of print paper, and I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I have no doubt about the need of revenue; we all agree to that. But there are places upon which we could place the revenue with infinitely more propriety than on print paper, and I insist on the justice and right of my amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, when the matter was before the Senate two years or three years ago and it was proposed to make a violent reduction in the duty on print paper I opposed it as best I could on the ground that it would destroy the American industry and transfer the business to our neighbors on the north. That result has happened. We are to-day importing eight times as much print paper from Canada as we imported in the year 1912. I do not know that putting it on the free list would do very much harm at the present time to those in this country who formerly have been engaged and perhaps to a very limited extent are now engaged in the manufacture of print paper.

But what I wanted to say, and all I care to say, is that we have lost this industry and yet I feel sure that we ought to get some revenue from the product that is coming in from Canada.

For that reason I shall vote against putting it on the free list, simply for the purpose of saving revenue rather than for the purpose of trying to save an industry which has been ruthlessly slaughtered by a mistaken notion as to what was good policy in reference to this great industry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CUMMINS. I offer an amendment to be inserted at the end of section 92.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The commission shall have power, and it shall be its duty, to investigate wages paid in foreign countries and the United States in competitive industries and all other items which enter into the cost of production with respect to all imports competing in domestic markets or domestic production, shall ascertain and report what import duties will be required in order to equalize the conditions under which foreign commodities are offered for sale in domestic markets as compared with the conditions under which similar commodities made in the United States can be offered for sale in the same market.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have but a word to say on the amendment. It enlarges a little the scope and power of the commission and directs it to make inquiries into a field and to make a report concerning a field very material for one who desires to construct a tariff law along protective lines.

If it is the purpose of our Democratic friends to make it difficult if not impossible for the tariff commission to furnish the facts or the information which are necessary in constructing a protective tariff law, then, of course, this amendment ought not to be adopted, but I have assumed that the purpose here was to create the commission broad enough and big enough to furnish information to every school of economic thought. I am not meaning that any member of the commission will twist or turn or pervert the truth in any way, but it makes a vast difference whether the field which furnishes the information for one tariff law is explored or whether it is closed.

I have another amendment and I might as well say what I have to say about it now so that it can be voted upon without any undue delay.

I have an amendment which authorizes any three members of the commission to prosecute any inquiry within the scope of the act and to make any report which the act authorizes. This is for the same purpose of allowing the commission to be serviceable not only to the Democratic Party but to the Republican Party as well. Otherwise the commission may fail utterly in its mission.

I hope, of course, that the commission will be united in all its inquiries; that it will take a broad, comprehensive view of commerce and our relations to foreign countries; but inasmuch as we are creating a commission of six, never before known I think in the history of commissions, and inasmuch as we are contemplating that three of its members shall be Democrats and three of them Republicans, it is but fair, indeed it is necessary, that the three Democrats or the three Republicans can, in the event of difference of opinion amongst them so that there shall be no majority, prosecute such investigation as may seem wise.

That is the whole purpose and effect of the amendment I have offered and the amendment which I shall offer in a moment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Has the Senator in his hand the amendment which he is just now offering?

Mr. CUMMINS. Here is one of them, but it is not the one I sent up a moment ago to the desk.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would be glad to hear the amendment pending read.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, we can not agree to that amendment. It is an effort to direct the attention of the commission in a partisan line. We think that the scope of the bill already gives them the right to make the fullest kind of investigation without an indication of a purpose to turn it toward protection.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, they must turn it in some direction.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I simply want to say that this amendment is substantially the same amendment I offered this morning in the nature of a substitute, and the same amendment that I have been prepared to offer as a provision to section 90. I hope the Senator from Iowa will call for a record vote on this proposition.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I should like to make a suggestion of an addition to the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Iowa. After the word "markets," in line 11 of the amendment, I desire to add the words "and to investigate the Paris Economy Pact and similar organizations in Europe."

Mr. CUMMINS. I am very glad to accept the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts and to make it a part of my amendment, because it falls directly within the purpose and spirit of the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think if the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa were offered separately, it might be accepted; but if it is to be adopted as a part of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa I certainly should have to object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey (when Mr. CHAMBERLAIN's name was called). I am requested to state that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is unavoidably absent, and that he is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. COLT (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as I did before, I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). Making the same transfer of my pair as I did on the last vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I make the same announcement about the transfer of my pair as I did on the last vote, and I vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. OVERMAN's name was called). Making the same announcement as I did on the last vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. OWEN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). Making the same transfer as on the last vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. SHAFROTH (when his name was called). Making the same transfer I did on the last vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). Making the same transfer of my pair that I did on the last vote, and continuing it for the balance of the day, I vote "nay."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MYERS. My colleague [Mr. WALSH] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT].

Mr. TAGGART. My colleague, the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] is unavoidably absent. If he were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. SHERMAN. Has the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I desire to transfer my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK];

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS]; and

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE].

Mr. WEEKS (after having voted in the affirmative). The senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is not now present, and I can not, therefore, make the transfer which I did previously. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. ROBINSON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] and vote "nay."

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to state that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] is unavoidably absent.

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 29, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], and the present occupant of the Chair being in the Chamber, a quorum is present. The amendment is rejected.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 91, on page 137, after line 9, it is proposed to insert:

Any three members of the commission shall have the authority to carry forward any investigation within the scope of this act and make any report herein provided for.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, as I have explained, the amendment I now offer is really a part of the amendment just rejected. I offer it rather to complete the record, and from my point of view to show that the effort to create a bipartisan commission will end in the creation of a strictly partisan commission.

I do not intend to ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word against this amendment. I hope that the entire commission will be able to work together. If we say they are to report three and three, we invite them to separate and to be entirely partisan. That is all I wish to say.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I want to say just a word or two on this amendment. The remark made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] calls to my mind and emphasizes a provision in this bill in relation to the personnel of the commission, dividing it between the political parties. While I think I would favor the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], I can see some merit in the objection made by the Senator from Georgia. That, however, ought to be eliminated by making this a nonpartisan commission, instead of a bipartisan commission. I know that the intention of the Senators who favor the language of the bill, which says that not more than three members of the tariff commission shall belong to any one political party, is of the very best, and their idea is to make the commission nonpartisan; but, in my judgment, it makes it a partisan commission. That language ought to be stricken out, and there ought to be no provision in the bill in reference to the politics or political affiliations of any of the members of the commission.

We ought to have—and I think we all want—a nonpartisan commission. Just the moment we provide that some members of the commission must belong to one party and some to another, we make of it a bipartisan commission; and the men who are appointed, for instance as Republicans, will feel that on the commission they represent the Republican Party, and the men who are appointed as Democrats will feel that they represent the Democratic Party. We have nothing in our entire Government that comes nearer being nonpartisan than the judiciary; and no man has ever undertaken to have incorporated in a law with regard to the judiciary a provision that its members shall belong to any one particular party.

Again, suppose the President in carrying out this law after it shall have been adopted should appoint three men as Republicans and three as Democrats against whose party affiliations no objection whatever could be urged. They are appointed for 12 years. Suppose 6 years from now some of these men, or half of them, who were appointed, let us say, as Republicans become Democrats. It is not an uncommon thing for men to change from one party to another. Not only is it not uncommon among the ordinary citizens, but the great leaders of human thought often change their political convictions, and even Members of this body have changed them. It is a thing that is likely to happen to any man, no matter what his position may be. If that thing should occur, what are you going to do about it? The law says not that they shall be appointed from those parties, but it says that not more than three of the members of this commission shall belong to one party; and no matter who may be selected, however honest the appointees may be, there is a chance that they will all be of one party in the course of a few years. The provision will have, in my judgment, the very opposite effect to that which Senators intend it shall have.

I want to call attention to what occurred in regard to the Farm Loan Board provided for in the recent bill which we passed. That bill contained the same kind of a provision in it. On the floor of the Senate I made a motion to strike it out. I was glad to make such a motion at a time when there was a Democratic President, so that if there should be occasion hereafter while I am a Member of this body, under a Republican administration, I would be consistent in making the same effort then; but my motion was defeated on a roll call by an overwhelming vote.

Now, let us see what happened. In due time, under a provision exactly similar to the provision I am now discussing, after the enactment of the rural-credits law, the President made the appointment of Members to the Farm Loan Board. He appointed certain members of the board as Democrats and certain other members of the board as Republicans. I happened to be on the committee in this body to which those nominations were referred. It is an interesting fact that when the members of the committees got together to pass on those nominations the first thing that happened was an objection made by a Republican member of the committee that one member of the board appointed as a Republican was not a Republican. An investigation and a search of that man's record through several years of his life disclosed the fact that he had voted for a Democratic Congressman. That charge was brought up against him, and he did not deny it. The charge was made, "He is not a Republican, because once in his life he voted for a Democrat." Not a question was asked and no investigation was made as to his qualifications to serve on the board; but the question was, "Is he a Republican," and had it not been for the fact that the Republican Senators from the State in which the man lived were both in favor of his confirmation I presume there would have been a contest on the floor of the Senate in regard to that nomination.

In the same batch of nominations was the name of a man called a Democrat, and a Democratic member of the committee found fault with him, not because he was not qualified to fill the place but because he was, in the judgment of that Senator, not a good Democrat.

Mr. President, I call attention to these facts. They will occur constantly under this kind of a law; they will naturally happen, no matter what the President may do. In the selection of nominees under such a provision there will be a suspicion at once that the President is appointing somebody who is not a good Republican or who is not a good Democrat. So in the contention as to his politics sight is lost of the fact as to whether or not a man is qualified to hold the position.

I remember soon after President Wilson entered upon the duties of his office a discussion took place on the floor of the Senate when something was said in regard to the Civil Service Commission, all of the members of which had been appointed by a Republican President under a provision of law similar to the provision now being discussed, that the appointing power must take some of the members of the commision from each party. The charge was made here by leading Democrats of this body that the Democratic members appointed by a Republican President at the time they were appointed on the Civil Service Commission were not good Democrats. I do not know what the facts were, but it was charged that they were appointed because they had voted the Republican ticket at some time and helped out some Republican candidate or in some way helped the Republican Party; in other words, under such a system suspicion always attaches immediately and their good faith is always doubted.

No good can come from such a situation. The men who are appointed on this board, if they do their duty, will be nonpartisan. I think it would be a good idea in the law to say that they ought to be nonpartisan; but the minute that we say some of them shall belong to one party and some to another party we make a bipartisan body of it, and from the very nature of things they can not be always as completely nonpartisan as they otherwise would be.

It is immaterial, it seems to me, if these men are qualified to perform the duties of their office, whether they are Democrats or Republicans, or what not.

Another thing, some men who are the best-fitted citizens in the United States for membership on this board have no particular affiliation with any political party. As to some of the men who are best-qualified to perform the duties that are prescribed in this bill now before the Senate, if they are appointed objection will be made at once either that they are not Republicans or are not Democrats; and the objection on that ground would be good, because they have no particular politics. There are men as well qualified as any under the sun who do not care whether they are called Republicans or Democrats or Socialists or Progressives or Prohibitionists. They have no particular political affiliation; but they may have made a study for a lifetime of the questions which they will be required to investigate, and they would be disqualified from being appointed on this board.

So far as I am concerned, I should like to say now that while we have a Democratic President I want to pass a law making the commission nonpartisan, and then give to him the responsibility of appointing men who will not be moved by the bias and prejudice of political affiliation.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, we have had nearly a hundred years of party government, and I am prepared to say that I believe it has been better than a nonpartisan government. What is a political party? It is one of the instrumentalities of administering civil government. No popular government can survive without it. It fixes responsibility and presents issues. It is only a division of opinion. All who believe in certain governmental principles applied in practice circle themselves around the principle or series of principles as a recruiting station, and that forms the nucleus of a political party. Whenever the age of political irresponsibility begins, in my judgment the decay of government begins. I believe in a healthy partisanship, and I would rather vote to confirm a capable, stalwart Democrat or a Republican, as the case might be, than to vote for a political maverick and a sexless nondescript any day in the week.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—has the Senator finished?

Mr. SHERMAN. I had not intended to; but if the spirit moves the Senator from anything I said, I will gladly yield.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I am going to take the floor, if I can get it, when the Senator is through. I thought he was through.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was just waiting for it to have its effect, to see whether further argument appeared useful.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to the Senator's waiting. He can wait as long as he pleases.

Mr. SHERMAN. I had hoped that we might speedily dispose of this matter, but I see that there is some moving of the spirit on the adverse side of it, and so, having spoiled a good dinner already, I am disposed to go on. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, reference has been made to the judiciary. Not since I have been a voter has any President ever ignored party lines in appointing judges until the last Republican administration. I am not prepared to criticize it. I think the choices made of Democrats for judicial positions were fit ones, and I think they adorn and dignify the bench. They were good lawyers before; but they were then Democrats, and just as good Democrats—these two that President Taft appointed—after they went on the bench as they had been before, although their partisan activities are properly dormant. As a matter of fact, when Cleveland was President from 1885 to 1889 he did not appoint a solitary judicial occupant who was a Republican—not one; and in his second term, from 1893 to 1897, he appointed no judges who were Republicans, and I honor Grover Cleveland for it. It does not destroy a man's character to be a Democrat or a Republican. As Ingalls said in this Chamber many years ago—

> Male and female created He them.

Be one or the other; but as to the person who hovers on the borderland of both parties, speculating on the wants and necessities of each, ready to traffic with all to see whom he can make the most profitable bargain with—as to that type of man, I am against him anyhow. [Laughter.] In or out of office he is vacillating, uncertain, impracticable, and of such as he practical administration of affairs among men is not had.

I can understand a Democrat, and I respect him for his different belief from mine in the administration of vital and elementary governmental principles. I can understand him, and I can understand a Republican. We have our family difficulties in administering affairs; but when it comes to the appointment of a tariff commission, I would rather have three Democrats and three Republicans, or three Progressives, as the case may be, and no Republicans, than to undertake to administer it by a nonpartisan board; and as a matter of fact such a thing does not exist. If a man is otherwise fit to serve on such a board, and has no party affiliations, if he has taken so little interest in the affairs of this country as to be unable to tell what political party he would affiliate with if he ever went to vote, has lived to mature years and never made up his mind on such issues, he is not the right man to sit on that kind of a board.

Why, Mr. President, my friend Gompers has not voted for many years I think, according to his own confession—and still he wants to govern the Senate, and to administer affairs generally, and to dictate to Presidents and Cabinets and Senators and Representatives. He is a nonpartisan—the most celebrated instance of a modern nonpartisan. He has been speculating around the borderland of everybody and everything. Talk about a nonpartisan member of a tariff commission! Well, as the little girl once said, "There ain't no such animal." [Laughter.]

A tariff refers to revenue. Revenue inevitably results in taxation. The investigation of sources of revenue and the methods of taxation are vital exercises of governmental power. When we exercise that power we create differences of opinion on the best way of raising revenue.

Our Democratic friends adhere to one method and Republicans to another. Since this Republic began, from the days of Washington to the days of Wilson, men have divided on the question of taxation, and they will continue to divide, and it will be a vital and elementary issue in political parties for years to come.

Mr. President, the tariff will become nonpartisan when men cease to have differences of opinion on the question of taxation. When we all agree on how to raise money, when we all agree on the best sources from which to draw that money, then we shall cease to have differences over tariffs. This is a revenue bill. How long have we been discussing it? A good while, and in earnest. There has been some light shed upon the question. The division between the parties is pretty sharply drawn. It is made much plainer. It is on the question of direct or indirect taxation; and still, by merely striking out some objectionable words, all partisan activity shall cease and the tariff will be immediately relegated into the clouds, up in the air castles, where only angels and college professors dwell. [Laughter.]

For my part, I shall vote with every Democratic associate of mine to keep the partisan feature of this measure in it. What President of yours would appoint a nonpartisan tariff board? And I am ready to say for any President that I ever expect to support that I do not know that I would want to support him very hard if he were not equally partisan on political issues. What would you think of a Democratic President who abandoned his faith and served political ends by nonpolitical agents? What would you expect the present occupant of the Executive office to do, Mr. President—appoint five Progressives and one Republican? Appoint some professors of economics who have not voted in a primary or at the polls for 30 years? Appoint some learned gentlemen who have been hanging about the cloistered shades of some university, nauseated at the thought of practical politics or unable to administer practical government?

Put somebody of that kind on a tariff commission, and see what kind of a pitiful governmental result you will get out of it in the way of information for men that have to deal with the sober things of life. Government is the applied science of politics. It concerns men and not books, and it is found among men of affairs rather than on chautauqua platforms. I remarked here a year or two ago that I was perfectly surfeited with a lot of theoretical gentlemen who could write elegant essays, and wear an air of bored perfection on the platform, but they could not practically administer the affairs of a poultry yard. This country is full of them. For my part, I do not want any of them administering the affairs of the Republican Party. I believe in a stalwart partisanship, and this country will be all Democratic or all Republican; it is going to be all protection or all tariff-for-revenue or all free trade, according to the voters. It will not be a mixture. It will be one or the other.

I am going to vote that way, and I expect the Republican or the Democratic President, as the case may be, to make this either a bipartisan tariff board or to make it a partisan tariff board altogether. If you leave this out and leave it to the tender mercies of the average President, as Presidents come and go in this blessed country of ours, he will make it a partisan tariff commission. He will put no representatives of the opposite party on it unless they are in the minority. It will be a 4–2 combination; that is certain.

What would the President do at this time if he had to appoint such a commission? After you got the cover off, Mr. President, you would find about four stalwart Democrats, and you would find about two whose antecedents are at first unknown, and objectionable after discovery. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Illinois had his way, he would abolish by law all the State universities. He would drive all the college professors out of the country. I presume he would abolish the high schools, because there are presidents of big universities who do not know how, as he says, to run a poultry yard. Why, there are some men in the Senate who would not be able to do that very thing, and yet who might make very good members of a tariff commission.

If the Senator follows out his argument in regard to the courts, he must be in favor of eliminating this language from the bill, because he says Presidents appoint judges, sometimes Democrats and sometimes Republicans, but he must remember that in the law that gives to the President the authority and the right to appoint judges there is not anywhere any such language as we have provided here.

The Senator says the courts get along very well, and they do. But the language that gives the President the right to appoint judges does not say that he must appoint a Republican judge to-day and a Democratic judge to-morrow, and we have had good results from that.

The Senator certainly will not contend that a judge ought to be a partisan. He will not contend, if he will take a second thought, that the members of this tariff commission ought to represent political parties on the commission. The tariff may remain in politics, but the object of this commission is to gather the facts. If you once get the facts gathered carefully and honestly, without shading them to suit Democratic principles or Republican principles, then let Congress have those facts, in order to pass the proper kind of a tariff law.

We have been passing tariff laws in both of the political parties by giving hearings before the committees and having the interested parties appear until the enlightened sentiment of the country, or most of it, I think, has reached the conclusion that this method of making up a tariff bill is not sound; that some commission, some body of men, unbiased, unprejudiced, ought to make these investigations and give Congress the facts. That is what is provided here shall be done. They shall report every year to Congress. Now, do we want to say to these men, "You are appointed as a Republican," and "you are appointed as a Democrat," and put them in an attitude where they shall shade their report or their investigation according to the ideas of the political party to which they belong?

Why, Mr. President, there is not any objection to appointing a Republican or a Democrat on this commission; but if you simply appoint them on the commission, and do not appoint them as a Republican or as a Democrat, just like you appoint the judges, they will go on during their 12 years of work and do good work without being looked upon as representatives of a political party, where there ought to be an unbiased investigation without partisan shade, without partisan bias, so that Congress can have the facts, and have them in such shape that the country and the Congress will have confidence in them when they get the reports.

So it seems to me, Mr. President, that all this tirade about the man who has not any political party being an undesirable citizen has not anything to do with the question. We have got to admit that men who vote the Democratic ticket to-day and the Republican ticket a year from now, exercising a right that no man would think of taking away, are just as honest, just as intelligent, just at patriotic citizens, as the man who says: "I will swallow the ticket straight, yellow dog and all, under all considerations." No man can deny it. The Senator himself, when he makes a campaign for election to this body, tries to get Democratic votes. If the theory that he is promulgating here is right, then every time he asks a Democrat to vote for him he insults him, because he has said in effect: "You are a mongrel statesman. You are a nondescript. You are not a stalwart Democrat." If he had his theory promulgated and put into law, there would not be any such thing as deciding, when you came to vote, as between candidates. There would be only one thing printed on the ballot, and that would be the name of the political party. That would be the logical result of it.

Mr. President, we have a provision in this law that has a tendency to carry that into law. That is what I object to. I am not going to make a motion to strike it out, because I know there are too many Members of this body who feel that this language ought to remain in. I tried it on the other law providing for the Farm Loan Board, and the roll call there showed that a large majority of the Members were in favor of keeping this board partisan. When we come to pass on the men who shall be appointed, the Senator from Illinois will be one of the first men to object, if a man is appointed as a Republican, if he can search his long life and find where some time, 20 years ago perhaps, he voted for a Democrat for road overseer. He will denounce him as one of these undesirable citizens who is not fit to vote, who ought not to have the right to vote; or if, perchance, some man is appointed who did not vote last year, he will be in that class, and will not be entitled to be appointed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUSTING and Mr. CUMMINS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. HUSTING. I should like to offer an amendment to come in on page 49, line 22.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Iowa, to enable him to conclude his amendments on the tariff board, and then present his amendment? I think it would be easier and simpler.

Mr. HUSTING. I have been waiting all the afternoon to get in this amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator from Iowa can submit all of his amendments on the tariff board and get through with that, then we can turn to other parts of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin withdraw his amendment?

Mr. HUSTING. No; I will not withdraw my amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator let it lie on the table until the Senator from Iowa finishes with his amendments to the tariff-commission schedule?

Mr. HUSTING. Very well. How many more amendments does the Senator propose to offer?

Mr. CUMMINS. Well, I have one in my mind.

Mr. HUSTING. I will yield for one more to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not make any bargain or ask any favors, however. I hope Senators will remember that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I just thought I would make that request.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have always tried to enjoy my rights here and not trespass upon the rights of any other Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 142, line 6, strike out the words "authorized to be" and insert the word "hereby," so as to read: "is hereby appropriated."

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Secretary read the paragraph so that it will be understood?

The SECRETARY. So that if amended it will read:

SEC. 97. That there is hereby appropriated, for the purpose of defraying the expense of the establishment and maintenance of the commission, including the payment of salaries herein authorized, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for each fiscal year thereafter a like sum is hereby appropriated.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The only effect of this amendment is to make at once the appropriation and establish the commission without additional appropriations of money. I do not think that is customary, but there has been a question raised as to the permanency of the commission, and I am perfectly willing to accept the amendment and vote on it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am very glad of that. I certainly shall not impose any argument upon the Senate if it is willing to take the view of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the fact that if his amendment is agreed to this is an appropriation covering an indefinite length of time, and for each fiscal year thereafter a like sum is appropriated

Mr. CUMMINS. It is what is known as a continuous appropriation, a method of appropriation that has been common, I think, in Government affairs.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not really know that we would need it except as to the salaries of the commissioners.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the salaries are not paid, they will be of very little value.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUSTING. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 49, line 22, in the committee amendment already agreed to——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is in an amendment already agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be reconsidered by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent if there is no objection the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered for the purpose of enabling the Senator from Wisconsin to offer his amendment. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 49, line 22, insert, after the word "any," the word "person"; on page 50, line 4, after the word "such," insert the words 'under the same rules and regulations as govern the inspection of public records generally"; on page 50, line 4, strike out the words "Provided, That"; and further strike out all of lines 5 to 15, inclusive, on page 50, so that subsection (b) of section 14, as so amended, shall read as follows:

When the assessments of any person, corporation, joint-stock company, or association, or insurance company shall be made as provided in this title the returns together with any correction thereof which may have been made by the commissioner shall be filed in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, shall constitute public records and be open to inspection as such under the same rules and regulations as govern the inspection of public records generally.

Mr. PENROSE. I raise the point of order that this amendment has already been voted on.

Mr. SIMMONS. The substance, I think, if not the language of the amendment has already been voted upon.

Mr. PENROSE. It is therefore not in order.

Mr. HUSTING. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. PENROSE. I raise the point of order and ask for a ruling upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin has the floor.

Mr. HUSTING. I wish to say that if an amendment has been offered striking out the language of the section, I am not aware of it, at least I have not heard it. If I am mistaken I would like to be corrected. I will state that I did offer an amendment to insert the word "person" after the word "such," which is a part of this amendment, but the balance of the amendment was not offered.

Mr. SIMMONS. I rise to a question of order. A point of order has been raised, but the Chair has not ruled upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has not ruled because there is a question of fact involved. The Senator from Wisconsin says he did not offer the identical amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not understand that that is the point made by the Senator from North Carolina. If the Presiding Officer will turn to the paragraph he will see that it was amended, and the paragraph having been so amended and adopted an amendment to it is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent it was reconsidered.

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course, I have not before me the amendment upon which we voted, but I ask the Senator from Wisconsin if that part of his amendment which relates to the records kept in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and which provides that the records shall be public and open to anyone who may desire to ascertain the returns of the taxpayers, has not been heretofore voted upon.

Mr. HUSTING. I will state, as I said before, that I offered an amendment to insert the word "person," on page 50, line 4, and that is all there was in the amendment that I offered. In addition to that, I now propose to strike out the words "provided that," in line 4, page 50, and all of lines 5 to 15, inclusive. Those lines provide that certain returns may be open to inspection upon the order of the President, and further that the proper officers of any State imposing a general income tax may, upon the request of the governor, have access to the returns or an abstract thereof. If any other Senator on the floor offered an amendment to strike out the proviso I am not aware of it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask the Senator if that part of his amendment, which comes under the head of letter b, has not been voted on?

Mr. HUSTING. It has not been voted on except the particular amendment I stated, that I proposed to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There has been called to the attention of the Chair the record showing that the Senator from Wisconsin gave notice he would offer this amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. Let us vote on it.

Mr. HUSTING. I think I have a right to make a few remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin can proceed.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, the amendment I offer is for the purpose of opening the income-tax record to public inspection by any State government, or anybody else. The terms are very simple and plain. The question is, Shall the income-tax records be secret records, not to be looked at by anybody except those in the employ of the Government, or shall they have the same status that records generally have to which the public has access?

Mr. President, I do not believe in secret records. I believe there should be very strong reasons why any records should be secret and why they should be withheld from the public to whom they belong. We have executive sessions here which are secret, I presume, for reasons that are peculiar to the business we transact in them, but in all tax measures in every other form of taxation the records are public. If anybody wants to know what return a man has made on his real estate or his personal property he can go to the records and find out. It can not be said that you are seeking to nose into his business, but his circumstances, his financial affairs, are open to everybody. Under the inheritance tax the records are public in the office of the probate judge or surrogate, and you can go there and see how much a man died possessed of. But for some reason which never has been satisfactorily explained to me, or at least for reasons which I do not think are satisfactory, when it comes to an income tax you put the seal of secrecy upon the returns and do not allow anybody to look at them. I say the people have a right to look at them. They are their records.

But there is another reason why they ought to have a right to look at them. Every man has a right to know whether his neighbor or fellow taxpayer pays his just share of taxes. He has to pay his. When he makes a sworn income-tax return he has to make a statement upon his oath, and if he is a truthful and honest citizen, he has to pay his just share of taxes, and has he not a right to know whether his neighbor or some other man is equally truthful? Yet you make it easy by putting this cloak over the tax returns, for the situation to exist whereby one man who has a conscience, who has a sense of public duty and of decency, and who is honest must pay his share of the income tax and his neighbor can escape under the seal of secrecy. On the other hand, if you open up those records to him he can tell whether his neighbor is paying his just taxes or not. He has an interest in that money that is being paid as taxes by another taxpayer, because in so far as his neighbor, his fellow citizen, escapes his share of taxes it is piled on him. All you are doing in this sort of a law, in my judgment, is this: You are putting a premium on dishonesty and on graft by protecting a man from public exposure by means of covering up his income-tax return and not letting anybody look at it.

We have gone to work here in this income-tax bill and we have raised the supertax. We have raised it up quite high. Why? Because we needed more income. Instead of doing it that way why is it not better policy to administer the laws that we have so that we make those laws produce more tax?

I have a pamphlet here that is published at the Government Printing Office. It is an extract from some other public document reprinted. It says in hearings before the House Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department wherein a gentleman, Basil M. Manley, claimed that the people are evading the income tax to the extent of $320,000,000 in the United States. I have not studied this report and I can not vouch for its correctness, but the statement is made there and the reasons given and the figures given, which go to prove in the author's opinion that the United States is being deprived of $320,000,000 annually because of incorrect and unfair returns.

Now, if only a tenth part of that is true, if it is only $32,000,000, if it is only $20,000,000, I do not care how much it is, why not get it? Why raise the tax and make the fair man, the truthful man, the honest man pay more and more because he is making truthful returns, and at the same time make it easy for the man who is not truthful, who is not honest, and who is not fair, to escape his share of the taxes? Why not make him produce that $32,000,000 or that $320,000,000, if this statement in the pamphlet is true?

If those figures are anywhere near accurate, we are getting but one-third of the amount of the income tax that we are entitled to under the law as it stands to-day. It is a much better policy to make people pay taxes under the existing laws, in my judgment, than to go on making new laws with the same inefficient administration and have still more evasion of the tax laws by those who do not want to pay their just share of taxes.

Now, secrecy was never in any field promotive of fair dealing and honesty. It is under secrecy that crimes are committed, that dishonest and double dealings take place. Crime and vice and dishonesty thrive under the cloak of secrecy. And yet here in passing an income-tax law we are putting a cover and cloak by which the proneness to evade taxes may thrive and promote dishonesty and crookedness.

Now, why do we do that? Why should the United States make it difficult for it to collect its own taxes? Why does not the United States take the means, which it has at its command, to administer the income-tax law. If the income-tax law is a good thing and if it is fair, and no one stands up here and says it is not fair, why should not a man pay his just tax under the income-tax law?

I know there is a feeling throughout the country, I am satisfied of it, that the people want these records to be open. I think there is a sentiment here that the income-tax law will never be properly administered until the records become free, open, and public documents where State officers or individuals can go and look and obtain the information that they are entitled to. Whether you pass this provision now or not, if you ever want an income-tax law administered efficiently you will eventually have to come to the point where you will make a man's record of his income tax an open book. Why should you pull a cloak over him to make it possible to evade his just share of taxes? I say, from my point of view, from the point of view of efficiency, from the point of view of raising enough revenue, from the point of view of making a man pay what fairly and justly he ought to pay, you ought to make these returns a matter of public record so that men will make fair returns of their income tax and pay what the law requires them, and which in all good conscience they ought to pay.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HUSTING. I do.

Mr. KENYON. I ask the Senator if the Wisconsin income-tax law provided that the return should be open to public inspection.

Mr. HUSTING. I looked up the matter in Wisconsin. The figures are open and they are subject to such other rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the board.

Mr. KENYON. What board is that?

Mr. HUSTING. The tax commission.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I know what an imposition it is on the Senate to take its time to discuss any matter at this stage of the legislative proceedings, and I shall therefore be very brief; but I affirm that no living man can give a sound reason why the tax returns in the aggregate, omitting the details, should not be open to public inspection. There may be a reason why a taxpayer ought not to be required to make public record of a particular source of income, although I confess I see no reason why any honorable man, having only honorable sources of income, should hesitate to make the facts known as to all the sources of his income. We may slump this matter over as we please, but we will not satisfy ourselves and we will not satisfy the justice of the case if we do so.

Let us see, if a man owns only a little property, what he has to do. He must turn into the tax collector of his county a list of everything he has. If he has a watch, or if his wife has a watch, that fact is made a matter of public record. If he has a horse or a cow, he must make return of that horse or cow, and the return is a matter of public record. If he has household goods which are worth $5 or $500, he must return the fact. If he, fortunately or unfortunately, owns a piano, he must schedule his piano. We go into the very homes of the common men of the country and we require them to list substantially everything they own. There is no delicacy then; there is then none of the sentiment that men are entitled to privacy. We fairly count the spoons of the ordinary citizen.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. WEEKS. May I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that he has instanced personal property, not sources of income?

Mr. REED. Why, certainly, I have instanced personal property, not sources of income. I shall discuss that in a moment.

We also tax in the name of the owner the real estate of the country. Now, what is there sacred about an income? What is there that makes an income of such a delicate nature or of such a private character that we should not require the amount of that income to be stated? What sound reason is there for that distinction suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts? Is it because a man is ashamed of having a large income? Very few men are ashamed of that fact. Is it because he is ashamed that his income is so small? That is no reason for a man to feel a sense of shame. In what way does a public record of an income tax interfere with a man's business or his opportunities in life? After all, this delicacy of feeling must be bottomed upon the fact that a rich man with a large income is entitled to some protection that a poor man with a small income or with a small amount of property is not entitled to.

I concur absolutely in one line of argument made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HUSTING], which is that publicity in all these matters makes for honesty of returns. There is one county in my State where I have been told there are several millionaires, and it is not a county with a city in it. I have been also told that the mere publication of the tax returns of those gentlemen would result in astonishing the entire community. I want somebody to tell me why public taxation is not public business. I want somebody to tell me why every man in the community is not interested in knowing, and has not the right to know, the source of every dollar of revenue that is collected by the Government, and to know whether or not other people are paying their just share of the burdens of Government.

I am in favor of this amendment, and I hope it will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment. [Putting the question.]

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, just one moment. Let not the Presiding Officer be in such an inordinate rush.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator from Oregon should speak from his place, as the rule requires.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is out of order.

Mr. PENROSE. I rise to a question of order, Mr. President. Is it not one of the rules of the Senate that a Senator in addressing the Senate shall speak from his place and not walking up and down the aisle in front of Senators and conducting his address in an irregular manner?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I will say that those who are more agile——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is out of order.

Mr. LANE. All right.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it seems to me that this is the place where it would be well to give the country a dose of "pitiless publicity." If there ever was a place where publicity would redound to the public good, it strikes me it is in a case where by means of publicity the just revenues of the Government will be increased. I do not believe there can be any reason for not making such returns public. Secrecy can only be desired by those who want to cover up their incomes as a means of preventing the Government from collecting that which it ought to get under the law.

As the Senator from Wisconsin has well said, it discriminates against the honest man, who makes an honest and fair return, by compelling him to pay upon all of the income that the law provides he shall pay an income tax upon and relieving the man whose conscientious convictions are such that he does not hesitate to cover up or conceal his income. There can be no question, in my judgment, that the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin would result in the collection of a very large additional sum of money under the income-tax provision of the law.

The Senator has referred to the figures given by Mr. Manly in an article on the subject. I have read and seen those figures; and, while, of course, to some extent the deductions in the article must necessarily be based on estimates, I do not believe anybody can read the arguments and study the figures given in the article without being impressed with the fact that there is an enormous amount of income tax due the Government which is not being collected. I do not have before me the article, but there are several instances given in it which, it seems to me, demonstrate practically conclusively that the Government has failed to collect large amounts of money which were honestly due it under the law.

Mr. President, it may be that there is good reason why these returns should be kept secret, but I have never heard one given; and I am unable myself to discover just what reason there can be. We have publicity as to nearly everything else in connection with taxation. I presume there is not a State in the Union that does not provide for the publicity of tax returns. One can go to the proper officer in a State and find out exactly the property returned by any individual upon which, under his affidavit and his oath, he pays taxes.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WEEKS. The principal reason, it seems to me, advanced for offering this amendment is that the Government does not get all of the taxes which it should get, because there are people who swear to things which are not true. The law provides for the punishment of such people if they swear falsely, and why do not the law officers of the Government proceed against such individuals and punish them?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the very evidence, to a great extent, on which such men could be punished is covered up in the law itself, because the returns are secret, and because the public generally do not know about them. If the returns were made public, there would probably be a good many prosecutions where there are none now.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, the law officers of the Government and the internal-revenue officers of the Government know all about these returns, and if they have any reason to think there has been a false return made it is very easy for them to proceed against the person making it.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes; if those officers knew about it they probably would act. The argument I am making is that complete publicity would give information to people who perhaps would know that something had been concealed, and by giving that information to a public official there might result prosecutions. The result which I think would follow would be that the returns would show larger incomes.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield further to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. WEEKS. Does the Senator wish to make every man a detective to spy on the actions of his neighbor?

Mr. NORRIS. I am not arguing here that everybody who makes an income-tax return swears falsely to it. I am not claiming that; but if the Senator can give me a reason why such returns ought to be concealed and ought to be kept secret I should like to have him do so.

Mr. WEEKS. Well, Mr. President, I think there is a very substantial reason in the fact that no man wishes to expose or to be compelled to expose his private affairs to the public. He does not do so under any other circumstances except when he asks for credit. If the law officers and the officers of the Internal Revenue Department have a complete statement of a man's affairs it seems to me that it is prying into them in an illegitimate and improper way to compel him to expose his private affairs to public inspection.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, as I look at it, if that is the reason, if that is the objection to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, then, if we follow that line of reasoning, we ought to provide by law in every State that the tax schedules as to all taxes paid shall be kept secret. I do not believe it is any worse or any more humiliating for me to say that I am getting $10,000 income from Government bonds or railroad bonds or securities of that kind or that I am not getting such an income than it would be in a tax schedule to set forth that I have a diamond ring or that I have a gold watch or that I have a bicycle or an automobile. Such matters are public under our taxation system. It is not any greater disgrace——

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield further to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield in a moment.

Mr. LANE. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon will state his point of order.

Mr. LANE. The Senator from Massachusetts is addressing the Chair out of his place. I understood the Chair to rule a while ago that when a Senator addressed the Senate he must rise in his place and speak from there.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, the Senator is right. I am out of my place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska now yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts or any other Senator.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Chair another question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has ruled that a Senator when he desires to address the Senate shall rise in his place and address the Chair.

Mr. LANE. Very well, then. I will ask the Chair to keep all Senators in their places.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, taxation is always burdensome. We all dislike to pay taxes, and I do not blame anybody for entertaining that feeling. I am not claiming that the men who make income-tax returns are any more dishonest than those who do not make such returns or than those who make returns of their personal property under local tax schedules; I am not claiming anything of that kind, but it does seem to me that a man would be very touchy who would say, "I do not want this return made public, because I do not want the public to know anything about my business," when, as a matter of fact, already if he makes a return under the tax laws of any of the various States, so far as I know about them, publicity is given to that return as to all the property which he may own, as to the amount of goods he holds, the stocks he owns, and the debts which he owes, all of which is more humiliating probably than having an income-tax return made public. Why should it be humiliating to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] if he had an income of $100,000 from stock of the Bethlehem Steel Co. for him to state that fact?

Mr. KENYON. I rise to a point of order. That is entirely too startling as applied to any circumstances.

Mr. NORRIS. Why would it humiliate him to say in his schedule that he had that income? I can not conceive of anything disgraceful or humiliating to any man to state the source of his income, unless he is getting an income from some shady proposition, some dishonorable source, some illegal affair.

As I have said, there may be reasons—I have not heard them, and I can not think of any myself—why these returns should not be made public. It seems to me that there ought to be, and can be, no objection to a man stating his income in his return, and then having the return made public, so that the proper publicity may be given to it. Why, Mr. President, it is one of the fundamental principles of nearly all governments that publicity in government is the cure for more evils of government than any other one thing. Our courts must be public; our deliberations here must be public; the action of practically all of our officials must be public; and provision is made by law that they must be public. Now, the person who has an income from property that is, perhaps, intangible would be able to cover up the source of his income, whereas the man who had a farm or who had a building would necessarily have some publicity in regard to his income.

It seems to me that in the interest of fairness, as well as in the interest of getting as much money under the law as the law provides we shall get, we ought to have absolute and pitiless publicity.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Mississippi is not in his place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule is not as to his place. The rule says a Senator can not proceed until he is recognized. A point of order was made against the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] on the ground that he was walking down the aisle, and had not been recognized. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, a distinguished Englishman is reported once to have said:

> Words, words, words, and yet more words, and what paucity of ideas accompanies them!

We have thrashed out this whole proposition. We thrashed it out in the Committee on Finance. We thrashed it out in the Ways and Means Committee of the House. We thrashed it out on the floor of the House. We thrashed it out on the floor of the Senate. All the verbalities and verbosities that have been recently resorted to mean only this—a general denial of the fact that there is any such thing in existence as private business. Of course, every man of real good sense knows there is such a thing as private business.

I hope the amendment will be defeated.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I can not find the rule that has been referred to. I find in Jefferson's Manual that a Member must rise in his place and address the Chair, but it does not say any particularly fixed place. I think it would apply more to those who are too ponderous to get around, perhaps, than it would to those who are quicker on their feet. [Laughter.]

But, be that as it may, I wish to say, in regard to this amendment, that it is my opinion that neither the Senate nor the House nor anybody representing the people, the people's servants, have the right to deny their employers full access to the facts concerning their affairs. The provision in the bill which makes it a finable offense for anyone to give information to the people of this country as to the sources from which their revenue is derived, upon whom is placed this impost upon information is going beyond our power. In my opinion, is a bit of cool impudence. In fact, it ought to be an unlawful transaction, and a punishable one, to conceal the facts, and an offense finable and punishable with imprisonment, if necessary, for any public official to attempt to conceal them.

The people of this country will never be able to govern their affairs wisely and economically nor to place their taxes justly until they know all the facts concerning the sources of their revenue and the manner in which it is expended. I do not believe there is any Republican or any Democrat or any Socialist or independent Republican or any citizen who will deny that statement. The business of the people should be managed in such a way that they will have access to all of the facts. The idea of men sitting in this body or in the other House who have gone before the people and requested them to send them here as their representatives, as their agents, in fact, to represent them justly, getting into a meeting, holding a session, beginning, if you please, perhaps, in the committee which drew the bill, and then imposing the will of that committee, or rather the minority of it, as binding upon the conference of a certain party, and then in turn making that binding on the Senate, and passing a bill denying the people of this country the right to information respecting the source from whence comes their revenue! I can not understand how the people will stand such an insult from their servants. It is a case of the servant denying the master, the owner of the property, information concerning from whence comes his revenue. It is a preposterous proposition, and one that can not, in my opinion, be defended on any ground of decent government, and I protest it. I object to it.

The amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin is pertinent and to the point. The result of this manner of doing business, this manner of keeping the facts from the people, is, I am informed, that the larger, the more opulent members of the community escape their taxation, and it is passed on down to those least able to pay it. That is wrong. No country can succeed to the full extent to which it is entitled, which permits that manner of handling its affairs, where the majority suffer to the special advantage of the wealthy minority.

An amendment of this kind, I notice, attracts but little attention in the Senate. It does not hold the Senate's attention. It meets with a smile and a hasty attempt to bowl it over, and put it out of sight, and be done with it; but it reaches right to the heart of the legislation. It will reach right to the heart of this body later on, right to the heart of it. It will come home here when the people realize it; and the gentlemen who now try to slip by it quickly, and those who resent it or any discussion of it, will see the day when they will be hat in hand before the people asking for their forbearance for the evil they have done unto them.

Just a few days ago there came here what is called the aristocratic element of the laboring people of this country—they who earn $5 a day—and it was resented by many that they did come. They came, and they put through, or there was put through to meet their wishes, legislation which prevented them from working over eight hours a day. In regard to that I have nothing to say. To me it was just an omen, a forecast, the dawn of the day when those who are unorganized now—not the aristocracy but the lower-paid class of labor, who are paid the least possible for their labor and who work 16 hours a day, some of them—will come knocking at the doors of the United States Senate, the greatest deliberative body in the world, the greatest talking body in the world, if you please, and asking for a hearing, and they will get it.

They will get it. The aristocrats of the big interests—they whose income in some instances is over half a million dollars a day—have knocked at the door of the Senate for years, and their knock has been answered quickly. Tiptoeing to the door have we gone and listened and obeyed the behests. But now comes the laboring men; and later along the large interests, one-half of whose property is founded upon watered stocks, upon a steal, if you please, upon theft, robbery, stolen money, will come to a clinch with the aristocrats of labor and the laboring poor, they who receive less than $5 a day, and between them they will grind the interests of the people, they who belong to neither class—the man who makes $2 a day, with his wife and three children to support, and who comes out at the end of the month with $10 profit. Those people will come here to be heard, and they will be entitled to a hearing, and it is going to be a good day for this body, a blessed day for the Senate, if it listens to them.

Now the people, through some of their Representatives, are asking this body, with no great hope of succeeding, I confess, that they make public, that they leave open to public inspection, to the plain people and the mass of the people, to anybody, to the one-eyed Irish woman who takes in washing for a living, if you please, to the old colored woman that goes on a crutch to do the scrubbing work around the halls of this or any other place, the facts as they relate to the taxes that are paid by other people of this country, and they will have a right to know, the last and least one of them, just as much right as the most plethoric gentleman that sits in this Chamber. It is upon their behalf, and to be right when that day comes, if it comes in my time, when they will ask for the accounting, when they will demand it at your hands, and against that day in which they come and first sit in the galleries and listen to your "waw-waw," and later along get that which they came for, that I support this amendment. The people of this country are entitled to the information; it is theirs. I resent the dicta of any Member of this or any other body who refuses to the people their sacred and inalienable right to the information which is theirs, and theirs alone, but denied them in this bill by usurpation of the power and rights of those who sent them here.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I favor the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HUSTING], because I believe it will enable the Government more nearly to collect the tax on these large incomes. I do not believe the Treasury Department will be deterred in the least by any inquiries that may be made by interested citizens as to the reports that may be made to the Internal-Revenue Department. I think granting this power will serve the public interest. I think it will promote honesty in government. I think the amendment ought to be agreed to, and I shall cast my vote for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HUSTING].

Mr. HUSTING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I wish again to announce that the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is unavoidably absent from the Senate, and is paired on all votes with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President——

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon that amendment the Senator from Wisconsin calls for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. ASHURST. Let the question be stated.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, I tried to get recognition from the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. HUSTING. I should like to state the amendment, just briefly. This amendment is to make the income-tax returns public in the same manner that all other public records are made public, in the same manner that all other tax returns are made public. The amendment provides that all income-tax records shall be public records, and shall be open to inspection by the public. That is the substance of it.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I want to say just a word on this amendment before the vote is taken, and only a word.

I have been a little disappointed at the impatience of some Senators here that there should be any discussion upon this amendment, or that the amendment should be proposed at all. We all know that the income-tax law was enacted by the Federal Government, just as it had been enacted by State governments, to reach a large class of property intangible in character which wholly escaped taxation.

The extent of the evasion of this class of property is positively startling. The attempt to collect it under State income-tax law failed universally and failed because the effort was made, so far as I know, in every State to execute the law through local assessors. In every community would be found men of large means, each village and small city having its money king, who concealed all or largely his intangible property and escaped the payment of tax upon it. To attempt to assess that property through a local assessor proved utterly futile. It was always within the power of the man of large means in every community to defeat any man who as an assessor ferreted out any considerable portion of property which had been theretofore escaping taxation.

I think it is a matter of history that every attempt on the part of a State government to collect income taxes through local assessors, to execute their law through local officers, proved a total failure. I believe the one State in the Union that ever made any considerable return upon an income-tax law executed in that manner was the State of Virginia. I think the largest amount ever returned on the income-tax law of Virginia was about four years ago, when they collected about $125,000.

If I may be permitted, without appearing provincial, to refer to the State which I in part have the honor to represent here, I want to say that the State of Wisconsin—and I think it is the first State in the Union that attempted to do the thing—established an income-tax law, created a tax commission, and put the execution of that law under the tax commission and ferreted out the intangible property through supervisors in districts laid out over the State. Those men were beyond the reach of the local money king in each community. The only way that he could rid himself of the tax ferrets who searched out the intangible property was to be strong enough in combination with others of his class to force the State government to destroy the tax commission.

The result of the execution of that law by that means was the return of three and a quarter million dollars the very first year, and from property that had been evading taxation.

Mr. President, shortly after that we adopted the national income-tax law, and the first tax collected under that national income-tax law, as I remember, was considerably larger than the second tax collected under it.

I am not able to turn at once to the page in the hearings on the House resolution which lies before me upon the table, but I will state my recollection of it. The first year, I think, under the Federal income-tax law we collected something like $120,000,000, considerably over $100,000,000. The second year, 1916, we collected $80,000,000.

That is an evidence of just one thing, Mr. President, and that is that the corporations and the individuals who made out the tax returns under the Federal income-tax law discovered a means of evasion. We are having that experience in Wisconsin. There has been a falling off in the collection of the income tax there after the first year, and greater vigilance is manifestly necessary there, as it is everywhere, to make these tax dodgers pay their share of the taxes.

I can think of nobody so mean in this Government as the corporations and the men of wealth who will not pay their share of taxes. I know of nothing from which the citizen gets so large a return as upon the money which he invests in the payment of taxes. Schools provided for his children, protection given to his home, the streets paved and lighted, everything that goes to make community life of high advantage is provided through taxation.

This great Government of ours through its system of taxation throws about the citizen the panoply of this power, protects him at home and protects his person abroad, giving him, Mr. President, everything that a citizen of a hundred million of the most progressive people in the world could possibly desire from government. And yet on every hand men of great individual wealth and organized forms of business dodge and evade and use every possible effort to throw upon the individual taxpayer the burden of government.

Our Federal taxes are paid, of course, by indirect taxation; they are paid by what we wear and use and live upon. The individual head of every little family pays out of all proportion to the man of great wealth, where the taxes are paid by customs duties. The equalization can only be made where you reach this intangible wealth and make it bear its fair share through an income tax.

Mr. President, there is no possible way of accounting for the diminution, the shrinkage, which has come in the administration of the income-tax law except the dulling of the conscience and the diminution of the fear of the Federal Government. They are beginning now to try the methods of evasion. Secretary McAdoo in his report says that not less than $20,000,000 of shrinkage in the corporation tax is due to evasions of that tax.

Mr. President and fellow Senators, publicity of this tax record will help the administrators to reach the tax dodgers, corporate and individual. Why will not the Senate adopt this amendment? Why should there be secrecy for people who have always from the beginning of the Government thrown upon the owners of little homes, the heads of families, the burden of taxes for the support of the Federal Government? Will somebody stand up here and defend it?

Oh, you say if anyone has the courage to say anything in defense of the secret system, that it is repugnant to our American ideas that private affairs should be exposed. It is not private affairs. If you by law are required to pay upon your income and you lie about it when you make out your return, it is a public affair. Whether you tell the truth or not is a public affair and whether every corporation makes an honest return is a matter of public interest; it is not a private affair.

Mr. President, if there be any danger to the future of this country, if there lurks anywhere in our system of government a canker which year by year and decade by decade will weaken and destroy it, it lies in the fact that you are building up here a protected class that does not bear its share of the burdens of government, but it imposes upon the great body of the people of the country burdens that are unjust and unequal, and through all your lawmaking there runs a dark web and woof that will not bear the light of an investigation which demands equal rights for everybody.

Mr. President, this amendment ought to be adopted. I know that Senators and particularly Senators upon the Democratic side are reluctant to make amendments in the bill. The chairman of the committee comes forward, when a suggestion is made for a change in the bill; we are reminded that it is late in the session, we are reminded—I do not know that we have been by the chairman of the committee to-day, but we were the other day—that the other House may be without a quorum and that we have got to accept things as they are.

That is not the way to legislate, Mr. President, on such an important measure as this. There is an opportunity here for the Democratic Party. I will speak to you from a political standpoint as an opponent of your party. There is an opportunity here for you to write an amendment into this law in the interest of the public that can not fail to make its appeal to the public. And to my colleagues on this side, let me say to you that the record vote on this amendment which has just been ordered will not be to the credit of the Republican organization in the contest that is now on. Every other tax has its publicity element. Why not this tax? Tell me that if you can. The law says you shall pay on your income the exact amount of it.

The sources of it, so that we may know you are not lying about it, form public business, not private business. Is not that fair? Is not that square? Will you not put that into this bill? Can you give your constituents any good reason why you did not, when the roll is called? In your respective States you come up for election one after another on this side, and not only upon this vote but upon all votes that bear upon the question of whether you served the public or served these interests is presented to your constituents. How will you feel about this vote?

I am going to take just a moment to say, Mr. President, that I have gone into many States and presented the record vote upon great public questions in the Senate. I recall one instance that I think is worth reciting here this evening. I remember an occasion a few years ago when I was to speak one afternoon in a State represented by a Republican Senator on this floor. I was to speak in the city in which he lived. He called upon me shortly before I was to go upon the platform and said that he had come down to pay his respects, that he had a carriage waiting to take me out to the place where I was to speak, and would introduce me to the audience. I drew him to one side—a group of men were standing about—and I said to him, "Senator, I am going to talk about legislation that has been pending and has been the subject of discussion, and of votes in the Senate during the session that has just closed. What I have to say will in effect be a criticism upon your position, and I do not think it would be pleasant for you to present me to that audience or to be upon the platform." "Oh," he said, "this is my home; the door is open to you; go ahead; you can not say anything here that will harm me." I said, "Senator, I have no personal feeling in this matter, but I believe that this Government of ours was designed to be a representative government. I have conceived the idea that the people of each of the States have a right to know how they are represented. I am discussing questions which are of public interest, and I am presenting the records of Senators upon the roll call. I make no comment upon any individual; I just state the question and then read the roll call. I do not even emphasize the name of the Senator in whose State I happen to be at the time more than that of any other Senator. It is just laying before the people of that State certain important issues which have seemed to me very important to the people of representative government and informing them of the issue raised by the legislation upon which their Senators voted." He said to me, "Get right into the carriage; say anything you please to this audience; it is a matter of utter indifference to me; these people know me; you are a stranger here." It was the first time I had ever been in that city, the first time I had ever looked into the faces of that audience. I was taken out to the place where the meeting was to be held. I was introduced by that Senator to that audience.

I made my address, Mr. President, and I laid before that audience one after another of several very important measures that had been pending before the United States Senate. I remember now that one of them was a bill introduced here for the valuation of railroad property by the Interstate Commerce Commission. I read the roll call of the Senate, starting with Aldrich and ending with Wetmore. That is the way the roll call happened to begin and end at that time.

Mr. President, after having stated the object of the bill—for instance, the bill for the valuation of railway property—as I proceeded with that roll call it would have been an interesting study for any one of you Senators to have been where you could have observed that audience. They had a pretty fair understanding when I got through of the need of railway valuation as a basis for regulation. As that roll call proceeded they began to lean forward. As we passed down the alphabet to that letter within the group, beginning with the letter of the alphabet in which their Senator would be found, I noticed them all leaning forward in their seats, more and more attentive, more and more tense. As I reached the name of that Senator there were expressions of profound surprise upon their faces as they turned and looked one into the other's face. There was not any outbreak on the first roll call; but, Mr. President, when I went on down through important measures on the second or third roll call there were demonstrations from the audience of hostility to their Senator. Presently there were outcries, there were hisses; men rose in their seats with expressions of denunciation upon their lips, and he was literally driven from the platform. When I finished he was walking to and fro back of the auditorium. I said to him: "Senator, personally I have not the slightest feeling in this matter; this is not a personal matter; it embodies a great principle of government; that is, that the people shall be represented. I am sorry that you went on the platform." He was a good, game fellow, and he said to me: "It is all right; you were perfectly square, but if I had known how hot you were going to make it for me I would not have gone up there and introduced you."

Mr. President, the record votes of the Senate since we have adopted the constitutional amendment which gives the right to the voters of this country to vote directly for Senators, are going to grow in importance year by year, and the people of the different States and of the different congressional districts are going to be informed of the record made by Representatives and Senators upon questions touching profound and vital interests. That, Mr. President, I believe is one of the means of the redemption of representative government.

I ask you here on this floor this evening what valid excuse will you give to the electorate in your various States for voting to enshroud in secrecy the returns that these corporations and these possessors of immense fortunes are making upon their income reports? Why, in a hearing before the House of Representatives, I find one case that is especially interesting. May I just ask the attention of the Senate to it? I read from page 38, No. 1, of the "Hearing before the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, House of Representatives, on House resolution 221; No. 1:"

> The contention over the estate of L. V. Harkness, lately deceased Standard Oil magnate, said to be valued at $100,000,000, has uncovered what may prove to be one of the greatest frauds in the history of the United States income tax, involving more than $1,000,000 in taxes and penalties. A record of 700 pages has been filed in New York in connection with a suit by the State of New York to determine whether the estate is taxable under the New York inheritance law. The heirs have set up the claim that the estate is not taxable, alleging that Harkness was not a resident of the State of New York, but of Louisville, Ky.
> Among the records is evidence showing that the total Federal income tax paid by Harkness was $58,035. The records do not reveal the exact value of the estate, but the statement of the New York State tax commissioners places the value of the estate at $100,000,000. This estate consists almost entirely of stocks and bonds, among which the most numerous are Standard Oil securities, which not only pay enormous dividends, but which have also nearly doubled in value since the time of the famous "dissolution." Even at the rate of 5 per cent, which is far below the average rate on stocks, the income from an estate of $100,000,000 would be not less than $5,000,000.

And yet this man paid what? The paltry sum, under the Federal income-tax law, of $58,035.

The loss to the United States Treasury therefore would be $283,000 per year.

Oh, Mr. President, by this very bill you are searching out all possible sources of taxation in order to meet the demands which have been laid upon the bended backs of the American people, because of the excess of appropriations largely—very largely, Mr. President—due to the enormous preparedness program which has been put through the Congress of the United States, for which the electorate two or four years hence, when this false, this infamous, artificial, fraudulent campaign for preparedness shall have worn itself out and the people have come to know how they have been imposed upon—then, Mr. President, there will be a revulsion of sentiment against the enormous taxation which has been laid by this administration upon the people for "preparedness"; and yet it was not enough to satisfy my brethren upon this side; they would have had still more of it.

Mr. President, we are exhausting, I say, by this bill, as we have been doing by previous legislation, every possible means to meet the demands which the cataclysm of the world war has brought upon the country. Why, then, I ask my colleagues upon the Republican side, and some Senators on the other side as well, do you cover up with secrecy, so that there may be an evasion of taxation, the incomes of the great, big property owners, the magnates who have filched their fortunes, in violation of the Sherman law, out of the American people? Why are you in favor of a system of secrecy in regard to this income tax that would put a shield in front of the corporations of this country and enable them to lie about their incomes? Go to the country, go to the voters, and justify it, if you can. You can not do it.

Mr. President, I have said what I desired to say upon this question of an income tax. I am going to say something else upon another portion of this bill before it shall become a law; but I say to you that in my humble opinion you can not find any justification anywhere—I can not, anyhow—for voting against this amendment offered by my colleague from Wisconsin. It applies to the big corporations, to the men who get millions and millions of income from sources, as to a part of which at least, if they paid the penalties under the Sherman Antitrust Act, they would be wearing stripes. You know that; every one of you know it. Now, then, let those gentlemen come up—it is not much for them to pay—let them come up and pay, and let them put the cards on the table. Let us have no concealment about this income tax any more, corporation or personal.

The amendment as offered by my colleague asks for nothing except what the public is entitled to know; and I want to suggest to Senators here as I close what I have got to say that it does seem to me that we had better let the public know about this matter to the extent to which my colleague's amendment goes.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I shall be very brief this evening. I can well understand, and I am quite in sympathy with, the impatience of the committee with respect to passing this bill at an early date. The committee should have, and I believe it will have, the thanks of an appreciative American people. They have brought from the Committee on Finance a most acceptable bill. Very few bills are perfect, if, indeed, any be perfect; but, Mr. President, knowing, as I do, the desire of the committee for early action on the bill, I can not, and I shall not, fail to say a few words at this time in favor of the pending amendment.

Mr. President, the previous remarks in behalf of this amendment have covered the ground so well that it would seem to be a work almost of supererogation for me to say much more; but when we establish the policy of an income tax, as we have by our constitutional amendment and statutes made thereunder, as a logical, as a necessary, as an inevitable result it should follow that the returns under the income tax should be made public.

As has been asked here, Is this public business we are about? It is. Why, then, say to the public that they shall not have access to the tax return? Are such returns "private" public documents? No, Mr. President; they are not private public documents. They ought not to be private. Go into the assessor's or tax collector's office of the various counties in the States of the Union and you can ascertain all the facts from the tax returns. Any citizen may walk into a tax collector's office, assessor's office, or the office of the clerk of the board of supervisors and say, "Let me see your tax books, please; let me see the assessment of Mr. John Smith, Mr. William Jones, or Mr. HENRY ASHURST." The humblest citizen of the State is accorded that privilege in every county in which I have ever been in this Union. Why, then, Mr. President, should these great interests that wield such tremendous power be permitted to file an affidavit and a return and make payment of taxes upon that return when it is not subject to review, not subject to investigation?

If the full light of publicity were thrown upon the return, if many inquiring eyes were turned upon it, the truth would be discovered. If there be nothing wrong about the return, why this secrecy?

Within a few days Democratic Senators will be speaking from the stump. We will soon not only be making the woods but the welkin ring, telling how—and it will be true—we drove a corrupt lobby from this Capitol in 1913; how we forced the light of publicity upon the lobby's doings and compelled it to make legitimate arguments to committees instead of arguments of devious kinds, as it had been making in the "good old days." That is what we will be telling. We will be telling how we have destroyed the "invisible government" that reigned so long in these Houses of Congress. We will be telling how we destroyed the workings of that "wireless" which used to run from the White House to the "special interests" in the days of Taft and Roosevelt.

While telling these things we will be forced to add that we took good care to see that these same special interests were guarded and protected, and that whether they pay much or little or make a false return or not their doings should not be made public.

No, Mr. President! Let us be fair and courageous until the last hour, and preserve in its entirety the splendid record upon which we are going before the American people.

When the Democratic Party came into power it took the control from the special interests. It lodged that control into the hands of the people. To-day it is the party to whom people appeal for justice and for right reason. No progressive citizen will appeal to the other party. Why? Because it was tried for 14 years and failed. Its record to-day is the cheerless words, "Forget it." It faces this campaign with an inventory of past mistakes and we face the campaign with an inventory of good works and good deeds.

There is every reason why the amendment should be adopted, and no logical or fair reason, in conscience or in economics, why these papers showing the income-tax returns should be filed away, perchance to be examined only if some future President may give an order to some person to examine them.

Mr. President, the States are going to adopt an income tax. It will be of great benefit to the various States if they may, through their appropriate officials, acquire this information for the purpose of making their assessments.

Senators may sit here in their seats with a feeling of security, but it will be different when you go before the country. The country is watching this question. I have received numerous letters—a few from my own State and many from other States—asking why we have been so tender with respect to these great interests; why we are so very cautious to see that their transactions with the Government shall not be disclosed, but that they shall have a screen thrown about them, so that the ordinary citizen will be afforded no opportunity to investigate and ascertain the truth.

I earnestly hope, good as the bill is, that it will be made better by the adoption of this amendment. The distinguished chairman of the committee was not in the Chamber when I made the observation that I could well appreciate the apparent impatience of the committee in regard to these tedious speeches that have been made this afternoon. The committee, I repeat in the presence of the chairman, who has just come in, have brought out a good bill from the committee. They have worked diligently, they have worked faithfully, and the impartial historian is going to give the chairman of this committee a large and generous share of credit and of honor for the good work he has done. But, Mr. President, great as is the Finance Committee, learned and wise as are its members, they must not for one moment ever let the idea enter their heads that an individual Senator is precluded from offering an amendment to this bill, or that he must be told that we are in a hurry to get this bill through.

I am to-day a candidate for reelection to the United States Senate. I should like to be home campaigning. I have been a Member of this body four years and five months and I have been absent from the Senate's sessions but three days. I am willing to stay here until the election day, if necessary, in order to do the business of the country, and I hope we will not adjourn until we pass the corrupt-practices act and the Webb bill and the other bills that the country expects of us. If I were a Republican, as I am a Democrat, I should be ashamed of the record which the Republican Party has made in its opposition to the corrupt-practices act. This is a progressive age. This is an age when people have come to the conclusion that the Golden Rule instead of the rule of gold shall prevail; and I say to you Republicans that if you block the passage of the corrupt-practices act it will be because you believe now, as of old, that Senatorships and Presidencies can be acquired by auction instead of by election.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator is entirely mistaken if he means to intimate that I have manifested any impatience with Senators who desire to offer amendments and who desire to discuss them. What I did in respect to this matter was not done in a spirit of impatience at all. When the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HUSTING] offered his amendment I was under the honest impression, and am still under that impression, that substantially the very same proposition had been presented by him earlier in the consideration of this bill, and that after very thorough and exhaustive discussion, and after a very lengthy and able speech delivered by the Senator himself, the Senate had voted upon his amendment. Whether it was a yea-and-nay vote I do not now recall, but I am rather inclined to think it was a yea-and-nay vote; and I did feel that the Senate, in the circumstances in which we find ourselves to-night, ought not to have its time taken up in a rediscussion of something upon which it had already acted and acted with fullness of information, so far as the Senate could get that information from the discussions which took place.

I do not think the discussion we have had to-night has developed any fact with reference to this matter that was not developed in the first discussion. I have no disposition to continue that discussion. This question was presented to the committee. We gave it very thorough consideration. We decided that the law as it is now written ought to be continued in force. Of course that is not binding upon the Senate. I am not insisting that the Senate shall be bound by the action of the committee; but I do say that we gave this matter thorough consideration, and considered all the arguments that presented themselves to our minds, pro and con. Now it is for the Senate to settle the question again.

I hope we may now have a vote, and I trust this amendment may not prevail, because I do not think it would be wise policy to throw these returns open.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish in just two or three minutes to give some of the reasons which have influenced the failure to make these returns public.

It has not been for the purpose of concealing the condition of the big corporations. Nearly every big corporation under its State laws, is required to disclose its condition each year. We certainly have not been influenced by any desire to keep the fortunes of the very rich from being made public. The true reason, the true argument, has been that there are a great many men in the smaller lines of business, men of small fortunes, men of limited business, who will be injured by the annual publication of their exact financial condition and their exact profit. That is what has influenced us to agree to the failure to make public any of these returns. There are a great many professional men of limited means and not large incomes who would be embarrassed by the publication annually of just what they were making.

It was in consideration, not of the great fortunes, not of the big corporations, but of those of much more limited means who might be adversely affected by publication that the committee took the action that it did; and the threat that this injury would come was one of the arguments usually made against income taxes.

Mr. PENROSE. And in this bill also.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HUSTING]. On that the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. GRONNA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I announce the same transfer of my pair as on the last roll call and vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. OVERMAN'S name was called). The present occupant of the Chair is paired with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], who is absent on account of sickness. Being unable to get a transfer, I withhold my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] to the senior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] and vote "nay."

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARDWICK (after having voted in the negative). I inquire whether the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. HARDWICK. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. STONE. I am advised that if my pair, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], were present he would vote as I have announced I would vote. Therefore I wish to have my vote recorded in the negative.

Mr. HARDWICK. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and will allow my vote in the negative to stand.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

So Mr. HUSTING'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 141, after line 23, it is proposed to add as a new paragraph the following words:

The commission shall have power to investigate the Paris economy pact and similar organizations and arrangements in Europe.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. After conferring with the chairman of the committee, I have agreed to make no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. I have one more amendment to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, line 24, after the word "partnership," insert "except income exempt under section 4 of this act," and on page 21, after line 25, after the word "deductions," insert "and credit."

Mr. SIMMONS. I think those are very proper amendments, and they ought to be added to the bill.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. I offer the following amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 143, at the end of line 15, insert:

The foregoing provision shall not be construed to deprive the proper State court of jurisdiction in actions for damages thereunder.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask to see the amendment for a moment.

Mr. STERLING. I think perhaps the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge will be willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHAFROTH in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES. I offer an amendment on page 99, line 15.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 99, after line 15, add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 56. That section 3255 of the Revised Statutes as amended by act of June 3, 1896, and as further amended by act of March 2, 1911, be further amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3255. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may exempt distillers of brandy made exclusively from apples, peaches, grapes, pears, pineapples, oranges, apricots, berries, plums, pawpaws, persimmons, prunes, figs, or cherries from any provision of this title relating to the manufacture of spirits, except as to the tax thereon, when in his judgment it may seem expedient to do so: Provided, That where, in manufacture of wine, artificial sweetening has been used the wine or the fruit pomace residuum may be used in the distillation of brandy, as such use shall not prevent the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, from exempting such distiller from any provision of this title relating to the manufacture of spirits, except as to the tax thereon, when in his judgment it may seem expedient to do so: And provided further, That the distillers mentioned in this section may add to not less than 500 gallons (or 10 barrels) of grape cheese not more than 500 gallons of a sugar solution made from cane, beet, starch, or corn sugar, such solution to have a saccharine strength of not to exceed 10 per cent, and may ferment the resultant mixture on a winery or distillery premises, and such fermented product shall be regarded as distilling material."

Mr. HUGHES. If there is any explanation necessary, I will state that the wine producers in certain sections of the country desire to use certain by-products, by means of which their products can be perfectly utilized and from which can be distilled brandy. This provision will add to the revenues of the Treasury $100,000 a year. The Department of Agriculture and the Treasury Department favor it. I know of no reason why it should not be adopted.

Mr. PHELAN. I move to amend the amendment by adding, in line 12, page 2, the words "95 per cent pure."

Mr. HUGHES. I have no objection to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. Following the amendment just agreed to, insert the following:

That distilled spirits, known commercially as gin, of not less than 80 per cent proof may at any time within eight years after entry in bond at any distillery be bottled in bond at such distillery for export without the payment of tax under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey whether this amendment is not identical with a bill which has already passed the House of Representatives and which was pending before the Finance Committee?

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator is correct about that.

Mr. PENROSE. I wish to say, for the information of the Senate, that the bill was referred to a subcommittee at the last meeting of the Finance Committee of which I was a member, and I think the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] was a member, and there was a third member of the committee whose name I do not recall; and I think the subcommittee is unanimous that the measure ought to pass. It is to correct an omission in the revenue law. I therefore, as a minority Member of this body, recommend the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. HUGHES. It is simply to cure a situation that has grown up as the result of the European war.

Mr. SIMMONS. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PHELAN. On page 90, line 3, I move to strike out "90 days" and in lieu thereof to insert "one year." I believe this is agreeable to the Senator in charge of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. STONE. I wish to know just what we are to vote upon.

Mr. PHELAN. Does the Senator desire an explanation.

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. PHELAN. The provision is that there shall be levied against the producer of such wine a tax of 50 cents per proof gallon of grape brandy or wine spirits so used by him in the fortification of such wines during the preceding month, which assessment shall be paid by him within 90 days from the date of notice thereof.

Mr. STONE. Why should it be extended?

Mr. PHELAN. It should be extended because it would be impossible for the wine maker to finance himself and make a very considerable payment within 90 days.

Mr. HUGHES. I will state that while I am not authorized to accept the amendment, it seems to me to be a fair and just provision. We know the Government will not lose a dollar, but, as the Senator says, it will enable the wine makers to finance themselves.

Mr. PHELAN. For some years past they have paid a 3-cent or 10-cent tax.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, we do not know what is going on on the other side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. PHELAN. I am insisting that if they are to pay a 55-cent tax, we do not want to make it any more difficult for them than is possible. I want to make it as easy for them as I can.

Mr. THOMAS. Does not the Senator think one year is too long?

Mr. PHELAN. I will make the amendment read six months instead of 90 days.

Mr. THOMAS. I will not object to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 90, line 3, strike out "90 days" and insert "six months."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will not be adopted. The entire matter has been fought out and thrashed out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. THOMAS. I rise to a question of order. The vote has been announced, and it is too late to call for the yeas and nays. Another Senator has been recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained. The Senator from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to invite the attention of the Senate to an amendment which is lying on the table of the Secretary, tendered by myself and embodying what is known as the Webb bill. I make this announcement of designation that Senators who are interested in the subject may recall the contents of the measure by this designation.

Mr. President, I have tendered an amendment to the revenue bill in the form of a specific section to be added, if adopted, at the end of the bill. The amendment comprises the exact words, phraseology, and sentences of the bill which lately passed the House for the purpose of encouraging export trade.

Mr. President, I desire the consideration of that amendment, if such can be had this evening without serious inconvenience or embarrassment to the vote upon the revenue bill.

I really have but one or two words to state what I generally assume is known to be the purpose of this bill. It is assumed, Mr. President, by those who engage in large commerce in this country and those who are engaged in foreign commerce that they expect to expand their undertakings to foreign countries. That if they can be permitted to consolidate their agencies into a single body they will be enabled to sell abroad with such advantages by the lessening of expenses that they will be able to hold the markets in South America and in Europe against the competitors of the United States.

The Federal Trade Commission—certain members of it I may add, including its chairman, Edwin N. Hurley, a very able and efficient officer, schooled in all matters touching trade and having personally visited South America, and having given the subject his personal investigation, and aided by others in connection with that same commission—have reported that the expense upon each individual attempting to open a branch in Europe or in South America for the purpose of extending trade is so great and the inconveniences so many that it is discouraging to the entrance upon the undertaking, but that if there could be a measure which afforded an opportunity for consolidation in a single agency to one or half a dozen or a dozen different branches of commerce, such combination or consolidation to have its office and bureau for the purpose of purely export trade abroad, it would facilitate trade to such an extent as to make it profitable. For this reason they advocate it. Mr. Hurley has gone to great trouble to give to the legislative body volumes of information for their guidance. I now present the volumes for reference by them.

It is clear, Mr. President, and here I must state it, that these provisions impinge upon what is known as the Sherman Anti-trust Act, and likewise upon what is known as the Clayton Act, and work to a modified degree some repeal of those provisions so far as those laws would prevent organization to aid foreign trade. There is no object of modifying either of these statutes for domestic trade. The Federal Trade Commission, and particularly Chairman Hurley, are anxious to have it known that as to all domestic commerce they are anxious that nothing be done to change the status of those laws. It is as to foreign trade they are in this measure addressing themselves.

With this statement I should like to hear from the able Senator the chairman of the Finance Committee [Mr. SIMMONS] whether he feels from his own information and discussion with the Senators as to the amendment that I have tendered that it would take such a field and be so prolonged as to affect the due disposition of this measure. I pause for information from him.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I temporarily yield to the Senator at this time, not yielding the floor.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the proposition of the Senator from Illinois to amend the pending bill by adding what is known as the Webb bill, the provisions and purpose of which he has just discussed, was considered by the Finance Committee very thoroughly. The committee was unable to agree, and it made no recommendations to the Senate with respect to it.

Personally, I am very much in favor of the amendment. I should like to see it added to the pending bill. I think it would accomplish great good; but I have conferred with my colleagues on both sides of the Chamber and I find very determined opposition to it.

I find that if the amendment is insisted upon it will probably be days, if not weeks, before we will be able to secure a vote upon this bill and before Congress will be able to adjourn.

I do not think, important as I believe the amendment to be, that it is so important to pass it just at this time that we should put Senators to the inconvenience of a delay of the adjournment of Congress and the passage of the pending bill for the length of time which I am absolutely sure it would take to dispose of the bill if the amendment is to be discussed and acted upon. I am saying this after most thorough investigation of the situation. If I had any doubt about the situation I would not say it; if I believed that we could secure action upon this amendment within two days I would favor pressing it; but I am absolutely sure that that can not be done. For that reason I am inclined to appeal to the Senator from Illinois to withdraw the amendment.

The bill which he now offers as an amendment has passed the other House by a very large majority; it is pending in this body, and it will not die with the adjournment of this session, but it will be on the calendar when we meet here in December. Then we can give it thorough consideration, with ample time to discuss it. I hope the Senator will not press his amendment under these circumstances.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, before I continue my observations, I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin, who, I understand, desires to give me some views as to the time he thinks the discussion from his viewpoint will require.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, for myself, I am very strongly opposed to the adoption of the proposed amendment at this time. I regard it as altogether too important to be taken up in the closing hours of this session. I think it would consume a very considerable portion of time if we were to debate it as thoroughly as its importance would require. I can not bring myself, with my present opinion upon the subject, to consent that the Sherman Act shall be so amended as to permit the formation of combinations in this country to exploit, as I believe such formations would exploit, the great masses of the people of other countries. I do not wish to take the time of the Senate now to go into the matter more fully, but I will say to the Senator from Illinois that I am convinced, from information which I have as to the attitude of Senators, not only upon this side of the Chamber but upon the other side as well, toward this amendment, that we should be entering upon a subject of discussion the end of which no Member of this body can at this time foretell.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield to me?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MYERS. As the genial Senator from Illinois is distributing his time, and has called for an expression of opinion as to the advisability of considering his amendment at this time, I take advantage of his generous offer to say a few words on the subject and to express my ideas in relation to it.

I am glad the Senator from Illinois has offered this amendment, and I have been very much in the hope that it would now be considered by the Senate and decided on its merits. I see no reason why it should not be. It is a matter of vast importance. It is a matter to which I have been giving much study and attention for the last two or three years, and it is a matter on which I have very decided views.

Two years ago, when the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate, of which I then had and have now the honor of being a member, was considering the bill for the Federal Trade Commission law and formulating it as it was reported to the Senate, and was sitting almost daily, I tried to have the principles of the Webb bill adopted by that committee and reported out and made a part of the Federal Trade Commission law. At that time my suggestions met with very slight consideration; no Senator seemed disposed to pay any attention to them; no Senator seemed to regard them as being of much merit or importance. I received very little encouragement. I am glad, however, to see that, with further publicity given to the matter, the principles embodied in the Webb bill have grown very much in public favor until they are now approved by no less a personage than the President of the United States, as evidenced by his remarks upon the subject at quite a number of recent public gatherings where he made addresses, and that they also have the unanimous approval and indorsement of the Federal Trade Commission.

I feel glad to have had the honor, so far as I know, of having originated—or, at least, if not having originated, of having originally presented—the principles embodied in this bill to a committee of this body and having urged their embodiment in a bill to be reported to the Senate. I feel very much gratified that my views, which two years ago met with such scant consideration, have grown so much in popular approval. While at that time I was not able to have the principles of the Webb bill embodied in the bill which was reported by the Interstate Commerce Committee of this body and made a part of its report in favor of the trade commission law, I did succeed in having adopted by the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, at my instance, the provision of the Federal Trade Commission law which authorizes and directs the Federal Trade Commission to investigate the practices of foreign combinations organized and conducted for the purpose of beating down and keeping down the prices of our export products. It was at my instance that that provision was by that committee put into the Federal Trade Commission law, which was passed by the Senate, accepted by the House, and became a part of the law.

I am also glad to say that when the members of the Federal Trade Commission were appointed and were assembled to organize, when the President of the United States addressed them on their duties and on his understanding of the meaning of the law, the President urged them, as their first and most important duty, to take up the work, authorized by my provision, of studying the workings and the practices of foreign combinations organized and conducted for the purpose of keeping down the prices of our export products.

The commission, I believe, did take that question up as its first work, and conducted an extended investigation through its agents in foreign countries of the workings of the combinations formed to keep down the prices of our export products. As the result of that investigation the commission has made an exhaustive report, which, I believe, was submitted to Congress, or to the President and Congress jointly, in which the commission reports findings of fact and gives its conclusions and views, unanimously taking the position that a law of this kind is badly needed and should be enacted. It reported as a result of that investigation that our export trade is the subject of vicious, unfair, and dishonest practices and combinations in foreign countries which work to the detriment of our export trade, and therefore to the detriment of this country and of its prosperity. I am glad to say the commission is unanimous in that report, and the report is before us; at least, it has been placed where it is available to us. I think that its reasoning is incontrovertible; I think it shows facts and submits conclusions that ought to convince any fair-minded man that there is great need of a law of this kind.

Our exporters in many instances are at the mercy of these conscienceless combinations in foreign countries. I know the testimony taken in that investigation, which I have read, shows that as to some of our products the buyers of Europe buy through one buying agency—that is, practically all of the principal buying in Europe in some lines of our products is done through one purchasing agent. That agent says to our exporters, "We will pay you so much for your product; and if you do not want to take that, you must wait until you are willing to sell at that price."

Our manufacturers and producers are engaged in continuous production of their goods. They must keep in operation. They can not afford to close down. They are men to whose capital there is some limit; they are not all possessed of unlimited capital; they can not afford to go ahead year after year producing their goods, laying them up, storing them away, and waiting before disposing of their goods an indefinite length of time, disregarding these unfair offers from abroad. The consequence is that in a measure they must take what they can get, and in many instances they have to take the prices that are offered by the foreign agencies.

Mr. President, the esteemed Senator from Illinois seems to be about to interrupt me. If I am taking him off of the floor, I will desist; but I understood him to invite other Senators to express their views, and I accepted his invitation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield further to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LEWIS. I assure the Senator I do not want to disturb him. I will be very glad to hear his views as to whether this amendment should be considered to-night; but, if the Senator desires to continue further remarks as to the merits of the measure, I am afraid the measure will have to be laid before the Senate.

Mr. MYERS. I thought that was what the esteemed Senator wanted. I thought his amendment was before the Senate and that he had called for expressions about it. I will bring my remarks to a close very shortly, however. I know I am trespassing on the generosity of the esteemed Senator from Illinois, who is entitled to the floor.

Mr. LEWIS. I do not want to disturb the Senator, because his observations are very illuminating and entertaining upon that particular subject.

Mr. MYERS. I thank the Senator for the compliment. I appreciate that he says my remarks are very illuminating, but the Senator does not want to hear much more of them. I know I am trespassing on his time.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I may say, if that is true, it would merely be because of the contrast of the brilliancy of the Senator's observations to my feeble efforts, and I should have to protect myself under the law of self-preservation.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator is indulging in sarcasm, I fear. I am not worthy to be mentioned in the same breath with the brilliant Senator from Illinois. He is more generous with his compliments than his time. I shall desist directly, thanking him for his patience.

Mr. LEWIS. I want to say to the Senator that if he desires to continue his very interesting discussion upon the merits of the matter he must not let me cut him off. I only desire to remind him that if he could proceed without taking me from the floor I would be glad to yield.

Mr. MYERS. I am nearly through. I will finish in a very few minutes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. This symposium may be interesting, and possibly instructive, but the Senator from Illinois has no right to hold the floor and farm it out to other Senators indefinitely.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, if I am trespassing too far, I will conclude. I was fearful from what the Senator from Illinois said that he was about to withdraw his amendment. There would then be nothing before the Senate pertaining to it, and I wanted to urge him not to withdraw it. If the good Senator from New Hampshire and the good Senator from Illinois will bear with me just about one minute longer, I will close, and not say anything further.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, it is getting very late and I presume the chairman of the Finance Committee wishes to dispose of this bill to-night. I really think the Senate ought to proceed in order, and if the Senator from Illinois is going to withdraw his amendment, he should be allowed to do so. If he is going to offer it, then, of course, the Senator from Montana has a perfect right to proceed to debate it. He is debating the merits of a question now which is not before the Senate.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, that is not unusual at all. However, I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that if he will be patient for just a few moments, I will quit. I was fearful that if I did not say a few words now, I would have no opportunity at all. I presume I have occupied so much of the time of the Senate to-day that Senators are not to be blamed for becoming weary. I do not wonder at their protesting. I do not see why this amendment should not be considered on its merits. Suppose it does take two or three or four days, what are three or four days of time as compared to the importance of our export trade. [Laughter.] Mr. President, even if trespassing on the time of others, I am glad I am humorous. The Senator from North Carolina spoke of this debate continuing three or four days, and I was quoting him.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, three or four days of time is little compared to eternity; but I do not think we want to stay here and listen to the Senator for three or four days.

Mr. MYERS. I was not expecting to take that length of time nor a small part of it. I supposed others would speak on the amendment. The Senator from New Hampshire need not stay and listen to me a moment if he does not choose to do so.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I renew my point of order. There is something before the Senate or there is not. Furthermore, the Senator from Illinois can not farm out the floor to other Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized, if he desires to proceed.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I will finish in a few sentences, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. LEWIS. If the Senator from Montana only desires that length of time, I will yield.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I think we ought to consider the amendment now, and not put it over until December. The December session, the winter session, is going to be crowded with land-leasing legislation, water-power legislation, appropriation bills, and other things that must come up then, and we will be lucky if we get through with the program which has already been mapped out for the winter session. I hope the Senator will not withdraw his amendment, and that we may consider it now. Now, Mr. President, having trespassed further on the time of the genial Senator from Illinois than I intended, I close. I may have more to say to the Senate on this highly important subject at another time. I thank the esteemed Senator from Illinois for his kind indulgence and thank the Senate for its attention.

Mr. JONES. May I suggest to the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. JONES. I merely want to suggest to the Senator from Montana that there is nothing to prevent him offering the amendment if the Senator from Illinois withdraws it.

Mr. MYERS. The consensus of opinion seems to be that I am not entitled to the floor. Therefore I will not answer the esteemed Senator from Washington further than to thank him for his kind suggestion and to say I will consider it. I may act as he suggests. Circumstances will determine my course. This matter must and shall have attention.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, from the carefully considered remarks of the able Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], and from the record I have produced, it is very apparent that this matter has great merit, and will at a proper time be considered by the Senate; but the eminent chairman of the committee having charge of this bill, feeling that the introduction of this matter at this time would seriously interfere with the prospects of an early vote and the proper disposition of the revenue bill, and as he is informed by six Senators on the Republican side and three or more on the Democratic that six days of debate would be consumed in an effort to defeat the measure, I am compelled to respect his wishes and not urge my amendment at this time; but I give notice now that I shall at the first opportunity, even if it has to be at the December session, press the matter because of the merit it discloses, as is shown by the report made upon it by the efficient officers of our Government who have given so deep and conscientious study to the subject. I shall have this bill passed. I yield for the present.

I ask, Mr. President, that my amendment may still remain on the table.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Secretary's desk, and call the attention of the Senator from Colorado to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 144, line 1, after the word "producer," it is proposed to insert the words "or merchant"; and on page 144, line 3, after the word "producer," it is proposed to insert the words "or merchant."

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I will not take any time in explaining this amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. I will accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to present an amendment, which I have submitted to the chairman of the committee, to come in after line 4 on page 23.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, after line 4, it is proposed to insert:

No penalty shall be imposed or collected from any person or corporation for failing heretofore or hereafter to retain a tax at the source, if it is shown satisfactorily that no tax was or would be due by reason of an exemption for which no claim was filed with such person or corporation by the person entitled to such exemption.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think that is a very proper amendment, and I accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I have an amendment which I wish to offer, and to which I invite the attention of the members of the committee and of the Senate.

I can hardly hope that the Senate is prepared at this time to accept this amendment as an amendment to the revenue bill, but it contains a principle which I think ultimately will be written into the law, and which I think ought to be considered. I should be glad to have the Senate adopt it, although I think it will arouse some controversy that would preclude its present adoption. It proposes to add a new section, 96-A, on page 141, after line 23, as follows:

The President of the United States shall have the right, after due public notice, to lower any rate on any article in any schedule of the tariff acts whenever he may find it practicable thereby to enlarge the exports of the United States to a foreign country by a reciprocal agreement whereby each party thereto shall agree to lower certain of its own tariff rates so as to enlarge the mutual exchange of commerce between the countries parties to such reciprocal contract, provided no rate shall be fixed by the President at a point lower than the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad, as ascertained by the United States Tariff Commission, or which shall permit unfair competition with American goods.

Mr. President, I am not going to detain the Senate by any discussion of this matter. I think every Senator here probably has his mind as fully made up now as it would be after several hours of discussion. I only wish now to submit it to the Senate. I shall not even ask for a record vote. If it be voted down, if it be not acceptable to the Senate, I shall not urge it. I am not a member of the committee. I think that we are able to expand our own internal activities in an important way by expanding our exports; we can not hope to expand our exports except to the extent that we permit imports to pay for those exports. Believing that, and believing that American exports can not be paid for in gold, but must be paid for ultimately in the products of other people, I believe that we should enlarge our own internal activities to the extent that we enlarge our exports, and that we must discriminate and permit imports of like value in order to expand these exports. Believing in that principle, I have drawn this proposed amendment for the RECORD, hoping to sow some seed that may ultimately lead to fruit.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator was kind enough to show me his amendment this afternoon, and I told him that it would be impossible for the committee to accept it. I trust we may have a vote on it, and that it may not prevail.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am going to take just one minute to say that the proposition offered by the Senator from Oklahoma has the sanction of the name of a great leader of the Republican Party.

Mr. OWEN. McKinley.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Blaine's whole administration of the State Department, really, in so far as economic problems were concerned, was embodied in exactly that principle.

Mr. GALLINGER. But, Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In just a moment. I remember, as a member of the Ways and Means Committee, going to the State Department. The entire committee was called there to confer with Mr. Blaine upon exactly this proposition. It was his desire that we should retain the sugar duties—at the time sugar in the bill as we were framing it was made free—in order that he, as Secretary of State, might have the opportunity to use those duties as a basis of enlarging our trade abroad.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator, so far as the reciprocity feature is concerned; but I do not recall that Mr. Blaine advocated giving the President of the United States authority to change tariff rates.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; that was exactly the provision that was embodied in the Dingley bill. The President was given exactly that power.

Mr. GALLINGER. Under reciprocal relations?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; in order that we might get reciprocal trade benefits out of it; just precisely that. If the Senator from Oklahoma had studied the tariff policy of Mr. Blaine as it was carried forward and, according to my recollection, embodied in the Dingley law by a provision in that law, I do not think he could have more accurately embodied it in an amendment than he has in the amendment which he has offered.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield the floor.

Mr. STONE. No; I desire to ask the Senator a question. I understood the Senator from Wisconsin to say that when he was a Member of the House of Representatives and a member of the Ways and Means Committee of the House the entire committee was called to the State Department to confer with Secretary Blaine about tariff legislation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes, Mr. President; that is exactly what I said.

Mr. STONE. May I inquire, if the Senator please, whether, according to his recollection, the honorable Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] was at that time a member of the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. He was not, Mr. President. I do not know that he was ever a member of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House. He was not at that time, in any event.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; I was not. I served with the Senator when he was a member.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And permit me to say, Mr. President, on the question of the propriety of the committee's going to the State Department to confer with Secretary Blaine under the circumstances, that Mr. Blaine was in ill health at that time to such an extent that it was impossible for him to address the committee standing. It was not possible for him then to appear before the Committee on Ways and Means at the House end of the Capitol.

Mr. SIMMONS. May I inquire of my friend who was Speaker of the House at that time?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Reed, of Maine, was Speaker of the House at that time.

Mr. STONE. The great and conspicuous Speaker, the rather renowned Speaker.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. He was, indeed, a great Speaker, as the Senator will recall. He was a Member of the House at that time.

Mr. STONE. I interrupt the Senator to call attention—special attention—to the fact that in those good old days of Republican control, even when Tom Reed, one of our great men, with whom I served in the House, as the Senator from Wisconsin did, was the Speaker of the House, as I understand the Senator, the Ways and Means Committee of the House, and I suppose also the Finance Committee of the Senate, were called to the State Department that they might gather around the then Secretary of State, Mr. Blaine, and receive not instructions, of course, but advice or suggestions from a wise and very able man as to public policies, legislative policies, then pending. I call attention to this fact because of the criticisms that have been recently made upon the Senate floor by Republican Senators that Democrats of one committee or another have been called into council with the Democratic President. This seems to be an old habit. Moreover, I think it altogether right that legislators and executive officials should so confer.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I had no idea that my reminiscent mood would be productive of anything political. The reason assigned for the Ways and Means Committee visiting the Department of State at that time was the condition of Mr. Blaine's health. I remember him as he greeted us, his face as white as parchment. The only thing in that face which seemed to be animated was those brilliant eyes that spoke of the wonderful intellect of the man. I recall that he attempted to discuss this question with us sitting in his chair, and that he finally said: "I am so accustomed to speak standing on my feet that I ask you to let me lean on the desk and speak to you." He was in very frail health. He made a talk to the Committee on Ways and Means that will always remain in my memory. He impressed upon us the importance of extending our trade and the importance of employing precisely the principle suggested by the Senator from Oklahoma as a means of opening foreign markets without sacrificing the principle of protection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHIELDS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 58, line 7, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That where any tax heretofore due and payable has been duly paid by the taxpayer, it shall not be re-collected from any person or corporation——

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Tennessee that I think we have just adopted that amendment, offered by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. Oh, no; it is a different amendment.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will say that the Senator from North Carolina is mistaken. I ask that the reading be continued.

Mr. SIMMONS. Probably I did not hear enough of the reading.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That where any tax heretofore due and payable has been duly paid by the taxpayer, it shall not be re-collected from any person or corporation required to retain it at its source, nor shall any penalty be imposed or collected in such cases from the taxpayer, or such person or corporation whose duty it was to retain it, for failure to return or pay the same, unless such failure was fraudulent and for the purpose of evading payment.

Mr. SHIELDS. This amendment is somewhat similar to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington, but it covers a case that that does not. I will ask that the chairman of the committee accept this amendment, and the two can be reconciled by the conference committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SHIELDS. I do not think the Senator from North Carolina heard the statement I made.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I did not. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. SHIELDS. This amendment covers cases of injustice in the collection of taxes that are not covered by the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington, and just accepted by the committee. I will ask that this be accepted, and that the two be reconciled by the conference committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. I can see no objection to that, Mr. President. I am not able now to catch the difference; but in conference we can take the two amendments and write out the correct principle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, when the Army appropriation bill was before the Senate the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], under a suspension of the rules, offered, and there was agreed to, an amendment providing for an appropriation of $2,000,000 for the support of the dependents of soldiers, enlisted men, in the militia and in the Regular Army for a certain period; that is to say, from the time of the call until the mustering out of the National Guard, a future event.

There have been two constructions of this amendment by the Comptroller of the Treasury. It seems that it was submitted to the comptroller before it had actually passed the Senate and House; and these two constructions by the comptroller very seriously affect the application of the appropriation. The comptroller holds that the benefits to the dependents of the National Guard can not begin to run until the date when the bill was signed, and in view of the veto and the subsequent delays, even on that theory there has been a very serious postponement. The object of the Senate, I submit, was to provide for the support of these dependents from the time that the bread winner entered the service and was unable to support his family, and the act, with all due submission, reads in that way, but the comptroller has ruled otherwise. In another respect he has held, as I see by the evening papers, that only those men who were in the National Guard at the time of the call of the President can have a benefit for their families. In this way cutting out a very large number of men with dependents who were recruited immediately after the call, and who were lawfully enlisted in the service of the United States. Since that time there has been a rule of recruiting adopted providing that men with dependents shall not be recruited, but at that time it was lawful, and on the impulse, responding to the call of the President, it was largely done.

I have therefore prepared and now offer an amendment, which I have discussed with a number of Senators on this side of the Chamber and with some on the other side, and which seems to be generally acceptable. This amendment seeks to correct the ruling made by the comptroller, and to make this provision for the dependents of the National Guardsmen take effect from the time that the man ceased to support his family and was sent to the frontier, and to be applicable to all classes of enlisted men with dependents who are serving there to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add the following as a new section at the end of the bill:

SEC. 106. The act approved August 29, 1916, being an act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, is hereby amended as follows:

"The sum of $2,000,000 therein appropriated to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War for the support of the family of each enlisted man of the Organized Militia or National Guard, or of the Regular Army, as therein provided, shall be available to be paid on the basis of and for time subsequent to June 18, 1916, the date of the call by the President, and the time for which such payment shall be made shall correspond with the time of service of the enlisted men, and payment shall be made without reference to the enlisted man having enlisted before or after the call by the President."

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland is in the nature of an appropriation or to correct a mistake in an appropriation bill. It has no place upon this bill. Of course, it is impossible for me to accept it. If there is urgency about it, the Senator could easily to-morrow secure the passage of a joint resolution and send it over to the House, and action should be had upon it. We can not afford to encumber this bill with amendments covering all sorts of subjects. I trust the Senator will not insist upon it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Is it not the understanding that Congress will adjourn to-morrow?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know that it is. No resolution has been passed. I do not think it will be possible for Congress to adjourn to-morrow.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What will be the objection to attaching it to this bill? It is to correct a manifest injustice and to carry out the will of the Congress imperfectly expressed in a measure passed some days ago.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senate wants to put it on the bill, that is for the Senate.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I hope the Senate will do it. These men are entitled to pay for the service rendered the Government. Congress has appropriated the money for that purpose, and to withhold it now would be very wrong.

Mr. SIMMONS. There are a great many other people in this country entitled to money that is due them, but we can not put claims of every class for every purpose upon a revenue bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator understands that this amendment is simply for the correction of an act passed by Congress a few days ago. As stated by the Senator from Maryland the auditor has made an interpretation which was not expected and really is contrary to the opinion or conclusion of anybody who considered the bill upon its passage. The Government of the United States can not afford to be unjust to the men who have offered their services and their lives in defense of the Nation's flag and upheld the Nation's honor.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator from Maryland is willing to have a vote taken upon the question, let it be taken.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I merely ask the Senator to permit a vote.

Mr. SIMMONS. Surely I have no objection to the Senate passing upon the question.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. All I ask is a vote.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I rose for the purpose of asking for the yeas and nays upon the amendment; but if the amendment is voted upon, I am confident it will be voted into the bill viva voce, and I will not delay, unless it becomes necessary, the proceedings of the Senate by calling for a yea-and-nay vote. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move to strike out of the bill sections 88, 89, 90, 92, 93, 94, 95, and 96.

Mr. STONE. Why not strike out all after the enacting clause?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There are really some revenue features of the bill that the Government needs and will be of benefit to the Government of the United States. The part that I endeavor to strike out is that part which is in the bill for political purposes and not for the benefit of the Government or the people of the United States.

I make this motion, and if the sections that I move to strike out go out of the bill it will carry out what is known as the tariff commission.

Mr. President, I have seen it stated in the papers that I am opposed to a tariff commission. That does not carry an absolute statement of the fact. I am opposed to this tariff commission. As a matter of fact, I have voted for a tariff commission in my legislative career, and I might do so again under certain circumstances. It is not the tariff commission that I object to; it is the purpose for which this tariff commission is to be created.

When the Dingley law was on the statute books, and a strong sentiment had grown up in this country against the protective tariff, the Republican Party at that time not being willing to lower the duties themselves, it was proposed that a tariff commission be created to help the Republican Party reduce its high tariff rates. I was heartily in favor of that commission, not because it was a tariff commission, but because the purpose of the commission was to move in a Democratic direction toward a lower tariff, and, besides, at that time there was not all the necessary machinery on the statute books to obtain the information that the Ways and Means Committee needed to properly legislate on the question of fixing customs duties.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator pardon me a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. HARDWICK. I should like to suggest to the Senator that at the time to which he refers, when he and I were Members of the House, there was a large number of Democratic Members of that body who were opposed to the tariff commission, even under the circumstances described by the Senator.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not contesting that proposition at all.

Mr. HARDWICK. I simply wanted to remind the Senator of that fact.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But my opposition to this Tariff Commission is not the mere fact that it is a tariff commission or that it is intended to gather certain facts. My opposition to this Tariff Commission, as I stated a few moments ago, is the direction in which this legislation is moving.

Subsequent to the time I speak of, and that my friend from Georgia speaks of, the Democratic Party in the House created what is known as the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in the Department of Commerce. That bureau is vested with practically all the power that is given to this so-called Tariff Commission, the power to investigate industrial conditions abroad and at home, to assemble facts and data for the information of Congress, and is required to report to the President of the United States and to the two Houses of Congress. I know of nothing that directly relates to the tariff that is embraced in the power given the commission in this bill that has not already been vested by Democratic legislation in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

There are some other powers that are given to the commission in the bill, but every one of those powers is embraced in the powers that have been given to the Trade Commission. Taking the power that has been given to the Trade Commission, the power that has been given to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, and the work that is being done by the Census Bureau, every subject that it is proposed to have this commission investigate is provided for now. There is not a particle of this legislation that the machinery of the Government can not to-day operate in reference to and does not operate in reference to.

It was only a few days ago that I read on the floor of this Chamber from a very able document prepared by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, giving information in reference to the very subject it is proposed to appoint this commission to investigate.

If there were no governmental powers to obtain facts for the information of a Ways and Means Committee of the House or a Finance Committee of the Senate, I would be willing to create some governmental bureau or some governmental body with powers to ascertain those facts. I would not care whether you called it a tariff commission or whether you called it a bureau of the Government, the name would be entirely immaterial. But you already have a bureau to do this work, and the laws have been enacted by the Democratic Party. Now you are proposing in this bill to make an annual appropriation of $300,000 a year to duplicate the work that is already being done by order of Democratic Congresses.

I do not know why the committee thought it necessary to make this an annual appropriation. Of course, I understand when they write in the law that the appropriation of $300,000 shall be an annual appropriation it will be paid out of the Treasury of the United States each year, and it will not be necessary to come back to Congress and ask for any more money unless they endeavored to exceed that amount, because the appropriation will be continued and Congress will have no further check over the matter unless there is a sentiment in both Houses of Congress existing at the same time to repeal the annual appropriation.

My objection to this tariff commission is that it is not going to accomplish the results desired. I hold in my hand an article that was written for the North American Review by Prof. F. W. Taussig, who occupies a chair in one of the leading universities of this country. Prof. Taussig is an authority on questions of this kind, and he writes this article on the proposal for a tariff commission. I will not read the entire article, but I desire to read to the Senate a few statements made by Prof. Taussig on this subject. He says:

> The first thing that needs to be borne in mind is that no tariff commission can settle policies. No administrative body of any kind can decide for the country whether it is to adopt protection or free trade, to apply more of protection or less, to enact "a tariff for revenue with incidental protection," or a system of purely fiscal duties. Such questions of principle must be settled by Congress—that is, by the voters.

Prof. Taussig is eminently right in reaching this conclusion. In fact he is so right that the Committee on Finance in preparing this bill has recognized that fact and do not authorize the commission that it proposes to appoint to do any work except a finding of facts. They are not authorized or directed to report their conclusions as to whether there shall be a high tariff rate or a low tariff rate to Congress; they are not authorized in any way to change the tariff laws of the country.

There has been a sentiment in the United States in favor of a tariff commission. There has been a sentiment in the United States that is in favor of taking the tariff out of politics. I think there has been a strong sentiment to that effect, and many men in the United States have favored and still favor and will continue to favor a tariff commission because they believe that if a tariff commission is created it will take away from the two Houses of Congress the control of tariff legislation and vest it in a body that will be independent of political control.

Well, of course, you and I know that that is an impossible proposition; that when the Constitution of the United States placed in the hands of the House of Representatives the sole authority to originate revenue legislation it decreed for all time to come that tariff legislation must originate in the House of Representatives; that it must be written by the Congress and can not be divorced from political control so long as that provision of the Constitution of the United States remains; and that provision of the Constitution will never be amended, because, no matter what gentlemen of high finance may think, and gentlemen who own the great industries of the country may desire, the plain people of the United States will never consent that the power to tax them shall be taken away from their immediate Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

It has been said that you are going to write a "scientific" tariff, and that the purpose of creating this board is to write a "scientific" tariff law. I am not surprised that men outside of the Congress of the United States should make that statement, but I am surprised that men in the Congress of the United States should stand for a proposition of that kind.

Do you Republicans believe that you can find men to act on this commission who will have a more intimate and scientific knowledge of industrial conditions and their relation to customs legislation than Walker, McKinley, Wilson, and Dingley?

In the first place, there can not be a scientific tariff law, and if there could be a scientific tariff law, are the Members of the Congress of the United States willing to admit that we can employ clerks in the departments who are more capable of writing scientific tariff laws than are we? If that be so, we had better send our commissions back to our people and ask them to send men here who are capable of representing them in connection with the great subjects with which we have to deal. Here is what Prof. Taussig says in reference to this subject:

> It is further to be borne in mind that the advocacy of a "scientific" settlement of the tariff does not carry us far. There are no scientific laws applicable to economic problems in the same way as the laws of physics are applicable to engineering problems. If we extend the term "science" to economics we must remember that it can refer in this subject only to certain generalizations and to a body of useful information, not to a system of clear-cut principles or laws.

He is eminently correct. You may establish a board or a bureau that can furnish Congress with a fund of useful information; and that is as far as you can go, because the representatives of the people must, of necessity, when they get that information, determine on what basis your tax laws shall be written.

It is the political principle that the people of the United States must decide how your custom tax laws shall be written. If they desire a low tariff, they elect a Democratic Congress; at least they are supposed to send them here for that purpose; if they want a high protective tariff, they send a Republican Congress; and on the basis of facts that your clerks may furnish you, either a Democratic House of Representatives or a Republican House of Representatives prepares a bill to meet the theory that the people of the United States have selected them to write on the statute books.

I know there is complaint about the committees of Congress making mistakes in the preparation of tariff legislation. In my own judgment there are mistakes made; there will always be mistakes made, no matter from what source you gather your information or in what hands you place the writing of the law; but the greatest difficulty that the Congress of the United States and its committees have to face on this subject is the fact that political exigencies drive the Republican Party or drive the Democratic Party to an entire revision of all the tariff schedules at one time. I do not think there is a Republican Member of this Senate who will deny the fact that if so unfortunate a thing to the country should happen in the next November election as the Republican Party being returned to power in both branches of Congress and the election of a Republican President, you would reenact tariff laws without waiting for the report of this tariff commission.

I ask, Is there a Senator on the Republican side who will controvert my statement? Not one. You are not going to await the report of this tariff commission if the people return you to power. We did not await the report of a tariff commission when the people returned us to power. They had given us the mandate; we obeyed it; and so will you.

The only thing I can say to you, if you want to enact carefully considered tariff laws, is to make them in detail; write one schedule at a time; take ample time, after careful consideration of each schedule, and you will improve the preparation of the law as we would improve the preparation of the law if we would go at it in that way. You will never improve it by paying $300,000 a year for a tariff commission, that will merely duplicate the facts that you will have in hand on the 4th day of March of next year if you are returned to power.

My friends on the Republican side of the Chamber have based their argument in favor of a tariff commission on the idea that the country and the Congress are entitled to know the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad, a theory which has been repudiated by Democratic Congresses until this tariff commission bill was presented to this Congress. The Democratic Party has never accepted until now this theory that we should write customhouse tax legislation by ascertaining what was the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad, because that of itself recognizes the fact that we should write such legislation for the special interests that it is desired to protect, and not primarily in the interest of the Government of the United States and its revenue.

Here I want to put on the stand on this subject of the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad, a Republican witness, Prof. Taussig, a man who believes in a protective tariff—a moderate protective tariff I must say, but a protective tariff—and I desire to call to your attention what he says with reference to this cost-of-production theory——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the Senator reads that, will the Senator tell me, for my personal information, where he gets the idea that Prof. Taussig is a Republican?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think I heard him so state before the Committee on Ways and Means at a hearing which was held when the Payne tariff bill was being considered.

Mr. GALLINGER. That will be news to the people of New England, I think.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. PENROSE. I will state, for the information of the Senator from Alabama, that I studied political economy under Prof. Taussig some 33 or 34 years ago at Harvard College, and as soon as I graduated I endeavored to forget as rapidly as possible all I had learned under him. He was a free trader, with no politics, and is to-day. I speak that with the highest respect for Prof. Taussig, for he is a notable man, and has made many contributions to economic literature, for what they are worth.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am sure that the Senator from Pennsylvania proceeded to forget Prof. Taussig's instruction, because, as I have said, although Prof. Taussig believes in a protective tariff, he believes in a low protective tariff, and I am satisfied that the Senator from Pennsylvania differs from him, because the Senator from Pennsylvania believes in so high a protective tariff that the industries of Pennsylvania will meet with no competition whatever from abroad.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield further to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator will permit me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. PENROSE. I am so accustomed to that kind of argument that I am becoming rather callous to it. As a Senator of this body, I am no more interested in the industries of Pennsylvania than I am in those of Alabama, but whether or not Prof. Taussig—and I speak with the greatest respect and regard for that gentleman—believes in duties on imports, the duties he favors are even lower than those ad valorem duties advocated by the Senator from Alabama, and, to my mind, amount to practically free trade and render him ineligible to qualify as a Republican witness.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I am satisfied if the Senator will take the trouble to read Prof. Taussig's latest book on the tariff——

Mr. PENROSE. I have read all his books.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. He will find that the professor states that he does favor a protective tariff. However, he is an able man, a man of very great scientific attainments; and here is what he says about the cost-of-production theory:

> For example, it is often maintained, not only in the United States but in other countries as well, that the scientific solution of the question is that of the equalization of competition, or the equalization of costs of production. The underlying idea is that such duties shall be imposed as will equalize the difference between cost of production within a country and a lower cost of production in foreign countries. Now, I do not myself believe that this is a scientific or a commendable basis for the levying of protective duties. Consistently carried out, it amounts to saying that all industries are equally worth having; but when differences in cost are great, duties should be correspondingly high; that every industry, no matter how ill adapted to a country's natural resources or its industrial qualities, should have the equalizing protection; that we should never stop to consider what are the directions in which we can apply a country's labor and capital to greatest advantage.

And no one can determine that except the Congress of the United States. You will accomplish nothing by telling this commission to ascertain production cost, as you do in this bill. You can not ascertain the production cost or the difference in the production cost at home and abroad, because the difference of cost between two plants in this country you would often find is greater than the difference between the average cost in this country and the cost in some plant abroad. It is a matter that can not be ascertained; it can only be guessed at. Prof. Taussig continues:

> Much is said at the present juncture about the importance of a tariff commission in order to put the country in a state of industrial "preparedness." The war, it is said, must necessarily come to a close before very long, and then new conditions of international competition will have to be faced. Should we not have a careful and elaborate inquiry as to the best way of facing the coming situation? On this matter also I doubt whether a tariff commission can help us much. No one, not the ablest set of men, even though provided with any amount of money for engaging "experts," can possibly learn what sort of industrial conditions will have to be faced when the war comes to an end. We could not go to European countries for the purpose of investigation, or send agents to European countries, for the obvious reason that the respective Governments would not allow us to peer into their affairs. Even if we could send agents and get all possible information concerning existing conditions, no prediction could be made concerning the course of development after peace.

Omitting part of his statement, he continues:

> Incidentally, I venture to express my opinion that there is exaggeration in the talk about the necessity of preparedness for the coming conditions of peace. No doubt there will be a jar, a shock, when the war comes to a close, but it is not likely to be so great as that which came at the outbreak of the war. Then there was a crash from a clear sky. Now, everybody knows that the change is certain to come, and everybody is more or less on the lookout for it. It is in the highest degree improbable that the end of the war will cause an industrial crisis in any country at all comparable to that of the midsummer of 1914, least of all in the United States. No doubt there will be a period of readjustment, of uncertainty, very possibly of depression; then a gradual settling down to the new conditions. And as this gradual settlement takes place, I am by no means sure that any far-reaching change in international trade will be experienced.
> Certainly, so far as imports of manufactured articles into the United States are concerned, I see no probability that they will be greatly swelled. European industry is much more likely to be weakened than to be strengthened by the fearful strain of the war, and for some years in the future is less likely to be a formidable competitor than before. Undoubtedly there will be varying conditions in different industries, but I see no indications of a portentous outpouring of exports. Whether the great struggle will eventually have far-reaching consequences upon the commercial relations between nations it would be hazardous now to predict. But any long-drawn-out and slowly developing consequences of this kind can have no bearing upon the immediate tariff problem confronting the United States. To repeat, the tariff-commission project should be considered without regard to the war contingencies.

That statement can not be successfully controverted. I read, in a letter published by the National City Bank of New York last July, a statement that in the war zones of Europe there had been destroyed by the contending armies $3,000,000,000 worth of industrial plants. Does anyone suppose that they can be rebuilt in an hour or a day? Does anybody suppose that the railroads that have been torn up and destroyed are going to be rebuilt in an hour? Does not everyone know that the whole strain of the contending powers of Europe has been on winning this war, and not on industry; that there are millions and millions of dollars of machinery and industrial plants that have been worn out and destroyed and can not be replaced? Then, to say that the hour this war closes we will be in more danger of competition from abroad than we were before the war commenced is an idle theory, in my judgment.

Why should you create this tariff commission now? There never was a more ill-advised time. There is no competition from abroad that seriously jeopardizes any American industry of to-day. You can not ascertain the facts by the creation of this tariff commission. You can not ascertain them at home, and you can not ascertain them abroad, because all industry at home and abroad is in an abnormal condition. Your tariff commission can not go to the great countries of Europe and investigate cost conditions or trade conditions to-day. They probably will not, for a year or more, be able to do so. But even if they did, they would not find normal conditions on which to base their conclusions; and when you come to the conditions at home, is there a man in this Chamber who will assert that industrial conditions at home are normal? You know they are not. I know they are not. Then why pursue the indefensible policy of appointing a commission, giving certain gentlemen high office, and making a charge on the people of the United States of $300,000 a year to engage at this time in the investigation of industrial problems that everybody admits are not normal, and that will be of no value when normal conditions return? And everybody admits that until normal conditions return there is no necessity for their doing the work of finding these facts.

It was my purpose, Mr. President, to go very much more thoroughly into the discussion of this subject than I intend to do to-night. The hour is late. I had hoped that I could have brought this matter before the Senate this morning, but other Senators had the right of way with their amendments, and my opportunity to move to strike out these sections of the bill of necessity was delayed.

I know that the argument I make is idle for the present. The words I say in the main fall on deaf ears. But, Mr. President, for 20 years of my life, at the other end of the Capitol, I represented a great manufacturing district. Many of my constituency believed in the theory of a high protective tariff.

I honestly believed that we had no right to use the taxing power of this great Government to advance special interests; that we had no right to use the taxing power of this Government to tax a dollar out of one man's pocket and to put it into another man's pocket. For 20 years, representing a manufacturing district, I maintained that faith, and I had the great honor of aiding, in part, in ultimately writing that faith on the statute books of this land.

To-day I represent a larger constituency—a constituency that is largely agricultural and not manufacturing; a constituency that thoroughly sustains the view I take that the taxing power should not be used to advance special interests. Therefore, although I regret greatly that it is my misfortune to differ from my party colleagues, I would be recreant to the trust that the people of Alabama have imposed upon me if I remained silent and accepted a change of faith without protest.

As I said, I am not opposed to the mere appointing of some clerks and calling them a tariff commission. There are circumstances under which I might be willing to agree to it, and have agreed to it. I am not opposed to gathering all the facts that can be gathered for the information of the Ways and Means Committee of the House or the Finance Committee of the Senate. The more facts they have, the better will be their legislation. I merely desire again to call to your attention the fact that every detail that you provide for this bill is already in the existing law; that the machinery of this Government is prepared to-day under the law to furnish the Congress of the United States with every fact that this so-called tariff commission can find for you, and that it is a waste of money to make this duplication.

But that is not the point to which I most object. My objection to the writing of this legislation into law at this time is that it is written in the statute books to move away from the fundamental principles of Democracy so far as its idea of writing the customs laws of this country is concerned. There never has been a tariff commission created in the history of this country for the purpose of sustaining fundamental principles, but they have all been created as an excuse to the people, to temporize with conditions.

Take the tariff board of 1883. There was a growing demand in the United States for a lowering of the tariff rates throughout the country. The tariff board of 1883 was appointed to meet that condition. That board met and reported in favor of a reduction of tariff rates, with what result? The finding of the board was repudiated by the Republican Party. The Republican Party a few years ago, when there came again a universal demand for a reduction of the tariff after the Payne tariff law had its disappointing effects on the country, tried to better conditions by the creation of a tariff board. The reports of that tariff board resulted in finding facts which did not sustain Republican theories, and I know of no Republican statesman who was willing to base his tariff views on the findings of his own board. They did not use it, and could not use it. It was appointed to temporize with political conditions.

I want to know from my Democratic colleagues why they want to temporize with conditions to-day? That is what this section of the bill means. Why do they want to temporize with conditions to-day? It is only three years ago that you wrote on the statute books a tariff bill which you said kept the faith to the American people, and which your party and your President said kept the faith. It has had no chance for trial. There has been no opportunity to determine fairly whether it was wise or not. During the few short months it was on the statute books before the outbreak of the European war it produced the necessary revenue to run the Government under the then existing conditions, and it did not bring about an alarming condition to the industries of this country, as shown by the facts. But most of the imports that competed with home industry came from Europe. A large proportion of our revenues came from Europe.

When all of Europe went to war, instead of the tariff law of to-day having an opportunity to show whether it was a fairly competitive tariff, and whether it was bringing ameliorating conditions to the American people, the war itself put up a protective wall that it was impossible to go over. The war itself destroyed competition and destroyed revenue, and those conditions will remain until after this war is over.

There is not an industry in America to-day whose business is being threatened by foreign competition. You are facing and enjoying the greatest era of prosperity in America to-day that this country has ever known, and you are enjoying it under Democratic laws and a Democratic administration. You have not given the child of your own loins an opportunity to grow and develop, and you are proposing to placate and yield to adverse criticism of your political enemies by attempting to buy their silence with the proposal of a tariff commission.

My colleagues, I do not criticize any other man, and what I say is not in the way of criticism; but I can not stand here in silence and accept the repudiation of the work of my own party under these conditions. Nothing could happen that would destroy industry if you waited until this war was over. There is nothing to be accomplished by the writing of this legislation at this time. It is merely a waste of money, unless you do it to avoid the criticism of your opponents; in other words, unless the Democratic Party is preparing to-day to lower its spear and, under the white flag to retreat, to make terms with the common enemy on the greatest principle that your party has advocated for more than half a century.

Mr. President, I can not stand with my colleagues on that position; and I must, in duty to the constituency I represent, protest against the retreat that has been sounded on fundamental principles.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, in 1911 the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] was a Member of the House of Representatives and the leader there of the Democratic Party. He had been for many years a member of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House, charged with the duty of studying tariff bills and tariff problems.

At that time a bill came before the House of Representatives to create a tariff board. The question was as to the necessity for such a board. The provisions of the bill were broad. They gave much power to the board. Not as much power as the present bill, but it was a tariff-board bill, and the Senator from Alabama supported the bill not only by his vote upon the floor of the House; he also ably advocated it. Among other things at that time, he said:

> I say to you candidly that there is no proposition that I have ever had to face that has confronted me with more difficulty than to attempt properly to adjust the tariff rates in conformity to the principles of my party without having sufficient information on which I could base my judgment.

If, with his many years of experience upon the Ways and Means Committee, with his public life almost entirely devoted to the problem of revenue raising and the tariff, he needed information, what is the condition of the average legislator or Senator who is called upon to serve on the Ways and Means Committee of the House or the Finance Committee of the Senate?

Three years ago last summer we had before the Finance Committee of the Senate the tariff bill sent to us from the House. The tariff bill touched, either upon the free list or with tariff duties, every production of industry, every production of the farm, every production of the mine.

Mr. President, it was simply an impossibility then for Senators, with their other duties, to give it study and obtain a grasp of the details of the subject fit to handle it as we desired. At that time, being a member of that committee, I reached the conviction that a tariff board or tariff commission was essential and of the utmost importance to aid Congress in handling tariff problems, and I have advocated the creation of a tariff commission and have suggested it whenever I had an opportunity to the President on more than one occasion since.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? Is the Senator in favor of repealing the present Democratic tariff law?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is there any particular feature of it that he desires to repeal at this time?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I can not say that there is.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, why should we need a commission?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will answer the Senator. Since that time the information upon which we acted is almost like a heap of scrap. The condition of the world has changed. The condition in foreign countries has changed. The war has simply placed an entirely new face upon foreign industries and domestic industries. Just to-day, perhaps, there is no occasion for action, although I do myself join heartily with the action of the Finance Committee and of the House of Representatives found in this present bill in placing a tax on dyestuffs. But with all the information we could obtain to draw the measure, I am not sure the rates fixed are right, but I approve of such legislation on account of the changed conditions.

I do not believe there is a Member of the Senate. I do not believe there is a Member of the Finance Committee who to-day would know how to handle a tariff bill. I do not believe they have the information if the war stopped in 60 days to know how to levy a tariff tax. If they favored high protection, or if they favored a tariff for revenue, or a competitive tariff, or a low protective tariff I do not believe there is a member of the Finance Committee, I feel sure there is not one, who, if the war closed in 60 days, would be master of the subject to know how to draw a bill no matter which of the four lines it was desired to make it on. It is in view of what is ahead of us, in view of the fact that we know we must soon face a condition with which we are not familiar, with reference to which we have not the information, with reference to which we have not the time to study and gather the information, that I most cordially approve the creation of a tariff board of able men who may give all of their time, aided by statisticians and research men, handling the reports of our consuls from abroad, that they may become masters of the subject in advance, so far was it is possible, that they may have the knowledge necessary to aid in the character of legislation which then we may find necessary.

And, Mr. President, instead of raising the white flag to our enemies, instead of seeking to avoid attack by legislation along the line of our political enemies, I say that the creation of this tariff board is along the line of wisdom that has been shown by the Democratic administration, consisting both of the President and of the Congress, during the past three years and a half. We carry the responsibility of the Nation, and we look the future in the face as well as the present, and we hold ourselves prepared to meet any emergency that may confront our country, and we intend to look in advance to see what that emergency may be. We will not be tied down by past tariff bills no matter who made them, no matter though they carry to-day the name of the Underwood-Simmons bill. We will drop those names if necessary to remodel the tariff bill to meet the conditions that will confront the world and our country a little later on.

I congratulate the country that it has an administration of Democrats in the House and in the Senate and in the White House prepared to look forward to meet any emergency that may confront the people. The creation of the tariff commission is only one of the many proofs that the Democratic Party is to-day progressive, ready to meet wisely any emergency that may come upon the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama to strike out the sections he has indicated.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, just one word. The distinguished Senator from Georgia admits what I suspected to be the fact. He wants a tariff commission created to-day to ascertain the facts of to-day, abnormal facts with which to meet normal conditions of to-morrow, just as the Senator from Georgia advocated on yesterday the passage of an amendment to the tariff law relating to the dyestuffs that wrote on the statute books a high protective tariff that would have taken the breath away from the Republican Party itself if it had been taken unawares.

The Senator from Georgia states, and he speaks for those who advocate this tariff commission, that he is prepared to change the name at the head of the tariff law, the name that represents myself and the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, in order that legislation of yesterday may be succeeded by legislation that will meet the conditions of to-morrow.

Well might that be so, Mr. President. I am sure that I have no desire, so far as I am concerned, to have my identity or name carried on the legislation of my country unless the legislation with which it is connected serves my country and serves it well.

But, mark you, Mr. President, here to-night, before the happening of the event, when there are no importations from abroad, when no man can predict to-day what the importations of the future will be, we are told by the distinguished Senator from Georgia, the leader of this sentiment in his party, that we are prepared to surrender and retreat before we have reached the day when we will meet the common enemy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

So Mr. UNDERWOOD's amendment was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, there is one feature of this bill that I think does an injustice to the States. Almost every State in this Union has an inheritance-tax law. It is now proposed in this legislation to impose a Federal inheritance tax upon the people of the respective States. I propose an amendment, which I trust will receive the support of the Senate, which, to a certain extent, relieves the States from a burden that will be very oppressive unless the provision in the proposed law is changed, as I have suggested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 62, line 7, after the name "United States," it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That 50 per cent of the tax collected under the provisions of this title in any case shall be paid into the treasury of the State of which the decedent was a citizen.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I hope that amendment will not be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PENROSE obtained the floor.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to let me have two formal amendments made to the bill before he proceeds.

Mr. PENROSE. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. On page 23, line 1, I move to strike out the words "such commissioner," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "Commissioner of Internal Revenue."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. On page 11, line 14, after the word "association," I move to insert the word "trustees."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, in order to keep the record of these proceedings complete, which are now drawing to a close, I desire to ask a vote upon the resolution which I introduced some days ago looking to the recommitment of this bill to the Finance Committee with instructions. I believe that the resolution has the approval of the minority members of the Finance Committee. It is modeled somewhat on the lines of a similar resolution which was voted on in the House of Representatives, commanding the support of the minority in that body; and the language is taken almost verbatim from the platform of the Republican Party adopted at Chicago by the last Republican national convention. I ask to have the resolution read, and then I shall ask for a yea-and-nay vote upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 253), as follows:

Resolved, That H. R. 16763 be recommitted to the Committee on Finance, with instructions to amend the bill so as to raise an equitable portion of the required revenue from a protective tariff "sufficient to protect adequately American industry and American labor, and to be so adjusted as to prevent undue exactions by monopolies or trusts"; and

With further instructions to the Committee on Finance to give special attention to securing the industrial independence of the United States, to the end that "our industries can be so organized that they will become not only a commercial bulwark but a powerful aid to national defense"; and

That the bill be further amended so as to require the Tariff Commission to report the difference in wages and the cost of production between foreign countries and the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the resolution proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask for the yeas and nays on the resolution.

Mr. SIMMONS. I hope the resolution will not be adopted.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I again announce the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], and vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). Announcing the same transfer of my pair as on the last vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. GRONNA (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] to the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). On account of the absence of my pair, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. OVERMAN's name was called). The present occupant of the chair announces his pair as before, and withholds his vote.

Mr. OWEN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). Again announcing the same transfer as I did on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. SHAFROTH (when his name was called). Making the same transfer as I did on the last preceding vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. JONES (when Mr. TOWNSEND's name was called). If the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] were present and not paired, he would vote "yea."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I did on the last ballot, I vote "yea." If my colleague [Mr. LODGE] were present, he would vote the same way.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I am requested to announce that the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. Were he present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]. If he were present and permitted to vote, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] is absent on account of sickness. If present, he would vote "yea." He is paired with the Senator who is now in the chair [Mr. OVERMAN].

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 39, as follows:

YEAS—21.

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

So Mr. PENROSE's resolution was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the Secretary's desk, to be inserted after the word "production," in line 18, on page 137.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 137, line 18, after the word "production," it is proposed to insert:

That the commission shall investigate and report to Congress—

1. What is the nature and use of each commodity upon the dutiable list and each commodity upon the free list of the existing tariff law?
2. What are the raw materials used in its production?
3. What is the amount of the production of each commodity in this country?
4. What is the amount of the consumption of each commodity in this country?
5. How many concerns are engaged in the manufacture of each commodity?
6. Who are the principal producers?
7. What are the ruling market prices of each commodity in this country?
8. What are the ruling market prices of each commodity in competing countries?
9. What is the total cost of production per unit of each commodity in this country?
10. What is the total cost of production per unit of each product in competing countries?
11. What is the percentage of the labor cost to the total cost of a unit of product in this country?
12. What is the percentage of the labor cost to the total cost of a unit of product in competing foreign countries?
13. What is the cost of transportation to the principal markets in this country from the principal point of production in this country of each product?
14. What is the cost of transportation to the principal markets in this country from the principal points of production in competing foreign countries of each of said commodities?
15. What part of the existing duty represents the difference in the cost of production between this and competing foreign countries of each of said commodities?
16. What part of the existing duty represents the profit of the American manufacturer upon each of said commodities?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not purpose at this late hour to tax the patience of the Senate with an argument in favor of the amendment which I have presented. The answers to the questions which the amendment provides shall be answered by the Tariff Commission and submitted to Congress will embody the information necessary for Congress, it seems to me, intelligently to fix duties, whether it be, Mr. President, in connection with a bill based upon the principle which has been embodied in the Republican platform as a correct measure of protective duties, namely, the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad, or whether it be the principle embodied in the bill known as the Underwood-Simmons bill, which was passed during this administration. That bill, as stated by the House report, as stated by the Senate report, and as stated by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] in his first speech submitted to the Senate upon it, was drawn with a view of fixing duties at such a rate as would constitute a competitive tariff, and it was called a "competitive-tariff bill."

It is impossible either to determine duties that will fix a competitive relation between foreign producers and producers in this country, or duties that will measure the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad without having exactly the information embodied in the 16 paragraphs which I have submitted in the amendment; but, Mr. President, I understand perfectly well that the Senate is in no temper to amend the bill.

It will be contended on the other side that the general provisions of the Tariff Commission section would permit the Tariff Commission to ascertain these specific facts. So they would; but answers to these specific questions will put into the hands of Congress the precise knowledge which it must have either to enact a competitive tariff bill or to enact a bill based upon the principle of the cost of production.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in view of the fact that almost every nation in the world is in turmoil at the present time, it would be an absolute impossibility to ascertain the cost of production in those countries; and, in view of the fact that there is an abnormal increase in transportation rates, it would be of little use to ascertain the cost of transportation from other countries to this country of articles exported to our shores as compared with the cost of transportation of articles produced here.

Mr. President, the time may come when an inquiry of this kind might well be undertaken; that is, after normal conditions return to the countries of Europe; but I feel sure it would be idle to undertake it at the present time, and for that reason I trust the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, just one word. The tariff commission proposed in this bill is not to be a temporary body. It is expected, of course, that this tariff commission will report from time to time to Congress as the varying conditions will need to be reported, if Congress is to act intelligently upon the tariff question from time to time.

Furthermore, Mr. President, precisely those questions were offered by me as a resolution of direction to the Finance Committee of the Senate when it was framing the Underwood-Simmons bill; and, upon the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] that resolution was passed by the Senate.

Furthermore, Mr. President, the chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], embodied those questions as essential to the information of the committee in framing the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill, and they were sent to every individual or corporation that asked for a tariff hearing before the Democratic Finance Committee; and in the report of the committee to this body, upon which it acted, the answers to those questions were cited by the chairman of the Committee on Finance as embodying information which the Senate ought to consider as important in guiding its work and its deliberations.

I have said more than I intended to say, Mr. President.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator is undoubtedly right in his statement about the resolution directing the Finance Committee to send out questions to the various gentlemen representing industries in this country who had appeared before the Finance Committee. They were sent out under the authority of this resolution by the committee. I regret to say, however, that only a very few of the gentlemen who had appeared and asked for increased tariff rates answered the questions. I think what I did say about it was that I had secured so few answers and those that came were so utterly unsatisfactory——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Granting that the Senator's recollection upon that matter is better than mine, the fact that the Senate adopted those questions and that the Finance Committee sent them out is an important fact for the Senate to consider in passing upon them now; and the fact that they were not voluntarily answered, that there was no compulsion, does not make against the interrogatories, but is rather in their favor. Special interests desiring an excessive tariff would not be inclined voluntarily and freely to give up their costs of production; but this commission would be empowered, if it were made a part of this bill, to get those facts and to lay them before the committee, and eventually they would come to the Senate and to the House. No Member here can for a moment, it seems to me, fail to appreciate the value of that information. If you had it before you when you were legislating upon the question of the tariff—if you knew, for instance, how much were the profits made by the protected industries of this country—then you would have some guide, as you would if the other questions were answered.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, to-day I went very thoroughly into a discussion of the powers conferred upon this commission in sections 90 and 92. I think they are exceedingly broad. They comprehend practically all the information that will be needed. Certainly there will be no lack of power in the commission to make their investigations as broad as the circumstances may seem to require. After the commission have secured the information that is necessary to enable them to reach a reasonable conclusion, section 91 gives to the Ways and Means Committee of the House, and to the Finance Committee of the Senate, power to call upon the commission for any information and report that they may desire, and in that request it will be competent for either of these two great committees to propound to the commission questions that would elicit the information they have secured by the exercise of the broad powers given them in sections 90 and 92.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment before he sits down?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Granting that, Mr. President, it must be apparent to everybody that pending the consideration of a tariff bill by the Ways and Means Committee of the House, or by the Finance Committee of the Senate, or by this body, to call upon a tariff commission for that information would be utterly futile. It would require the time of the tariff commission for months to secure that information. Its accuracy depends upon an inspection of the cost production in each of the industries and would require much time, but the information would be invaluable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for a roll call upon that amendment, as it is so important.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). Making the same announcement concerning my pair as on the last roll call, I vote "nay."

Mr. GRONNA (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. OVERMAN's name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore, I withhold my vote.

Mr. OWEN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES], and vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). Announcing the same pair and transfer as on a previous roll call, I vote "nay."

Mr. SHAFROTH (when his name was called). Announcing the same transfer that I made on preceding roll calls, I vote "nay."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS. I transfer the pair which I have with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "nay."

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment was rejected.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the exceedingly extravagant appropriations of this Congress make it necessary for some law to be enacted to raise additional revenue, and I presume the bill now about to pass is the result of that necessity.

I voted against nearly all of the appropriations that have brought about a condition where additional revenue has become necessary. I do not feel in any way responsible for that condition. In my weak way, I did what I could to defeat those appropriations; but Congress in its wisdom, or in its haste and unwisdom, has seen fit to make it necessary that some law should be enacted to meet these extraordinary appropriations.

I believe that it is the duty of a Senator or a Member of the House of Representatives, when that condition presents itself to him, not to vote against any bill for which he would otherwise vote for the production of additional revenue simply because he was opposed to the condition and voted against the appropriations that made necessary such additional revenue. It seems to me, therefore, that it is my duty, in passing on this bill, to vote the same as though it were a debt—which, in my judgment, it is—or an obligation of the Government that was legal, at least technically, and that had to be paid. I feel that it is the same as though I owed a debt—a judgment, perhaps—and that although I might believe it to be unjust, yet if it had the sanction of a duly constituted court having judisdiction, it would be one that I would have to pay.

Looking at it in that light, Mr. President, it seems to me that the bill under consideration raising revenue ought to be considered, and that I ought to act on it in the light of its being my duty, as a Member of the legislative body of the Nation, to provide as best I can, and in the way that I may help, the revenue necessary to pay the obligations.

I will not take the time of the Senate at this late hour to go over the past, but I only want to say that I have had no sympathy whatever with a great many of the things that have brought about these extraordinary appropriations and have made necessary additional revenue. If my conclusion is right thus far, then I ought to pass on this proposed legislation without reference to the causes or the conditions that have made this legislation or other revenue legislation necessary.

I believe that the present bill contains in it so many features that I have stood for, and that I believe in the main the party to which I belong has stood for, that I can not consistently vote against it. In other words, I am of the opinion that as far as raising this additional revenue is concerned, this bill has many good features. It raises the large bulk of the revenue in ways that I believe to be commendable. It has in it, for instance, an antidumping clause. It contains a protective-tariff proposition as far as dyestuffs are concerned. I think it is conceded by everybody that the existing war in Europe has disclosed the fact that we need some legislation in regard to dyestuffs, and that we ought to be able to produce in this country the dyestuffs that we need. I believe that this bill carries the necessary enactment to bring that about. It contains an antidumping clause—another condition that, in my judgment, and, I think, in the judgment of most thinking men, will have to be met when this war is over; and it seems to me that the provisions in regard to that are such that any fair-minded man trying to remedy a situation that I believe will be upon us when the war is over could not be opposed to the provisions on that subject.

The bill contains a provision for a tariff commission, a permanent tariff board—something that I have always advocated and believed in ever since I have been a Member of Congress; something that my party has always, or, at least, for several years past, advocated.

I know that the charge is made, and has been made, on this floor that this particular provision of the bill, coming from Democratic sources, coming from men who have always heretofore opposed a tariff commission, is not proposed in good faith. In my judgment, that is not a sufficient objection. I do not believe that I ought to vote against this bill when it contains provisions in which I believe simply because those provisions have been proposed by somebody whose good faith in the matter may be doubted, or who, in the past, has been opposed to it.

The tariff commission provision here is not just exactly what I should like to have, but in the main it strikes me as being sufficient to bring about the proper organization for a wise investigation of the tariff subject, enabling Congress, when it has that information, to legislate intelligently. It is a provision that, it seems to me, goes naturally and logically with the protective tariff idea, if that protection is to measure—as I think it ought to—the difference in cost of production at home and abroad.

The bill contains a repeal of the stamp taxes carried in the last so-called emergency revenue bill passed by a preceding Congress during this administration—provisions which were obnoxious to almost everybody, and which, in my judgment, never ought to have been adopted—and I hail with delight an opportunity to vote for their repeal.

The bill also contains a provision for an inheritance tax. It is not exactly the kind of inheritance tax I would provide for, but if we are going to enact a law for an inheritance tax, or, rather, an estate tax, as this is properly called, for the purpose of raising revenue, then the provisions of this bill will be ample.

In my judgment the provisions of the bill in regard to the estate tax will raise a large amount of revenue. I know the objection is made, and I have sympathy with it, that this is one of the methods of raising revenue by the States. I voted for the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire to give half the money to the States. I would be willing to give more. When the Underwood tariff bill was before this body I offered an amendment providing for a progressive inheritance tax, that after making an exemption of $50,000 the tax should be collected in a progressive way, with the idea not particularly of raising money so much, although it would have raised a great deal, as to break up the large fortunes, and I provided, I think, that 90 or 95 per cent of the money so raised should practically be paid to the State, or, in other words, I provided that a State which had an inheritance tax and some one who was liable to pay it would present a receipt to the proper officer of the Federal Government showing the payment of the inheritance tax on that bequest to the State government he should be credited with 95 per cent of the amount that he had paid. This estate tax is, in my judgment, the best inheritance tax or estate tax of this kind that has ever been enacted by Congress in any law that it has ever passed. It provides for a progressive tax running up in very large estates to as high as 10 per cent.

The bill also provides for an increase of the income tax, and in a part of that I think the bill is wrong. I would not favor doubling the normal tax, but the increase of the tax on large incomes meets with my hearty approval and goes a great way to convince me that I ought to vote for the bill.

It has a tax on munitions of war. I have repeatedly said that while I was opposed to the various programs that were enacted to make it necessary for us to raise a large amount of revenue if we did carry out these various programs of the present administration and the many appropriations, I thought we ought to raise the additional revenue by an increased tax on large incomes, by an inheritance tax, and by a tax on munitions. The bill provides for a tax on munitions.

Mr. President, without going into details, I want to call attention to some of the profits of those who have been engaged in the manufacture of munitions of war since the beginning of the war. The figures that I give were taken from the Wall Street Journal, but placed in the RECORD by Representative GOOD of Iowa. In these two articles, quoted in full in the RECORD of July 12, 1916, at pages 12622 and several pages following, it appears that most of the munitions in this country shipped abroad during the war were made by 26 corporations. I want to call attention to the fact that the market value of the stocks of those corporations before the war began, as given by the Wall Street Journal, was $1,287,658,000. At the end of the year 1915 the market value of those stocks had increased to $2,212,986,000, and they have not quit going up yet. They have been going up a good deal since. These figures were taken at the end of the year 1915, making a total increase of $919,323,000—nearly a billion dollars.

There is quite a high tax levied on the people engaged in this business. I could go on at length and show the profits they have made and the per cent they have made. It has been astounding. It strikes me that institutions whose stocks have been increased in value in the several billion dollars' worth of orders that they have received—I do not know, I think somewhere about $3,000,000,000—not only ought to be required out of the profits they have made to pay a large portion of the tax, a great deal of which is to be spent for a continuation of their own business when the war ends. The great propaganda for preparedness that swept this country like a whirlwind was for the benefit of those men and those corporations that had already made millions, and whose business would be curtailed somewhat when the war was over, and they were, therefore, directly interested in the great propaganda that went over the country for the so-called preparedness plan. So, when the war is over, instead of supplying these various materials to foreign countries, they are going, to a great extent, to supply them to our own country in time of peace.

It is no more than just, it is no more than fair, it seems to me, that the men who have made the money ought to be required to help very materially to contribute to the so-called expense.

Taking it all in all, it seems to me, Mr. President, that laying aside, of course, the conditions and the legislation and the appropriations that have made this revenue bill necessary, it would be difficult to draft a bill, according to my judgment, more systematically or better adapted to properly raise revenue for the payment of the debts that we have so foolishly and so extravagantly and ruthlessly contracted.

For that reason, it seems to me, Mr. President, that the bill ought to receive unanimous approval of this body. It ought to receive, it seems to me, the approval of every Republican for the several provisions that it contains, for which we have contested and contended and fought for years. The inheritance tax was one that we put in the Payne-Aldrich bill, so called. We had an income tax early, and a tariff commission. We have contested and contended for these principles. We get them now in this bill, even though they come from men who have been converted to our cause, and because the Democrats who have proposed it have changed front is no reason why we should change front and oppose it. As far as I am concerned I am just as willing to vote for it if it comes from the enemy as though it comes from our own house, if I believe it is right, and believing it is right, Mr. President, I am ready to vote for the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. LANE. I give notice I shall offer in the Senate an amendment on pages 49 and 50.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. LANE. I present the following amendment and ask for a vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 49, line 22, insert after the word "any" the word "person"; on page 50, line 4, after the word "such" insert the words "under the same rules and regulations governing the inspection of public records generally"; and on page 50, line 4, strike out the words "Provided, That," and further strike out all of lines 5 to 15, inclusive, on page 50, so that subsection (b) of section 14 when so amended shall read as follows:

> When the assessments of any person, corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company shall be made, as provided in this title, the returns together with any correction thereof which may have been made by the commissioner, shall be filed in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and shall constitute public records and be open to inspection as such, under the same rules and regulations governing the inspection of public records generally;"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PENROSE. That has been voted on once.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is renewed in the Senate. The Senator from Oregon has a right to present it. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LANE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], and transferring my pair to the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], I vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). Announcing the same transfer of my pair as on the last vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. GRONNA (when his name was called). Again announcing the transfer of my pair with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] to the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], I vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. OVERMAN's name was called). The present occupant of the chair is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] and withholds his vote.

Mr. OWEN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] and vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). I make the same transfer of my pair as on previous votes, and I vote "yea."

Mr. SHAFROTH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I transfer my standing pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. VARDAMAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] and withhold my vote.

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the last vote, I vote "nay."

If my colleague [Mr. LODGE] were present, he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. If the Senator from Delaware were present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN]. He is absent and I am not able to obtain a transfer and I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

My colleague [Mr. WALSH] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. If my colleague were present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "yea."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] made an incorrect statement as to the pair of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] and myself have transferred our pairs, so that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] stands paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING].

Mr. ROBINSON. I was requested to make the announcement, and I withdraw it.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING], and to state that if present he would vote "nay."

Mr. HUGHES. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES]. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER. I announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] and the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. If they were present, they would both vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN]; and

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS].

Mr. COLT. On account of the transfer of my pair, I am at liberty to vote on this question, and I vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce that the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] and the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] if present would both vote "nay."

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 16, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, September 5, 1916.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite and eternal God, inspire us with clear perceptions as to our calling in life that our hearts may beat true to the heavenly vision and follow with faith and confidence whithersoever it may lead that we may hallow Thy name by the absolute rectitude of our behavior in all that pertains to life, private and public, and thus emulate the virtues of the world's great Exemplar. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 17645, the general deficiency bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 17645, disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. Reserving the right to object, and I am not going to object, I have no doubt that the gentleman from Mississippi will be a member of the conferees. I want to call his attention to an amendment put on in the Senate. It relates to what is known as the steel bloom bill, which carries an appropriation of $142,000, and there is no merit in the claim. It has no place on this bill, for it is not a deficiency. I see in the RECORD that one Senator said he was willing to let it go in on certain conditions, and he would appear before the conferees. I hope the gentleman will look seriously to that item before he concurs in that amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. SISSON, and Mr. CANNON.

THE FORT ASSINNIBOINE MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill (S. 3646) to amend the act of February 11, 1915 (38 Stat. L., p. 807), providing for the opening of the Fort Assiniboine Military Reservation, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration, notwithstanding it has not been printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to consider this conference report, notwithstanding the rule with reference to printing. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I do not know anything about it.

The SPEAKER. There were only two amendments; the first was to set aside a certain tract of land for the Indians as a permanent reservation, and the Senate agreed to the House amendment striking out the word "permanent." The last amendment was to set aside about 8,000 acres of land for a park and camping ground. The House receded from that amendment by striking out the word "permanent" and adding a provision that the use of the park should be without expense hereafter to the United States.

Mr. MANN. What did the Senate do?

Mr. RAKER. The Senate receded from its disagreement.

Mr. MANN. Let the conference report be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1196).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3646) to amend the act of February 11, 1915 (38 Stat. L., p. 807), providing for the opening of the Fort Assiniboine Military Reservation, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Amendment numbered 1: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the House insert the following:

"SEC. 12. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to withdraw and set aside as a camping ground, the same to be kept and maintained without cost to the Government of the United States, the following-described land in said reservation lying on both sides of Beaver Creek within townships 29, 30, and 31 north, 15 and 16 east, to wit: The west half section 34; all of sections 33, 28, and 21; the west half southwest quarter, northwest quarter section 22; all of section 16; the south half, northwest quarter, west half northeast quarter, section 9; the east half northeast quarter section 8; the east half southeast quarter section 5; the west half, northeast quarter, west half southeast quarter section 4, township 29 north, range 16 east; and the south half southwest quarter, south half southeast quarter, northeast quarter southeast quarter, east half northeast quarter, section 33; the southeast quarter southeast quarter, north half southeast quarter, southwest quarter southwest quarter, north half southwest quarter, north half, section 28; the west half southeast quarter, west half northeast quarter, west half, section 21; the east half southeast quarter, east half northeast quarter, section 20; the west half section 16; east half, east half northwest quarter, section 17; the east half southwest quarter, east half northwest quarter, east half, section 8; the west half southwest quarter, west half northwest quarter, section 9; all of section 5; the northeast quarter section 6, township 30 north, range 16 east; and the southwest quarter section 32; the south half, northwest quarter, southwest quarter northeast quarter section 31, township 31 north, range 16 east; and the east half southeast quarter section 25; southeast quarter southeast quarter, northwest quarter southeast quarter, northeast quarter northeast quarter, west half northeast quarter, east half northwest quarter, northwest quarter northwest quarter, section 26; south half southwest quarter, south half southeast quarter, section 23, township 31 north, range 15 east, Montana principal meridian," embracing an area of approximately 8,880 acres.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference of the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3646) to amend the act of February 11, 1915 (38 Stat. L.), providing for the opening of the Fort Assiniboine Military Reservation, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the actions agreed upon:

House amendment No. 1: This amendment strikes out of the bill the word "permanent" and simply sets apart the tract of land as a reservation for the Rocky Boy's Band of Chippewas and other homeless Indians in the State of Montana as the Secretary of the Interior may see fit to locate thereon.

House amendment No. 2: This amendment struck out all of section 12, which authorized the Secretary of the Interior to withdraw and set aside as a camping ground approximately 8,880 acres. The amendment by the House was receded from with an amendment striking out the words "permanent park" and simply providing for camping ground and restoring all of section 12, with an amendment to the effect that after this land is set aside by the Secretary of the Interior the same is to be kept and maintained without any cost to the United States Government. It is made to appear to the conferees that these lands had been used for many years by the people in the surrounding community as a general camping ground and that it ought to be maintained for that purpose; that it would be kept up and maintained, as in the past, without any cost to the Government. It was believed that this was a wise provision, and with the amendment that the original section 12 should be agreed to, for the reasons stated.

The establishment of this camping ground and the maintenance of it, as it has been for many years in the past, without any cost or expense to the Government is a worthy object and much good will come from it. To dispose of the land involved for other purposes would be of no practical benefit to anyone and discommode those who have heretofore used the land involved as a camping ground, from which much benefit has been derived.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JOHN E. RAKER,
CARL HAYDEN,
WM. L. LA FOLLETTE,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, as I understand, the House struck out that provision.

Mr. RAKER. It struck out section 12.

Mr. MANN. And this reinstates it.

Mr. RAKER. Yes; reinstates it, striking out the word "permanent" and inserting as an amendment that the camping ground may be set aside, but that it is without expense to the Government of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is here objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report was agreed to.

WILLIAM HAROLD KEHOE.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6279) for the relief of William Harold Kehoe.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, what are the circumstances in the case that call for this act?

Mr. FIELDS. This cadet while participating in drill service was kicked by a horse. A long illness followed, and as the result of that illness tuberculosis developed.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask that the gentleman withdraw the bill for the present.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw it without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. There is no prejudice about it.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House immediately at the close of the speech of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks permission to address the House at the close of the speech of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. RODENBERG, be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes at the conclusion of the address of the others.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that his colleague, Mr. RODENBERG, at the conclusion of the addresses by the speakers already scheduled, be allowed to address the House for 30 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes at the conclusion of the address of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to address the House at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SHERMAN COUNTY SETTLERS' RELIEF.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the Sherman County settlers' relief bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 224 (H. Rept. 1191).

Resolved, That in lieu of the session clerk heretofore assigned, the Committee on Education be, and is hereby, allotted an annual clerk at a salary of $2,000 per annum, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House until otherwise provided by law.

With the following committee amendments:

Line 3, strike out the words "an annual" and insert the word "a."

Line 3, strike out the words "$2,000 per annum" and insert in lieu thereof the words "$180 per month during the remainder of the Sixty-fourth Congress."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Education are very insistent that they shall have an annual clerk and insist that they have a lot of work to do between now and December. The Committee on Accounts refused to allow them the annual clerk, but by an amendment we provide that they may have a clerk during the interim between the close of this session and the next regular session of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman quite sure that this form of resolution does not authorize an appropriation for an annual clerk?

Mr. LLOYD. Very sure, because we take out the word "annual," and we provide that his employment shall conclude at the close of the Sixty-fourth Congress.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

PREPAREDNESS.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of preparedness.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSENGERS IN POST OFFICE.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 353 (H. Rept. 1192).

Resolved, That nine messengers in the post office of the House of Representatives now authorized to be employed during the session may continue to be employed during the period between the adjournment of the present session and the 1st of December, 1916, and be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $100 per month.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this is the usual resolution passed at the adjournment of the long session with reference to the session employees of the House in the post office of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, we authorize the employment of certain people in the post office of the House while Congress is in session because they deliver the mail to the Members. Of course this is just a present to these nine messengers during the recess.

Mr. LLOYD. Not altogether.

Mr. MANN. Formerly we used to provide for an extra month's pay for all of the employees. This provides an extra three months' pay for some of the employees but not for the balance. I rather think that the old method of treating all alike was fairer than it is to take a few and give them three months' extra pay. Of course we all know that they will not be employed.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, there are some of these people who will be employed all of this time. There are clerks of Members who remain here and there are a number of Members of Congress who come here shortly after the election and are here during the month of November, so that these messengers will have work to do nearly all of the time.

Mr. MANN. But two clerks can do all of the work. Four hundred and thirty-five Members of the House and the officers of the House conduct a very heavy correspondence while the House is in session, but when Congress adjourns they do not have very much to do. They have something to do, but not much. The clerks over there have something to do, but these are messengers. These are not clerks in the post office, as I understand it.

There are a number of annual employees connected with the post office. We need those, of course. However, if the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] and the Democratic side of the House think it is more proper to pay a few clerks three months' extra pay than it is to divide it up and pay all of the employees one month's extra pay, I do not know that I can help it. It is not according to my idea of the proprieties, however.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

JOSEPH S. M'COY.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 364.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Joseph S. McCoy, out of the contingent fund of the House, the sum of $325 for services rendered the Ways and Means Committee from April 3, to July 10, 1916.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, let us have an explanation of this.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this provides for additional pay for an expert who is detailed from the Treasury Department to the Committee on Ways and Means. That expert is to receive $100 a month for extra services that he rendered the committee. This provides for three and one-quarter months' pay, from April to July 10.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it customary to pay these clerks who are detailed from the Treasury Department to the committees of Congress?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes. They are usually provided for in a special fund, and the gentleman will remember that there was a special fund provided for, but it was not provided for this session of Congress. There is no fund out of which to pay this man.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is this the only clerk that will be paid?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes; this is the only extra compensation asked for by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. NORTON. What does this clerk receive from the Treasury Department? This is in addition to his compensation from the Treasury Department.

Mr. LLOYD. I am not sure about his salary, but my understanding is that it is $2,500 a year.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will state to the gentleman that while working here he also does his work in the department. He gets down two or three hours earlier and returns there and keeps up his work there in addition to his committee work.

Mr. NORTON. This is additional work outside of their regular work in the department.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. This has been the custom heretofore.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Carr, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution (S. J. Res. 173) authorizing payment of the salaries of officers and employees of Congress for September, 1916, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

CONDITIONS AT ELLIS ISLAND.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I move to discharge the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization from the further consideration of the following resolution, which is now privileged.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 341.

Resolved, That the Secretary of Labor be directed to send to the House of Representatives the results of the examinations into conditions on Ellis Island, taken by and before Byron H. Uhl, assistant commissioner of immigration, at Ellis Island July 25, 26, and 27, 1916.

The SPEAKER. This becomes privileged by virtue of the seven-day rule?

Mr. BENNET. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Mississippi rise?

Mr. HARRISON. To ask the gentleman if he will withhold that for a moment.

Mr. BENNET. Certainly; any particular reason?

Mr. HARRISON. I ask the gentleman to withhold it; I have some doubt about it being privileged. It is merely asking for some papers, as I heard it read, and not an investigation.

Mr. BENNET. That is all. It does not refer to the resolution before the Committee on Rules. It merely asks that the result of the examination into the conditions at Ellis Island, taken by and before the assistant commissioner on three successive days, be sent to the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks the gentleman from New York to defer his motion for a few moments.

Mr. BENNET. Why, certainly.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] is recognized for 10 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker——

PAYMENT OF SEPTEMBER SALARIES TO OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES OF SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me, I ask to take from the Speaker's table the resolution which has just come in from the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and consider the resolution which has just come over. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the purpose of the resolution?

Mr. LLOYD. The Clerk will please read the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution. It is a Senate resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 173) authorizing the payment of September salaries to officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives on the day of adjournment of the present session.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and instructed to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including the Capitol police and pages, borne upon the annual and session rolls, their respective salaries and per diem for the month of September, 1916, on the day of adjournment; and the Clerk of the House is authorized to pay on said day to Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners their allowances for clerk hire for said month of September: Provided, That the session employees of the Senate and House of Representatives shall be paid hereunder for the entire month of September, and a sufficient sum is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for that purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. I take it the purpose of this resolution is to grant the employees of the House virtually an extra month's salary.

Mr. LLOYD. No, sir; it provides no additional salary of any kind. All it does is to provide that whatever they would receive in the month of September they receive on the day of adjournment, and the purpose of authorizing payment on the day of adjournment rather than on the 1st day of October is that some of these employees want to go home and, to be frank about it, have not got the money to do so, and this gives them an opportunity to go home.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the purpose of the second clause which says that session employees shall be entitled to a full month's salary?

Mr. LLOYD. I did not so understand.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent that the last clause be read again.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the last clause.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the session employees of the Senate and House of Representatives shall be paid hereunder for the entire month of September.

Mr. STAFFORD. To be frank, its purpose is to give an extra month's salary to the session employees of the House and Senate. Now, of course, the Republicans, when they were in control, always granted the employees an extra month's salary; but when the Democrats took possession, with their great cardinal position of economy, they refused to grant it.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr Speaker, I have not carefully but casually examined the resolution in the RECORD, and I did not notice that the word "entire" was used there. The only purpose we have is to have a resolution which will pay session clerks on the day of adjournment for the services they have rendered up to the end of this session. I do not think the House would favor any proposition that would pay these session clerks to the 1st day of October, because we have consistently and persistently refused to pay any extra month's salary, and therefore I should desire to amend the resolution by providing that session clerks shall be paid up to the day of adjournment on the day of adjournment.

The SPEAKER. What is the amendment?

Mr. LLOYD. I have not the text before me, but it is that the session clerks shall be paid on the date of adjournment for services rendered in September.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. To ask unanimous consent that the resolution be so amended that it will provide that mileage at the rate of 5 cents per mile be paid to these employees going to their homes.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw this resolution for the moment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and therefore the motion of the gentleman falls to the ground.

THE EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] showed that he was considerably worried and disturbed in his mind because a Democratic House, Senate, and President had averted the greatest strike that ever threatened the country. I have been wondering, Mr. Speaker, why it was that these gentlemen voted against the measure intended to prevent the strike, and the best reason that I can find is in the Scripture, which says, "The ox knoweth his owner and the ass his master's crib." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, in my speech of last Friday I said that many Republicans did not want the railroad strike settled; that some of them were really hoping that the strike, with all its demoralization and ruin, would come upon the country, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has proven that I was correct in that position. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Last Friday he moaned and groaned because he feared that we would settle the strike, and on yesterday he was visibly affected and noticeably sad because we had settled it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Poor old degenerated and conscienceless Republican Party, reckless and desperate now, it is the tool of the bosses and the slave of special interests. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

If there ever was a time when you could test out a situation and show just where Representatives stand, it is on an occasion like that in the House last Friday and that presented in the Senate on Saturday. If there ever was a time when the people could find out who is on the people's side, it is on an occasion of that character. When the people's welfare is involved and the rights of the laboring man are at stake, you always find the Democratic Party on the side of right and on the side of the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, the Republican leaders are indignant because President Wilson invited the trainmen of the United States to the White House. They are actually mad because the President has dared to consider and dignify the appeal of this honest industrial army. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They are so accustomed to star-chamber proceedings and so used to being told by the bosses what to do that they can not grasp the question from the standpoint of right or get the humane viewpoint of the masses of the people. [Applause on Democratic side.] They have betrayed the confidence of the American citizen and lost the respect and support of hundreds of thousands of patriotic Republicans. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They have shown a willingness to sacrifice principle to obtain power and to injure the country to carry the national election. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They can not realize that this is a Government of the people. They are out of touch and sympathy with the spirit of our institutions. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The present subserviency, management, and leadership of the Republican Party have damned and destroyed its usefulness. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The Progressives left it because it was dominated by the bosses and owned by the privileged interests. [Applause on Democratic side.] Four years ago they refused to bow the knee and humble themselves at the feet of the "porch-climbing" bosses of the Republican Party, and conditions now are worse than then. [Applause on Democratic side.] Do you think that they will throw away their self-respect, be false to their sense of duty, and unfaithful to their country and come back to be the menials of the same brazen bosses who outraged them and betrayed their country four years ago? [Applause on Democratic side.] No, gentlemen, a new day has dawned.

The bosses and the haughty privileged classes have had their day, but now in the freedom of the new day men are standing with heads erect and light upon their faces and ready to render patriotic service to their country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] All hail to the new freedom and all praise to Woodrow Wilson for the wholesome and happy new order of things! [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is sad because the President used four pens in signing the strike-prevention measure, and he is disturbed because the President gave the four pens to the heads of the brotherhoods of the trainmen of the United States. Why should he not have given the pens to these faithful soldiers of the rail? [Applause on the Democratic side.] He has employed more pens for more good purposes in three and a half years than your Republican Presidents have in a dozen administrations. [Applause on the Democratic side.] As the gentleman from Pennsylvania spoke of the disposition of those pens I wondered what Mr. Roosevelt had done with the pen that he used when he addressed "My Dear Harriman," and requested him to come over and read his message to Congress and see if there was anything in it to which special interests objected. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I wondered what Mr. Taft had done with the pen that he used when he signed Ballinger's commission for a place in his Cabinet, a man who, in secret league with certain lumber kings and coal barons, was turning over to them the public domain of the West. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And I am still wondering what he did with the pens that he used when he signed the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill, with its Schedule K; but I said he must have given one to the head of the Wool Trust and the other to the captain of industry at Lawrence, Mass., where they were grinding out the lives of little children. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But what about this man Wilson? Is he a man of the people? Do the people have his ear? Yes; and he is serving them faithfully. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Merchants and bankers came to him and said, "We want a banking system that will serve our needs, prevent panics, and take away from a few men in Wall Street the control of the credit and money supply of the country; and he gave it to them. [Applause on the Democratic side.] When the farmers of the country came and said, "We want banking facilities that will serve our purpose and meet our needs," he gave them a rural credit system. [Applause on the Democratic side.] When the laboring people came and said, "In some localities the courts are used to coerce and intimidate the toiler, and we ask for the right of trial by jury in certain contempt cases," and Woodrow Wilson gave it to them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, on last Friday, when the President of the United States and the Congress were trying to avert the greatest railroad strike that ever threatened the country, I saw Republican leaders here and in the Senate doing all in their power to defeat the measure that would prevent the strike. [Applause on the Democratic side.] When manufacturers all over the country and business men in our industrial centers were urging the President, by telegrams and telephone messages, to avert the strike if possible and prevent the widespread demoralization of business that would surely follow, what was the conduct of Republican leaders then? Majority leader KITCHIN, anxious to pass the measure and get it over to the Senate as soon as possible, asked unanimous consent to take the bill up and consider it at once, and the leader of the Republican Party in this House [Mr. MANN] objected. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And, Mr. Speaker, when the cities of the country, dependent upon regular freight-train service for their food supplies, were about to be cut off from the base of supplies, upon the farms of the country, and when mothers whose little children's lives depended upon fresh milk supplies that came in each day from the country were imploring the President to prevent the strike and save their children, Mr. MANN, the leader of the Republican Party in this House, voted against the measure that prevented the strike. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Yes, Mr. Speaker, when a railroad strike had been ordered and was ready to break upon us in all its fury, tying up the transportation facilities of the country, demoralizing business, paralyzing interstate commerce, and starving people in many of the large cities, the leader of the Republican Party in this House, Mr. MANN, and the leaders of the Republican Party in the Senate, Messrs. SMOOT, PENROSE, and GALLINGER, all voted against the measure that has averted the strike and prevented untold suffering and misery amongst the people of the whole country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] objects to the trainmen getting the pens that the President used in signing the bill. He objects to these toilers being received and their course considered by the President.

Mr. Speaker—

There's glory in the shuttle song; there's triumph in the anvil stroke.
There's merit in the brave and strong who dig the mine or fell the oak.
I doubt if he who lolls his head where idleness and plenty meet
Enjoys his pillow or his bread as those who earn the meals they eat.

And I can say to these trainmen in the language of Eliza Cook—

Hold up your brow in honest pride,
Though rough and swart your hands may be—
Such hands are sap veins that provide
The life blood for the Nation's tree.

[Applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Chair suggests to the gentleman to wait until we get this straightened out first.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Just one question would be all that I desire to ask the gentleman.

Mr. HEFLIN. Very well; just one question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the gentleman from Alabama in favor of an eight-hour law in Alabama?

Mr. HEFLIN. Is that your question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is my question.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am in favor of the eight-hour principle for trainmen.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman's time been extended at the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

The SPEAKER. By the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GOODWIN], who has an hour assigned to him.

Mr. STAFFORD. I did not understand that one gentleman to whom time had been granted by unanimous consent could assign any of it.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama may proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. When a gentleman was entitled to an hour he could assign part of that time to others. I ask that the gentleman from Alabama may proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does the gentleman object?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Wisconsin objects, the Chair will sustain the objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not object. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I submitted a request for unanimous consent, which was the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Nobody would care about this yielding of 10 minutes here to-day, but we do not want to set a general rule that when a Member is granted permission to speak 10 or 15 or 20 minutes, or whatever it is—an unusual sort of request—he can parcel it out. It would be setting a bad example, and the Chair sustains the point of order, and puts the request, both of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] and that of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], that the time of the gentleman be extended 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield for one question?

Mr. HEFLIN. For one question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I desire to ask the gentleman from Alabama if he is in favor of an eight-hour law covering the farmers of Alabama?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will be glad to answer the gentleman's question. I am in favor of it for trainmen in Alabama engaged in the service like that we considered Friday.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman pleases, he has not answered my question.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will answer it, and answer it in my own way. Of course, I am not in favor of an eight-hour law for farmers, and the gentleman knows that we have nothing to do with that subject.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is what I thought.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am in favor of more people working on the farm. I would be in favor of putting the gentleman from Pennsylvania on a farm [laughter], and if he were anywhere else except in the stand-pat district that he represents I think they would send him to the farm on account of his votes here. [Laughter.] Out on the farm people are in the open air, in the sunshine, where they fare well and become healthy and physically strong, but in the sweat shops and factories, from which places Woodrow Wilson has taken the little children, the situation is quite different. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a second?

Mr. HEFLIN. I would rather not. I have but little time.

Mr. HASTINGS. I wanted to call attention to the fact that gentlemen on the other side do not know anything about the farmers and the needs of the farmers, because they are not referred to at all in their platform of 1916.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is true. They know how to "farm" the farmer. That is the only kind of farming that they know or care anything about. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, Republicans are indignant because the trainmen were invited to the White House, but it was all right for the railroad presidents to go to the White House when Theodore Roosevelt was President and have the Treasury of your country and mine to issue money upon railroad bonds. You did not criticize that; not one of you. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But it is all wrong for this army of trainmen, these laboring people, to come to the White House and ask that a just and humane principle be acknowledged and their rights considered. It was all right for you to write into your platform in 1908 a guaranty to the manufacturer of a reasonable profit on the money he had invested, and you even permitted him to be the judge of what a reasonable profit should be. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And it was all right when the money lords of Wall Street told Roosevelt that they would produce a panic if he did not let them have the Government's money, and when he refused they produced the panic in 1907; and then he opened the Treasury to them and took the Government's money to New York and turned it over to them, and they loaned it out at a high rate of interest. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

That was all right, you say. You loaned the people's money to the railroad presidents on railroad bonds. It was all right to go into the purse of the people and take millions to Wall Street when they held the threat of a panic over Roosevelt's head. That was all right.

And it is all right, you say, to use a pen in writing a guaranty of a reasonable profit to the manufacturer, forgetting the farmer, the merchant, the laboring man, the preacher, the teacher, and the toilers of every class. [Applause on the Democratic side].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I can not yield. I have only a few minutes remaining.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. I would like very much to yield to my good friend, because he is in trouble. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then why do you not?

Mr. HEFLIN. He is in trouble because of the position that he took on the strike question Friday and yesterday. It ought to disturb him and haunt him and make him lose sleep. I do not believe that he has slept a wink since the President signed that bill. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman just simply can not get used to the people's rule. He was trained in the school of the bosses. When they had the Ways and Means Committee and passed the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill they did not have the consumers before the committee, not one of them. They did not invite the laboring men. They had only the bosses and the captains of industry who contributed to the campaign funds of the Republican Party [applause on the Democratic side], and that is why they wrote a guaranty to the manufacturers for a reasonable profit. And yet you have the gall to stand up here and talk about the President putting his nose into this railroad controversy in the effort to prevent a strike. When the situation threatened starvation in big cities, transportation facilities tied up, interstate commerce paralyzed, children starving, men and women terror stricken begging the President to prevent the strike, and here you are playing a miserable game of politics at the cost of principle and to the detriment and great injury of your country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Oh, Mr. Speaker, these gentlemen would like to see the old order of things restored, and if the country should be so reckless as to place the Republicans in control of the House they will restore Cannonism and take from the Members the power to elect committees. They will again give that power to the Speaker, and the Cannon dynasty will be reestablished. Bills will be buried in committees unless the Speaker wishes them brought out. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is the condition that will obtain in this House if you should get control. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, the bosses of the Republican Party are misrepresenting the administration and slandering the President, and are using money corruptly. They intend to try to buy the election in some places and to obtain it under false pretenses in others. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Yes; and then they are appealing to sectional prejudice.

I want the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG] to bear this in mind when he comes to speak. When we had the Panama exposition matter up in this House, and he was pleading for it to go New Orleans, he talked about sectionalism being dead. He said the last vestige of it was gone, and he thanked God that we had a reunited country. But not long ago, strange to say, he made an appeal to sectionalism and sought to arouse sectional prejudice. The Republican candidate for President speaks of Americanism in one breath and then appeals to sectionalism in another. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is not the Americanism that Grant had in mind when he refused to take Lee's sword at Appomattox. That is not the Americanism that Grant had in his heart when he said to Gen. Lee, "Tell your men to take their horses home and make a crop." [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is not the kind of Americanism that Lincoln stood for when he heard of Lee's surrender, for tears came into his eyes as he caught a glimpse of that great America to be, and he told the bandmaster to play Dixie. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is not the kind of Americanism that Fitzhugh Lee and Frederick Grant illustrated when, in uniforms of blue, they stood under Old Glory at San Juan Hill. [Applause on the Democratic side.] No, Mr. Hughes, your Americanism is not the kind of Americanism that McKinley spoke for when he stood in the capitol of Georgia, the home State of Alexander H. Stephens, vice president of the Confederacy, and congratulated the country upon the increasing cordiality and growing friendship between the sections. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is not the Americanism that McKinley had in mind when he said the graves of Confederate dead on the Nation's battle fields shall be marked and cared for. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Not the kind of Americanism that Taft stood for when he appointed the associate justices from the South and appointed an ex-Confederate soldier to the Chief Justiceship of the highest court in the land. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Gentlemen, no sincere patriot, no genuine American statesman, will do anything now to try to disturb this increasing cordiality and growing friendship between the sections. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The man who does it is not a friend of the American people; he is an enemy to his country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. Just one minute more, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama have one minute more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama may have one minute more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is very kind of my friend, but they would not let me follow him on yesterday.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I desired to have him follow me yesterday, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. HEFLIN. President Wilson is the Lincoln of the twentieth century [applause on the Democratic side], with all his humane impulses and love for the common people. [Applause on the Democratic side.] No President has encountered so many serious and trying difficulties, so many grave and perplexing problems. He has met and mastered problems of State, interstate, national, and international character. With powerful foreign influences at work trying to draw him into the war, and with powerful sinister interests at home trying to drive him into war, he has kept his country free from war. [Applause on the Democratic side.] With a diplomacy unparalleled in history, he has upheld the dignity of our country, preserved the national honor, and kept us at peace with the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And, Mr. Speaker, when the history of this trying time shall finally be made up, the history of the great men most conspicuous in it, the master spirit, the sublimest figure of them all, will be Woodrow Wilson, President of these United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And, Mr. Speaker, long after those who malign him have passed away and those who traduce him are dead and forgotten, his deeds will live in the hearts of the people and his name will be radiant in the history of his country as one who loved and served mankind. [Prolonged applause.]

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that following the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] I may have 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that following the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] he be permitted to address the House for not exceeding 20 minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to couple with it the request that if I am unable to speak this afternoon, it may go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. BENNET. It is a continuing order.

The SPEAKER. They all go over. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MILEAGE FOR EMPLOYEES.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the following resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution authorizing the payment of mileage to officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they hereby are, directed to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including clerks to Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners, the Capitol police, and W. A. Smith, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD clerk, borne on the annual and session rolls on the 1st day of September, 1916, mileage at the rate of 5 cents per mile, each way, to be estimated by the nearest route usually traveled in coming from and returning to their homes

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum sufficient to carry out the provisions of this act, the same to be immediately available.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOP. I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 15807) to provide for holding sessions of the United States district court in the district of Maine, and for dividing said district into divisions, and providing for offices of the clerk and marshal of said district to be maintained in each of said divisions, and for the appointment of a field deputy marshal in the division in which the marshal does not reside, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 169. Joint resolution interpreting section 50 of the act of June 3, 1916, for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to bring a little matter to the attention of the House. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] has handed in his resignation as a Member of the House, to take effect on September 30. That will leave a vacancy in the chairmanship of the Committee on Military Affairs. That committee will have to meet, as they generally do, before the next session convenes in order to make up appropriations, and it is necessary that a chairman should be elected in his place. I therefore desire to nominate and move the election of the Hon. S. H. DENT, Jr., of Alabama, as chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, to take effect October 1 next.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to Mr. DENT, but my impression was that under the rules of the House Mr. DENT would automatically become chairman.

Mr. KITCHIN. No; not in the case of a resignation; only in the case of temporary absence of the chairman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves the election of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, to take effect October 1 next. Are there any other nominations?

There were no other nominations.

The question was taken; and Mr. DENT was declared elected chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.

SANITARY CONDITION OF DAIRIES IN UNITED STATES.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Mr. Chairman, in the closing hours of this session of Congress I want to register a vigorous protest against the failure of the House Rules Committee to report out House resolution 137, a resolution providing for a committee to investigate the sanitary conditions of dairies in the United States. I want also to serve notice at this time that I shall unite my efforts with those of other friends of this measure at the opening of the regular session in December to have this resolution reported out and passed by the House

During the last nine months we have been in almost constant session, presumably legislating for the common defense and promoting the public welfare of our country. To a certain extent we have succeeded. Some very beneficial legislative measures have been passed. Others not so good, and some positively bad and vicious, have run the gantlet of both the House and Senate.

I am a Republican in politics. I believe that the principles of the Republican Party are best suited for the happy and prosperous development and government of our land. But I hold that at times, when occasion demands, the true representative of the people should bury his partisanship in his patriotism, and that severe punishment should be administered to any public servant who seeks to derive partisan advantage at the expense of the welfare of his country. I have made it a point, therefore, during my congressional career to support any measures, from whatever source they came, that were designed to contribute to the prosperity of the people and to augment the glory and grandeur of the Republic.

Following this nonpartisan impulse, and in obedience to this patriotic principle, it has afforded me pleasure to support the resolution (H. Res. 137) of my distinguished Democratic colleague from Maryland, Mr. LINTHICUM. My pleasure in rendering this support has been only heightened by the reflection that I was redeeming one of my promises to the people of my district at the last election, when I told them that I would do everything in my power to strengthen and improve our Federal pure-food laws.

It is all very well for us to sit from day to day in solemn session discussing national preparedness, Philippine independence, the tariff, and other revenue measures, but matters of equally great importance, though not so august in name or pompous in sound, are those questions that seriously affect the physical well-being and health of the people of our country. We can not be either healthy or happy without sound bodies, and we can not have sound bodies by being compelled to eat and drink unhealthful things. In our immigration laws, in our criminal enactments, and in the encouragement that we give to religious freedom, we seek to raise the standard of the morals of the community. In our statutes pertaining to public instruction we seek to elevate the intellect and strengthen the public intelligence of the Nation. This is all very well, but we should not neglect the very foundation of all these things—the proper care of the bodies of our citizens and rigid legislative provisions looking to their protection against bad food and drink.

The resolution of my colleague from Maryland illustrates very clearly its own meaning, and in its every line and letter offers its own best argument. I therefore insert it at this point entire. It is as follows:

"[H. Res. 137, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session.]

"Whereas it is reported by the Bureau of Animal Industry that 94.5 per cent of the creameries of the country are insanitary to a greater or less degree; that 61.5 per cent of the cream used is unclean or decomposed, or both; that 72.6 per cent of the cream is not pasteurized, but is made into butter to be consumed in raw state, in which state disease germs retain their virulence for a long period of time; that a large percentage of all dairy cattle are affected with tuberculosis; and that infected dairy products are among the active agents in the spread of tuberculosis, typhoid fever, and other infectious diseases; and

"Whereas dairy products are the most widely used of all human foods; and

"Whereas dairies and dairy products are not subject to Federal inspection, so that there is a growing sense of alarm among the consumers: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives appoint a committee of five Members of the House, whose duty it shall be to investigate and report as speedily as practicable (a) whether conditions prevailing in dairies and dairy products seriously menace the health and property of people of the United States; (b) whether Federal inspection and supervision, either alone or in cooperation with State and municipal inspection and supervision, is necessary to the reasonable protection of the health and property of the citizens of the United States; (c) if so, then the best and most economic methods of inaugurating and enforcing the inspection and supervision.

"Second. That for the purpose of fulfilling its functions said committee is empowered to summon and examine witnesses, enforce the production of records, and to do all other things needful and lawful to accomplish its purpose.

"Resolved further, That the expenses of said inquiry and investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House upon vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee, to be immediately available."

The beauty of this resolution is the official basis upon which it rests. The introductory, or "Whereas," clause is an almost literal quotation from the report of the Bureau of Animal Industry of 1912. Being official, we may reasonably assume it to be true. In fact, an official document as to the correctness of the statements contained in it is one of the strongest forms of evidence that we have. Then note, if you please, this verbatim quotation from the report of the department:

"Investigations have shown that 61 per cent out of 1,554 lots of cream received at creameries and buying stations was of third grade—that is, dirty, decomposed, and very sour—that 94.5 per cent of 715 creameries investigated were insanitary to a greater or less degree; and that 72.6 per cent of these creameries did not pasteurize the milk so as to destroy any disease germs that might be present. As disease-producing germs are known to survive for long periods in butter made from unpasteurized cream, and as butter is eaten in the raw state, this product when made under such conditions as prevail in the majority of creameries can not be said to be wholesome and free from danger to human health."

I am well aware that this report of the Bureau of Animal Industry has been attacked as false and misleading. The National Dairy Union is especially vehement in its denials and accusations. Mr. William T. Creasy, secretary of the National Dairy Union, in the hearings before the Rules Committee, spoke of "the broad sweep and unwarranted conclusion" of the report. Subsequently, in a letter to Mr. Creasy upon the subject Hon. D. F. Houston, Secretary of Agriculture, made the following statement:

"So far as can now be determined the report itself is a fair index of conditions existing in the territory surveyed at the time it was issued. The statements are very moderate in the light of the data in the department's files. This information was collected by the Dairy Division staff by men who were identified with and friendly to the dairy industry. It is unfortunate if this report, issued in 1912, has been distorted or misrepresented or made to appear applicable to existing conditions and necessarily to sections other than those involved in the survey. But I do not see how explanations could be made without repeating to a considerable extent what was said in the report. While it is believed that dairy conditions have improved considerably since the report was issued, it is not thought that they have yet reached a standard of perfection that much can be said on the subject without giving information that would still be to some extent unfavorable and objectionable to the interests that you represent."

The fact that there is a dispute between certain agents of the Government and certain representatives of the National Dairy Union as to the truthfulness of statements in the report of the Bureau of Animal Industry is the very best reason and the very strongest argument for the appointment of a congressional investigating committee to determine who is right. Undoubtedly there is a prima facie case made by the official statement of the Government for congressional action, if we are not wholly inclined to the accommodation of private interests rather than to a zealous guardianship of the public welfare. The result of the investigation might show that Mr. Creasy and the National Dairy Union were right when they attacked the report. It might be developed at the hearings before the committee that the investigations made by the Bureau of Animal Industry, which formed the basis of the report of 1912, were too limited in physical area or numerically too small in the number of cows and creameries examined to justify congressional action in the matter of framing Federal laws. The matter could then be left to the control of State inspection, although this is admitted to be exceedingly deficient and unsatisfactory. On the other hand, it might be discovered that the report of the Government was well founded both as to extent of territory and as to the number of cows and creameries examined. It might also be shown that the whole United States was infected, and that the conditions existing were a serious menace to the health of the public. What then could intelligent, conscientious, responsible representatives of the people do but get ready at once to legislate against the evil? Would our neglect to act immediately upon such a report be anything less than a flagrant breach of public duty?

The alarming extent of the evil which we suspect may be judged by a few extracts from the testimony of the experts at the hearings before the Committee on Rules. The following is pertinent:

"Mr. LENROOT. How many creameries are there in the United States?

"Dr. MELVIN. Creameries or dairies? There are 6,000 creameries.

"Mr. LENROOT. And how many dairies?

"Dr. MELVIN. We were estimating on that yesterday. There are about 22,000,000 dairy cows in the United States, and I think they estimate from 7 to 9 head in each dairy, so even at that 10 to each dairy would make it 2,200,000."

At the same hearings, Mr. E. C. Schroeder, a scientist of the Bureau of Animal Industry, declared "that a trifle more than 9 per cent of the cattle of the United States are affected with tuberculosis, and this means virtually one cow out of every ten."

If the testimony of the experts be true, we have, then, about 10 per cent of 22,000,000 dairy cows in the United States affected with tuberculosis. These 2,200,000 tubercular cows are a menace to the health and lives of the people of our country, and it is our solemn duty as representatives of the people to give the matter serious and careful consideration. It is not a matter for jest or conjecture. I insist that it is a serious and solemn proposition. The gravity of the situation may be shown by data and statistics furnished by physicians and experts as the result of complete scientific research and experiment.

From the New York Globe of September 30, 1915, we quote the following:

"At the interstate conference on milk control, held at the New York Academy of Medicine, February 5 and 6, 1913, Dr. William H. Park said: 'We attack this problem in New York City by examining many hundreds of children and adults that have tuberculosis, our experience being the same as that recorded in Germany and England—that 10 per cent of the fatal cases of tuberculosis among children were due to bovine bacilli; that of all the children which were fed with raw dairy products one-half died of bovine bacilli; and that about one-half of all the people, younger children and older children, that had gland tuberculosis had bovine infection.'"

And again, in the same paper, of the same issue, we find the following:

"At the congress held in Washington, from which Dr. Park's statements were quoted here, Dr. G. Sims Woodhead, University of Cambridge, said: 'It can undoubtedly be demonstrated that a considerable proportion of cases of tuberculosis of the intestines and of the lymphatic glands are caused by bovine infection—milk, pot cheese, ice cream, and butter. Such infection occurs especially in the early years of life, and affects not only the intestines, with their associated glands, but also the bones, and even the lungs.' It has been generally accepted that the milk from cows in which the udder is manifestly tuberculous contains tubercle bacilli, and that the milk of one such cow mixed with the milk of 99 perfectly healthy cows infects the entire batch.

"At this congress the work of Dr. Delepine, of Manchester, was reviewed. Dr. Delepine demonstrated that tuberculosis other than tuberculosis of the lungs is responsible for a little less than one-third of the total number of deaths attributed to tuberculosis. All these cases, he holds, are due to food infection and aero infection. These are his words: 'Taking all evidence into consideration, it is possible to say, without fear of exaggeration, that not less than 25 per cent of the children suffering from tuberculosis under 5 years of age suffer from tuberculosis of bovine origin, and that this rate is much lower than one based on probabilities would be.'"

In the testimony of experts heretofore adduced we have both the cause and the effect demonstrated. Dr. Melvin and Dr. Schroeder tell us how many tubercular cows there are in the United States. Dr. Park and Dr. Delepine point out the large percentage of deaths due to tuberculosis of bovine origin, and still we doubt and hesitate to act in the simple matter of a proposition to appoint a congressional committee to investigate the matter thoroughly and report to the Congress the results of its investigation.

The report of the Bureau of Animal Industry of 1912 furnishes not only a very fine basis for congressional investigation of the sanitary conditions of dairies in the United States, but outlines as well a most wise and efficient course of Federal legislation to remedy existing evils. As a supplement to State inspection laws, the following suggestions are made:

It is believed that a proper law well enforced would remove nearly all of the bad conditions now existing. A Federal law would, of course, apply only to products made for interstate or export shipment or to establishments engaged in interstate or foreign commerce. Such a law should embody the following requirements:

(1) That a proper standard of sanitation in the plants be maintained.

(2) Compulsory pasteurization of all cream.

(3) The power should be given to inspect the cream received at such establishments and to supervise the processes of manufacture, as well as to inspect the finished product and to condemn and destroy for food purposes any milk, cream, or butter found to be unwholesome or unfit for human food.

(4) Low-grade cream which is neutralized, blown, or otherwise renovated should be required to be handled in a separate plant and the butter made from such cream labeled so as to indicate that it is made from renovated cream; in other words, it should be handled in the same manner as renovated butter.

(5) The stamp of approval of the United States Government should be required upon all cases before any transportation company is allowed to accept them for interstate or export shipment.

(6) The interstate shipment for food purposes of cream or other dairy products that are unwholesome or unfit for human food should be prohibited.

(7) Suitable penalties should be provided for all violations.

I know of no more humane and beneficent service that the Congress of the United States could render to all the people of the Nation than to institute an investigation into one of the great causes of tuberculosis and then to pass Federal laws that would help to restrain and suppress the evil. We have it upon good authority that nearly 100,000 people die annually within the boundaries of our country of tuberculosis. This dread disease is the scourge of the race, and all the forces of mercy, philanthropy, and charity are combining their efforts to combat it and stamp it out. Religion, through the denominational sanitarium, is lending its aid. Organized charity is doing its part magnificently and well. The profession of medicine is yielding its secrets and dedicating the best products of its labors and of its genius in a grand, gigantic effort to stem the tide. Let not Congress be a coward or a laggard in this great and humane struggle. Let us perform our duties like brave and intelligent men. Let us stand by the babies and small children of our country and hold over them a protecting arm. Let us extend to suffering humanity a helping hand. Let us pass this resolution, and then, if need be, enact Federal laws that the emergency demands. We shall then each enjoy the approval of a good conscience and merit the commendation of a grateful constituency. [Applause.]

THE EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. MOORE, was evidently staggering under the blow which he inflicted upon himself when he voted against the eight-hour bill. Let us be serious about it. One of the greatest strikes in history confronted the country. The most powerful union in the world put forth certain demands. The President offered his services as mediator. When he failed he came to Congress and asked Congress to act. The truth is that the railway brotherhoods have been heretofore opposed to legislation in the matter of wages and hours. They are so conservative that even the conservative American Federation of Labor is too radical for them, and they do not belong to the American Federation of Labor. The enactment of what is now known as the eight-hour law is one of the greatest events in American political history. It came as a complete surprise to the railway men themselves. The brotherhoods became the plaything of economic forces which they do not understand. The great membership of this Congress hardly appreciate the significance of that eight-hour bill. Although it is not an eight-hour bill, it is a most important act. It will probably give a new direction to the entire labor movement. The temporary feature of it is that a strike has been prevented, and it is the height of folly to criticize the President for having prevented the strike. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is the height of injustice and of narrow, unreasoning partisanship to attempt to make political capital out of this situation.

I am not holding a brief for the President or the Democratic Party. I do not intend to do so. I intend to fight both political parties until the great masses of the working people will be intelligent enough to see that both old parties are worthless. But I want to be just.

What has happened? You have not really legislated, you acted the part of a mediator. Mediation was offered to the railroad companies by the Chief Executive, the representative of the entire people. Instead of looking upon themselves as agents of a public utility and servants of the people, they took the ground that they were absolute owners of the railroad companies and they refused mediation. Having refused the President's mediation, they had to take the mediation of Congress.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. No; I have only a few minutes. I may yield when I get through. The great difficulty with compulsory arbitration is to find an impartial arbitrator in a controversy arising out of a conflict of class interests. The proposition of an eight-hour day may appear preposterous to the banker and to the financial magnate, while to the worker it is a matter of elementary justice.

It is a question of a viewpoint, of a philosophy of life dictated by economic interests. These things do not lend themselves to arbitration, and if they are to be arbitrated at all there should be no smaller arbitrator than the elected Representatives of the people of the United States, and that is what happened here. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

You, unconsciously, unknowingly, and perhaps unintelligently acted the part of arbitrators of a great controversy. Before I close, I want to ask you gentlemen, particularly those who take so much pride in having passed the law, not to take away with the left hand what you have given with the right. Do not permit yourselves to be deceived into the belief that compulsory arbitration is a possible thing in the United States. Do not permit yourselves to believe for one moment that the working people will stand for compulsory arbitration. Those who talk about establishing an industrial court utterly fail to comprehend the real character of industrial disputes. They are bread and butter questions. They lie at the very root of all endeavor for betterment. Ultimately, we will have to have national ownership of the railways in this country. The presidents of the railways, as well as the hundreds of thousands of workers employed, have to realize that they are the servants of the people. In this particular dispute the railroad workers were weak and helpless, because they were so powerful. Their strike would have paralyzed the country, and they realized it when the moment to strike came. They were helpless in their great strength, and they were happy, and they are happy now that the Congress of the United States has come in and helped to adjust this great difficulty. There is danger that compulsory arbitration will become an issue after the election is over. This issue should be nipped in the bud. There can not be any compulsory arbitration. I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman stated that it was the policy of organized labor, including the American Federation of Labor, not to ask for legislation——

Mr. LONDON. Upon the subject of hours and wages.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. With respect to hours and wages. That is true. Is it not a fact that the American Federation of Labor, in its convention at San Francisco last year, passed a resolution asking Congress and other legislative bodies to keep hands off in the matter of hours and wages?

Mr. LONDON. I know there was a vote of something like 8,000 to 6,000, the majority holding that they should not appeal to the legislature for an eight-hour law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is a thinker upon this subject——

Mr. LONDON. Pardon me, but what I was trying to emphasize is this. You talk about the railroad men holding up Congress. That is absolutely untrue, because they never asked Congress to legislate for them. I do not mean the gentleman individually, but I refer to the people who are talking generally with reference to the railroad men having held up Congress.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Gentlemen on the other side who make political speeches may not believe it, but I am in sympathy with the eight-hour principle, and have said so time and again in this House and have voted that way, but I object to dictation, as does the gentleman, from the White House or elsewhere so far as my legislative duty is concerned.

Mr. LONDON. Oh, I want to say, so far as the White House is concerned, that the President has such a powerful grip upon his party that it follows him wherever he leads.

DEMOCRATIC LEGISLATION.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, my attention has been called to a matter to which I desire to invite the attention of the House. We have a campaign in Illinois that is becoming very interesting, and some one recently sent me a newspaper published at Aurora, Ill.—the Aurora Beacon News. When I opened it, I discovered the very handsome countenance of my genial colleague, the Hon. IRA C. COPLEY. Attracted by the picture of the distinguished gentleman, I commenced to read and was surprised and at the same time gratified and pleased at the compliment extended to the Democratic Party and its accomplishments. I understand there are other gentlemen in Illinois resorting to the same method of campaigning, who seek an election, even a nomination, by taking credit for Democratic legislation. I understand that my colleague Mr. MCKENZIE and my colleague Mr. FOSS rejoice that they are different from other Republicans and only those Republicans who live in very strong Republican districts, stand-pat in sentiment, have the courage to pursue any other course. Some of these gentlemen went so far the other day as to vote for a Democratic measure—the eight-hour law. My colleague Mr. CANNON, with workshops, railroad shops, and thousands of railroad men in his district, voted for the eight-hour law.

I will read just what our friend and colleague Mr. COPLEY has to say, and upon what theory he is seeking the nomination as well as election. He starts out:

HON. IRA C. COPLEY, CONGRESSMAN OF THE ELEVENTH DISTRICT OF ILLINOIS, CANDIDATE FOR RENOMINATION AT THE REPUBLICAN PRIMARIES.

To the Voters of the Eleventh Congressional District of Illinois:

During the five and one-half years since Mr. COPLEY entered Congress, he has had an active part in the enactment of many constructive acts of legislation, among which are the following:

The Clayton antitrust law.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

The bill to create the Department of Labor.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

The rural credits act—

which is calculated to place the farmer upon the same footing as other business men in respect to credits.

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEATING. Is this rural credits bill mentioned by Mr. COPLEY, Republican candidate for Congress in Illinois, the same rural credits bill which was denounced in the last Republican national platform as being a mere makeshift?

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. It is the same which the Republicans denounced in their platform as ineffective.

Mr. BRITTEN. Did my colleague Mr. COPLEY refer to the Mexican resolution wherein we justified our Army and Navy going into Vera Cruz?

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. I do not know how Mr. COPLEY voted on that question.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am asking about the gentleman who has the floor, who voted to justify the President's action in the use of the Army and Navy at Vera Cruz.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. So I did, and I would do it again. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BRITTEN. Is Mr. COPLEY boasting of it?

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. If the gentleman will listen he will find out how many things Mr. COPLEY boasts of.

Mr. FARR. Will the gentleman yield simply for a question?

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Oh, yes.

Mr. FARR. Did not President Taft sign the measure creating the Department of Labor?

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. That may be, but it was passed by a Democratic House.

Mr. FARR. No; by a Republican Senate, signed by a Republican President. Would not Mr. COPLEY be justified in having voted for that measure and in having engaged in its enactment?

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Well, it passed a Democratic House and he takes credit for his vote. As I understand, it originated here on a bill introduced by Mr. Wilson, now Secretary of Labor.

Mr. STEENERSON. In regard to rural credits legislation, is it not a fact the first time the subject was mentioned in any platform was four years ago, and that both parties favored rural credits legislation, and therefore it could not be called a one-party measure.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Does the gentleman recall the language of his platform recently adopted at Chicago?

Mr. STEENERSON. I was speaking of the platform that Mr. COPLEY was elected on four years ago.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. I will read the platform he is running on at the present time. Here is the present Republican platform:

We favor an effective system of rural credits as opposed to the ineffective law proposed by the present Democratic administration.

Mr. STEENERSON. That is this year.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. After that platform was adopted, and this ineffective measure, which you condemned in your convention speeches, came up for a vote in the House, but 10 Republicans in the House and 5 in the Senate had the courage to vote against it.

Mr. STEENERSON. But the gentleman must remember it was the only rural credits act we could get, and the gentleman also knows the present rural credits act is ineffective. It is simply making a lot of loan agents throughout the country. We were in favor of rural credits, but this was the only plan which we could vote on. We had nothing else offered.

Mr. GLASS. Did the gentleman vote to create these loan agents throughout the United States?

Mr. STEENERSON. I certainly did.

Mr. GLASS. Why did he do it, if he thought it was ineffective?

Mr. STEENERSON. Because it was the best thing we could get.

Mr. GLASS. It is the best thing the gentleman will ever get.

Mr. STEENERSON. It establishes a reserve system so as to keep all the money in the reserve banks for commercial and speculative purposes and not to allow the farmers to employ the money——

Mr. GLASS. There is not a provision in the act that relates to speculative purposes. The gentleman from Virginia reported a rural-credits act so good that the gentleman from Minnesota was afraid to vote against it.

Mr. STEENERSON. I wanted a better rural-credits law, and the gentleman knows that speculators in Wall Street never had such a chance since the reserve system was created——

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. I want to say further in regard to the rural-credits act that I voted for it. The entire Democratic membership of this House and Senate voted for it in sincere good faith, believing that it would be effective, while our friends on the other side of the House voted for what they profess to believe to be an ineffective law and then——

Mr. STEENERSON. It was the best we could get.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I will read further from Mr. COPLEY's list of Democratic legislation which he voted for:

A nonpartisan tariff commission which will enable Congress to approach tariff legislation from a fair and scientific standpoint.

The sixteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provides for the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. HENSLEY. Did the Republican Party ever make any serious effort to enact any rural-credit legislation during the time they were in power?

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Never, to my knowledge. They never introduced a bill.

Mr. STEENERSON. No platform demanded it, either Democrat, Republican, Populist, or any other one.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Reading further, Mr. COPLEY says he voted for—

The inheritance tax, which exempts moderate inheritances and imposes a tax upon the larger inheritances, which it is estimated will yield $50,000,000 annually.

The income-tax law in its present form, which exempts moderate incomes and imposes a graduated tax upon the larger incomes, whereby, according to conservative estimates, $150,000,000 annually will be raised.

The Federal reserve act, otherwise known as the currency law. The importance of this act is hardly yet fully realized. It makes it impossible for a half dozen Wall Street bankers to create for their purposes a money panic, such as we experienced in 1907 and on numerous other occasions.

The Trade Commission, which gives the Government regulation and control of the large industrial corporations whose business approaches the proportions of a monopoly. The business of this country can not be conducted without these great corporations, which in the past have been groping in the dark as to their legal rights, as a result of which they have too often violated the law when there was no intention to do so. This act, in addition, gives these corporations the benefit of governmental guidance in their operations which makes a violation of the antitrust laws inexcusable.

Then, not content with a mere recital of the many good laws supported by him, Mr. COPLEY concludes his address to the people with the following sweeping declaration, which we all indorse:

Congressman COPLEY is now completing his third term in Congress. During this time more legislation of a constructive character has been considered and enacted into law than in any like period in the history of the country.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Congressman COPLEY is a candidate for renomination on the Republican ticket at the primaries to be held Wednesday, September 13. We bespeak your support of Congressman COPLEY at the primaries.

COPLEY CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE.

Mr. Speaker, I believe I stated that others of my colleagues in Illinois had resorted to the same method of campaigning. The fact is they are awakening to a sentiment that prevails in that great agricultural and industrial State. The spirit of progressiveness, of constructive legislation, dominates the political sentiment of the State of Illinois, and it is only those Republicans who live in overwhelming Republican districts who have dared face this sentiment and turn it down. In the district represented by my friend from Bloomington [Mr. STERLING], another represented by the minority leader [Mr. MANN], the Republicans are so overwhelming in numbers that they dare face this sentiment and yield nothing.

In the election of 1912 three-fifths of the Republicans of the State of Illinois voted for Mr. Roosevelt; two-fifths of them voted for Mr. Taft. That is about the correct proportion of standpatters and Progressives in the ranks of the Republican Party in the State of Illinois. And I want to say to my friends here upon the Republican side of this Chamber, you deceive yourselves when you believe that there is a consolidation of the two elements, the standpatters and the Progressives, and you reckon without your host when you say that you can add those two votes together and have as a result a majority of so many thousand.

My correspondence in the State has been extensive for the last six weeks, from every congressional district and from all parts of the State. I violate no secret when I say that a poll of the State of Illinois, conducted in the most systematic manner, with extensive correspondence reaching into every district and into every precinct of the State, discloses that among Republicans, and especially among progressive Republicans, there is a wide-prevailing and deep-seated sentiment and love and affection for Mr. Wilson and a revolt against the Republican Party that is portentous; and outside of the city of Chicago and down through the agricultural portion of the State the Democrats are going to make enormous gains from those who formerly voted the Republican ticket, and that section of the State which heretofore has furnished the Republican majority is going to split even in the coming election. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And I break a little news to the further consternation, perhaps, of my good friends representing the Republican Party on the floor of this House when I say that a systematic poll in the city of Chicago, among all classes of voters, in Democratic and Republican precincts alike, covering the entire city of Chicago, discloses a change in sentiment and an avowed purpose and intention to vote the Democratic ticket, which will land Chicago in the Democratic column by over 100,000.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BORLAND. It may interest the gentleman to know that the regularly nominated Progressive candidate in the fifth district of Missouri has withdrawn from the race and has issued a statement in which he says he intends to support Woodrow Wilson and the entire Democratic ticket. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The reason he gives for that action is that the present administration of the White House has carried out all the progressive and humanitarian measures which were the foundation of the Progressive Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. I will say, Mr. Speaker, in that connection that these changes and declarations on the part of the rank and file in Illinois have become so everyday and so common that they hardly create a passing interest. Illinois is going to line up in the Democratic column. Immediately after Mr. Hughes's nomination there seemed to be considerable sentiment in the State in his favor and the Republicans seemed very much encouraged; but after he made his speech of acceptance and started on his swing around the circle you could just feel the reaction. It has come. Our friends have to admit it. There is no disguising the fact, and I think that I am safe in predicting—perhaps in the last opportunity that I will take to address this House at this session and prior to the coming election—that the electoral vote of Illinois will be cast for Woodrow Wilson. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask unanimous consent, entirely independent of what I have said here to-day, for leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. VENABLE). The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Independent of what I have said to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting the speech of Col. Roosevelt, recently made at Lewiston, Me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the speech of Col. Roosevelt, recently made at Lewiston, Me. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think the gentleman ought to accompany that with the telegram of congratulation from Candidate Hughes, for the benefit of our German friends.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] is recognized for 25 minutes.

IMMIGRATION STATION AT ELLIS ISLAND.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, on the 18th of July, in pursuance of what seemed to me to be a clear public duty, I made certain statements on the floor of this House in relation to the Commissioner of Immgration at Ellis Island. A Member of this House is by the Constitution protected in whatever he says from any action taken elsewhere, and therefore we ought to be more careful to be accurate in our statements. I have come before the House in these closing days of the session to detail briefly some of the results of the remarks that I made at that time. I made, as they appear on page 11261 of the RECORD, four charges:

First. That Commissioner Howe permitted the prostitutes, the pimps, the procurers, to mingle at will with the other inmates at Ellis Island.

Second——

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes; for a question.

Mr. KEATING. I wanted to ask the gentleman if he would yield to permit me to make a unanimous-consent request in connection with his speech. The unanimous-consent request I desired to make was this: This is the second time the gentleman from New York has addressed the House on this subject. I have some facts that I would like to present to the House in relation to this same matter at the conclusion of the gentleman's remarks, as a matter of fairness to Mr. Howe, and I wanted at this time to ask the House for permission to follow the gentleman for a limited time, to present some facts on the other side of this question.

Mr. MANN. For how long a time?

Mr. KEATING. How much time has the gentleman?

Mr. BENNET. Twenty-five minutes.

Mr. KEATING. And he took about half an hour before.

Mr. MANN. There are other gentlemen to follow him.

Mr. KEATING. I realize that, and therefore I hesitate to prefer this request. I would like to have 20 minutes. I would like to follow the gentleman, so that I can have it in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will be content with 20 minutes, and after he uses it will not put somebody in an embarrassing position by asking for more——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand the gentleman asks for 20 minutes, to follow the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET]. I want to say to the gentleman that I have been very kindly given permission by the House to speak for 30 minutes. I rarely take up the time of the House, and I want to speak on a matter that is of some importance to the people I represent, relative to an amendment in the revenue bill. I dislike very much to object to the request of the gentleman from Colorado, but under the circumstances I do not think I can consent. I must object.

Mr. KEATING. I request that the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment—long enough for me to refer to some of the matters concerning the Commissioner of Immigration. Those facts ought to go into the RECORD.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is true, Mr. Speaker, but 3,000,000 people are suffering in this country now because of the belligerent powers denying the rights of shippers of tobacco to get to their market. I want to get in before this conference report on the revenue bill is agreed to.

Mr. KEATING. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will not press my request.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the occasion for making any further speeches after all these matters have been finally settled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS]?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, as I was about to say when I yielded to the gentleman from Colorado to make a request for unanimous consent, to which request I did not object, I had made four charges against the commissioner at Ellis Island.

Immediately I became the target for the abuse of Mr. Howe's newspaper friends. On July 18 I told the House that I had incurred the enmity of the Globe in 1913 by representing Hudgins & Dumar, the Ellis Island contractors, as their attorney during the investigation of the charges made against them by the Globe. These charges I was able to prove to be false and unfounded, and even to prove the motives behind them. The truth won the investigation for my clients, but the fact that I had the temerity to oppose the Globe earned me its enmity.

In the present controversy it at once connected my fight against Government operation of the privileges at Ellis Island with my former retainer. It ignored the fact that my amendment was offered June 24 and that the Hudgins & Dumar contract expired June 30, only six days later. It has never published the fact that Mr. Hudgins, who is now the proprietor of Hudgins & Dumar, did not bid to succeed himself and that the contract for the feeding privilege has been let to a Mr. Lusier, the present proprietor of the restaurant in front of which Herman Rosenthal was killed. In the face of these facts it continues to assert, even so recently as September 6, that my action of June 24 was intended to benefit my former client, Mr. Hudgins. I have made arrangements to sue the Globe, Times, and Vorwarts for libel, as some of their false and outrageous statements have gone far beyond the limits of legitimate criticism of a public official.

Before I was interrupted I had read one of the charges I made July 18. The second was that this commissioner turns them—alluding to the class I had mentioned, men, women, and children—out into a common recreation ground; hardened prostitutes and adolescent youths. Third, in relation to a Mrs. Harris whom I mentioned, that the result of her coming to Ellis Island had been beneficial, and that upon some of her recommendations the conditions there have been somewhat mitigated and some of the scandalous occurrences that used to typify the twilight hours of the island had ceased to exist. And fourth, I charged that in the two years, on repeated occasions, in a number of cases, he has recommended to the department at Washington that these individual prostitutes be admitted on bond, which simply means a license to proceed wherever they will to practice their vocation.

In connection with those four charges I mentioned two illustrative cases, one of a prostitute known as Giulietta La Marca. Mr. Howe, from Siasconset, Mass., under date of July 20, 1916, wired an interview several columns long to the New York Globe. In relation to Giulietta La Marca, he said:

I investigated her case and found that her husband had stolen her clothes and compelled her to receive men. The husband was sent to prison and Giulietta to the island.

Mr. Speaker, as stated by Mr. Howe, that is a most pitiful case; but the most pitiful thing about it is that Mr. Howe's statement is entirely, absolutely, completely untrue. The facts in relation to the case are on file in the Bureau of Immigration, file No. 53986. Giulietta La Marca, an Italian by birth, was what is known as a clandestine prostitute, who lived in 1913 in Algiers, Africa, with one Paolo Palumbo. She had been married abroad prior to that time, and so far as the State Department is able to find out her husband, an entirely respectable Italian, is still living at 30 Strada Vico, Resina, Italy. She had a child, but she abandoned that child, as she abandoned her husband, and entered into this life of prostitution. In the spring of 1914 she came to the United States on the steamship Martha Washington, landing in Brooklyn on June 10, 1914, stating that she was going to her husband at 116 Van Brunt Street, Brooklyn, care of M. Ciro. She had no husband at 116 Van Brunt Street, Brooklyn. The facts, as disclosed by the documents, are that she and Paolo Palumbo and one Vincenzo Palumbo, Paolo's brother, had agreed that she should leave Algiers and go to the United States for the purpose of practicing prostitution, and that when she came to the United States she went to Vincenzo Palumbo, alias Michael Maggio, alias Marco Ciro, at 116 Van Brunt Street, Brooklyn. After about a year she was caught in the practice of prostitution in the United States of America. There were caught with her Vincenzo Palumbo and a man who occupied to her the position of a broker, called Francisco Messina, whose dirty business it was to bring to her customers on a commission. Palumbo and Messino were tried in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York, Brooklyn, in June and July, 1915, and I read the letter of the United States attorney for that district, written to me in relation to the case:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES ATTORNEY,
Brooklyn, N. Y., August 7, 1916.

HON. WILLIAM S. BENNET,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 5, 1916, inquiring as to the date of trial of Palumbo and Messina.

In reply thereto I beg to advise you that Vincenzo Palumbo and Francesco Messina were indicted on June 8, 1915, for violation of section 3 of the act of February 20, 1907, as amended by the act of March 26, 1910, for importing an alien woman, Giulietta La Marca, for the purpose of prostitution. Trial was begun on June 29 and finished July 2, 1915, both defendants being found guilty. Palumbo was sentenced to seven and one-half years at Atlanta and Messina to three years at Atlanta.

I trust that this gives you the information which you desire.

Respectfully,

MELVILLE J. FRANCE,
United States Attorney.

After that conviction Giulietta La Marca was examined at Ellis Island, as the law requires, to show cause why she should not be deported. She made no claim that she had been forced into her life by any husband. She denied that she had ever been a prostitute. She made a claim that she was living with a mythical husband in Brooklyn who never existed, and whose nonexistence was very easily ascertained by the officers of the law.

And yet after all those facts, after the trial, after the conviction, after the examination, the commissioner of immigration, over his own signature, says:

I investigated her case and found that her husband had stolen her clothes and compelled her to receive men. The husband was sent to prison and Giulietta to the island.

Comment is unnecessary.

I used another illustration in relation to a young man whom I described as a Portuguese, because he spoke the Portuguese language. His nationality was Brazilian. I said that he had taken a woman on Ellis Island into one of the rooms in the detention quarters and that they had locked the door. Mr. Howe came before the Committee on Immigration here in Washington on July 28 and, among other things, met that in a way which would have been a complete defense except for one thing, and that was that the defense was untrue. Here was the defense. He said:

There is not a single door in the detention quarters at Ellis Island that locks on the inside.

And I thought from the positive way he said it that he knew what he was talking about, and I thought I had been misinformed. On the 4th of August I went over to Ellis Island, went up into that corridor with an inspector furnished me by Commissioner Howe, and found that there were eight doors to rooms in that corridor and that seven of those doors to rooms had locks on the inside. In the meantime Mr. Dinsmore, the Assistant Secretary of Labor, had made the same statement as Mr. Howe to the Committee on Immigration as of his personal knowledge. The Secretary of Labor had made the same statement to this House over his own signature as a matter of knowledge, when the facts were as I have stated. Commissioner Howe, on the same day that I was there, after he knew that I had found out the truth about the locks, wrote me a letter, in which he said:

I do not know whether you noticed it or not, but the room where we always kept the women warrant cases up to a recent transfer is room 216. It is known as the women's warrant room and has always been so designated. This is where the difficult cases we have recently had were kept up to the time when we separated them as far as possible in the corridor from the warrant men.

I said nothing about room 216 in my statement on the floor of the House. I said a room in the detention quarters.

This room can not be locked on the inside. The inside of the lock is a blank, and there is no aperture through which a key could be placed. This is known as the immoral women's room, and I presume the lock was taken off the inside for this very reason. Up to this morning I had supposed that all the rooms were alike in this regard.

Mr. Howe has been commissioner of immigration on Ellis Island for two years. He came down here on notice to testify before a committee of the House, and he stated as an absolute fact something that was not so—that a moment's investigation would have found out that it was not so. I do not know whether he did not know it or whether he did know it and presumed upon the fact that nobody would ever go down there and look at those doors. I give you the facts.

Mr. MANN. Are there locks on the inside of the doors?

Mr. BENNET. On seven of the eight rooms; and Mr. Howe admits it in his letter and says:

Up to this morning I had supposed that all the rooms were alike in this regard.

Mr. MANN. He says in his letter that one door does not have a lock on the inside.

Mr. BENNET. The other seven had.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BENNET. Yes; a question.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does the gentleman believe that a man of Mr. Howe's character and his generally efficient administration there would deliberately state a falsehood about things of that kind?

Mr. BENNET. Was the gentleman in the room when I stated the facts in relation to Giulietta La Marca?

Mr. SLAYDEN. No; I was not. I was getting some lunch.

Mr. BENNET. I will refer the gentleman to that part of my remarks.

Mr. SLAYDEN. With reference to whom?

Mr. BENNET. Giulietta La Marca, in which case Commissioner Howe, over his own signature, on the 20th of July, made a statement which the records of the Bureau of Immigration demonstrate to be untrue from start to finish.

Mr. SLAYDEN. A man may make an incorrect statement.

Mr. BENNET. That was not an incorrect statement. It was untrue from start to finish.

Mr. SLAYDEN. There is a difference between an incorrect statement and a falsehood.

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman can make his own comment at any time. Now as to the charges. I made my remarks on the 18th of July. On the 19th of July a New York World reporter was sent to Ellis Island to make an independent investigation, and this is what that reporter reported:

No great surprise was occasioned at Ellis Island to-day by the charges made by WILLIAM S. BENNET, of New York, in Congress yesterday. There was regret expressed that conditions on the island were to be made the subject of public scandal, for many of Commissioner Frederick C. Howe's lieutenants, although disagreeing with him in his views, feel they will be subject to criticism equally with their chief. The Evening World reporter found no difficulty in confirming many of the statements made by Representative BENNET.

Commissioner Howe has absented himself from his office more than any other immigration head in several years. It is seldom that he may be found at the island, and then usually by appointment. The affairs of the island are conducted through Byron H. Uhl, the assistant commissioner and the superintendent of the immigration station. When Commissioner Howe's return is asked about the official questioned usually replies by naming all the days of the week and then adding, "or possibly some time next week or so."

HOWE DID AWAY WITH SEGREGATION SYSTEM.

It was Commissioner Howe who first inaugurated the system of allowing all the detained aliens to mingle freely with one another. In the past it had been the custom to segregate criminals from the others. Now, however, they mingle as one family. Efforts had been made to have Commissioner Howe reverse himself, and it was felt by several of his subordinates that he was beginning to realize the falsity of his system.

Although Commissioner Howe is freely criticized by his subordinates, there are none that charge him with deliberately allowing or bringing about conditions that would make for wrong. They say the commissioner is a dreamer, who does things under the belief that he is aiding the penned-up immigrants.

Abnormal conditions developed on Ellis Island with the outbreak of hostilities in Europe. There were several hundred detained immigrants whose deportation had been ordered. The majority of these aliens were from Germany and Austria-Hungary. It was impossible to send them back, and for months they were held almost as prisoners on the island. Then gradually steps were taken to allow them to land, and but seven or eight remain.

Commissioner Howe instituted the rule to allow all the aliens to mingle with each other, believing it a humanitarian step. As a result there has been an intermingling of the sexes that provokes scandal.

Representative SIEGEL, a member of the Committee on Immigration, visited Ellis Island on the 20th, and wrote to the chairman of the Committee on Immigration, making among other things this suggestion:

That all known prostitutes, who are held on warrant for deportation, be immediately segregated and kept apart from all other persons on the island; second, that all ex-convicts, being held on warrant for deportation, be kept separate and apart from all other persons on the island.

On the same day, only two days after I made my remarks, Mr. Densmore, the acting Secretary of Labor, in the absence of Mr. Howe and without consulting him, visited Ellis Island, and when he found what the conditions were he directed that an order be issued that prostitutes and convicts be segregated on the balconies and on the recreation grounds. Here is the order:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
IMMIGRATION SERVICE,
OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF IMMIGRATION,
Ellis Island, New York Harbor, N. Y., July 20, 1916.

Inspector in charge deporting division:

You will see to it that hereafter prostitutes and ex-convicts detained at this station do not mingle with any other detained persons. Prostitutes may be given access to the porch or playground when either of these places is not occupied by other immigrants. This course may also be followed as to detained ex-convicts, but ex-convicts and prostitutes should not be given access to either of the places named, or any other quarters, at the same time.

BYRON H. UHL,
Assistant Commissioner.

This order is right and does that for which I contended. It separates the immoral persons from the decent, reputable immigrants.

The testimony on July 28 was that the order was issued under the direction of the secretary, Mr. Densmore.

The executive secretary of a great missionary society of a Protestant denomination wrote me on July 19, 1916, as follows:

I have read with great interest the report in the morning papers of your speech before Congress exposing unfavorable conditions at Ellis Island. Kindly accept my congratulations for your courageous utterance. From our touch with the work at Ellis Island I can simply say that the situation has been very trying since the appointment of Commissioner Howe. We assumed, however, that the administration favored his methods and that naturally there was no alternative but to make the best of it. This we have done without complaint or criticism.

We sincerely hope and pray that your resolution may bring forth a more healthful condition of affairs than is maintained at this port of entry.

A Roman Catholic priest from my district wrote me as follows:

A few days before you spoke about Ellis Island I was down there with a friend, and we went through the plant. I knew all your speech three days before, because from the guide on Ellis Island we heard of free love and the loose way things were running without any head.

A missionary on duty at Ellis Island writes as follows:

The missionaries have always shown their disapproval of the unfortunate mixture of sexes, conditions, and life here on the island. Demogogic experiments should have been done in different places, not where good honest families, for the rigid necessities of the law, are detained against their will.

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman insert the names of these priests and ministers and missionaries.

Mr. BENNET. If the investigation I have asked for is ordered by the House I will produce them before the committee.

Now, that relates to charges 1 and 2 and, I think, fully proves them. I might say in addition to the second that nobody denies, and Commissioner Howe admits, that the prostitutes and convicts were turned out together on the common lawn. In his hearing before the House committee on July 28, after he had been reversed by the department he said: "I defend my policy. I say that there is far more safety at Ellis Island in letting the people out on a big open porch 300 feet long and 150 feet wide."

He does not seem to comprehend that good decent women and children and adolescent youth were not accustomed to mingling with prostitutes, pimps, and procurers and have a right to be protected from that kind of people.

The next thing I said was that some of Mrs. Harris's recommendations have been adopted and conditions there have been to some extent mitigated, and some of the scandalous occurrences that seem to typify the twilight hours have ceased to exist.

I will not read the rules except to say that I will put them in. They are as follows:

1. The detained warrant men will be instructed to keep to their rooms or the men's day detention room; not to traverse the corridors except by way of the men's detention room to meals, and not otherwise; and not to enter the laundry or other rooms where women are detained.

They will be permitted on that part of the balcony to the east of the benches and will be instructed that if they violate this rule and pass this line and mingle with the women, the privilege of using the porch will be taken away from them.

2. The same instructions will be given to the warrant women, who are to be moved to room 212. They are permitted on the west side of the balcony, with instructions not to cross to the east end or to mingle with the men.

3. The doors of the corridors are to be kept closed.

4. There is to be no loitering in the corridors. This rule applies not only to warrant cases but to all aliens detained here. Watchmen and matrons are instructed to send both men and women out of all the corridors into the day detention rooms, except when they are passing through the corridors for meals or some other business.

5. The warrant cases will be advised that continuance of the privileges they are receiving depends upon their good behavior, and these privileges will be taken away from them if they are guilty of any improprieties.

6. Warrant men and warrant women are not to sit together at the tables.

Now, Mr. Howe says that one of the reasons why he has had so much trouble is on account of there having been so many people to deal with. Why, Mr. Speaker, there never has been a commissioner that had so few people to deal with on Ellis Island as has Mr. Howe.

On the 4th of August I went there and made inquiries to verify my recollection. Ellis Island holds, and has beds for, over 2,000 people, and more have stayed there.

On December 9, 1913, there were 2,371; on December 9, 1915, there were 425; on December 13, 1913, there were 1,575; on December 13, 1915, there were 257; on September 5, 1913, there were 1,440, and on September 15, 1915, there were 288.

Here are some sample figures of overnight detentions at Ellis Island before and during the European war, showing the great shrinkage in immigration:

Room? Why, not only has he the extra room in the administration building, but Congress, through its generosity, built on the third island hospital buildings for an emergency far in excess of the normal needs purposely for a case of epidemic, and there are 11 hospital buildings of a capacity, as my colleague, Mr. FITZGERALD, said, for 660 people. On the 2d of August there were 39 people in these 11 buildings. Mr. Howe had all that extra space in addition to the room in the administration building. Now, that about cleans up everything.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. Does the gentleman think the commissioner would be justified in using the hospital buildings for anything except hospital needs?

Mr. BENNET. Under the law the commissioner has.

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman thinks so, without doubt?

Mr. BENNET. Without doubt. I said that Mr. Howe was the most negligent commissioner we have ever had at Ellis Island. Until the investigation called for in my resolution, 317, is had that can not be fully proved, but I call attention to some facts which are patent. Mr. Howe's is an important position. The commissioner at Ellis Island gets $1,500 a year more than the Assistant Secretary of Labor. He gets $6,500 a year, and he ought to attend to his business. Every other commissioner in my experience has. Mr. Howe was the director of the People's Institute in New York when he was appointed. He is still a director of the People's Institute, although, I understand, without compensation. Mr. Howe was chairman of the national board of censorship of motion pictures of New York and chairman of the executive committee of the same organization. Their last report, dated January, 1915, discloses that Mr. Howe then occupied both those offices.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. How much of his time does that position on the board of censorship take?

Mr. BENNET. I do not know. I have mentioned two positions that he occupies, and I am about to mention a third. I have not got through yet. One of the burning questions in our city is the question of the municipal operation of public utilities. I find in the New York Times of July 31 that Frederick C. Howe is president of the League for Municipal Ownership and Operation in New York City, and engaged in a bitter controversy with the public-service commission, and if he does what he ought to do that will take at least half of his time. Nor is that all. Mr. Howe is an author—a professional writer, is what he calls himself.

The Library of Congress furnishes me with the following:

F. S. HELLMAN,
Acting Chief Bibliographer.

With all those vocations and avocations, in addition to his official position, what I now present is the logical sequence. He had to do some of his private work on Ellis Island, and here it is. Here are 100 or 150 pages of manuscript of one of his books, written on Government paper at Ellis Island by a Government stenographer. That is the way that Mr. Howe has discharged his duties as Commissioner of Immigration at Ellis Island.

As to the charge that he recommended the admission of women charged with being prostitutes, he admits that and places the number at nine.

Under leave granted me by the House, I extend my remarks to comment briefly on the speech of Representative KEATING, of Colorado, delivered September 5 (RECORD, p. 13887), and to one which, by leave of the House, he inserted in the RECORD September 7.

There are 42 Representatives from New York, other than myself, and 21 from Ohio, in which two States Mr. Howe has lived and held office. Among these 63 Representatives are Democrats, Republicans, and 1 Socialist. It is somewhat singular that none of the Representatives from the States where Mr. Howe is best known took up the cudgels for him. Mr. KEATING, of Colorado, is Mr. Howe's enthusiastic friend. But, being from Colorado and probably never having set foot on Ellis Island, he very properly does not pretend any real knowledge of Ellis Island conditions. He inserted in his remarks in full the statement of Mr. Howe before the House Committee on Immigration on July 28. I asked unanimous consent that I have six minutes' time in which to comment on Mr. Howe's examination and that Mr. KEATING have six minutes to reply to me. Mr. KEATING first agreed, but finally objected and prevented me from occupying the time, but the House later gave me leave to extend my remarks.

Mr. Howe claims for himself one thing on which I wish to comment:

That he makes the steamship companies pay $100,000 more a year than they used to for hospital charges. Probably that is true. But why does not Mr. Howe tell the whole truth? Prior to 1913 the steamship companies had contested in the courts the right of the Government to make them pay these hospital charges. They won their case. Thereupon Congress in 1913 passed an act requiring the steamship companies to pay these charges. Mr. Howe is the first commissioner to have the benefit of this act, and naturally he can make the steamship companies pay.

Outside of this there is only one other matter in Mr. Howe's statement which requires comment. Mr. Howe says:

I want to open with the statement that the immigration law says that it is the duty of the commissioner to protect the immigrants from fraud and loss. That is an obligation upon him just as much as any other obligation, but it is an obligation that, so far as I know, no other commissioner ever took very seriously

This is an unconscious revelation of Mr. Howe. He only came to New York City in 1910 and was appointed in 1914.

Commissioner Williams was a hard man in many respects, but he certainly did protect the immigrants from fraud and loss. Robert Watchorn, himself an immigrant, was constantly protecting the immigrant. My personal knowledge goes back no further than these two.

Mr. KEATING's inserted remarks on September 7 consist of a statement by Mr. Howe. It displays Mr. Howe's unquestioned literary ability. But he does not stick to facts. He says: "The immoral cases were kept by themselves," and so forth. This is untrue. The gravamen of my complaint was that they were permitted to mingle. If they were not permitted to mingle, why was the department order of July 20, forbidding them to mingle any more, issued?

Mr. Howe says that an investigation was made at Ellis Island of each of the cases referred to by me. That is true. It was made on July 25, 26, and 27. I introduced a resolution to have those investigations sent to Congress. It is as follows:

House resolution 341.

Resolved, That the Secretary of Labor be directed to send to the House of Representatives the examinations into conditions on Ellis Island, taken by and before Byron H. Uhl, assistant commissioner of immigration, at Ellis Island, July 25, 26, and 27, 1916.

The Department of Labor has refused me, a Representative chosen by the people, permission even to see the testimony taken. Why not let Congress, rather than Mr. Howe, pass on Mr. Howe's investigation? Mr. Howe leaves the impression that the food contract is a very valuable contract. Why not tell the truth?

Official correspondence in Mr. Howe's office shows that in May, 1915, the then food contractor found that he was losing so much money that he notified the steamship companies that unless they would increase, voluntarily, what they were paying him from 8 cents a meal to 15 cents a meal, he would abandon the contract. They made the increase, and the contractor served until June 30, 1916—the end of his contract period. During the summer Mr. Howe relet the contract, after receiving bids, to a Mr. Lusier. The former contractors, Hudgins & Dumar, did not bid.

If Mr. Howe has given Mr. Lusier a contract by which he can charge the immigrants and the steamship companies cost and a clear profit of 10 per cent, he has given out the most profitable food contract Ellis Island has seen since the days of the scandals of 1892.

I represent a district composed largely of immigrants and descendants of immigrants. I have as a member of the United States Immigration Commission of 1907–1910 visited the homes of the immigrants in Russia, Roumania, Greece, Italy, Palestine, Syria, and other countries. I have seen them board ship at Beirut, Patra, Hamburg, Naples, Geneva, Messina, Palermo, and Liverpool. I know the immigrant and his needs. He is a human being, and for years I have fought to have him treated as such. Mr. Howe writes beautifully about the immigrant. Some of the things which he does, such as concerts, are good, but, never having really mingled with the immigrant, he fails to comprehend that the immigrant women are as much entitled to be protected from forced association with prostitutes and criminals as are the good women who make up his family and mine. I am glad that, as he could not see this himself, his superiors have taken the bull by the horns and by the order of July 20 protected the decent women and children from these distasteful and dangerous companionships.

FREDERIC C. HOWE.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request for unanimous consent that I be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes in reply to the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand that this is with the approval of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection. The gentleman is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, Frederic C. Howe is my friend. That is my excuse for taking part in this discussion. In addition to that, I come from the "untutored West," where it is not considered good form to strike a man when his hands are tied, or to assail the reputation—the good name—of a distinguished citizen, of a splendid public official, in a forum where that official has no chance to reply.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Certainly.

Mr. BENNET. Does the gentleman think we ought never to criticize public officials on the floor of this House?

Mr. KEATING. Oh, no; I do not hold to that at all; but I do hold that when gentlemen appear upon the floor of this House and indulge in the vilest of personalities they should be sure of their facts.

In the speech which the gentleman delivered on July 18, he charged among other things that Frederic C. Howe believed in free love. I am informed that the gentleman has cut that sentence from his printed speech.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. BENNET. I do not recall having made such a statement in that way. I used the expression "free love" as an adjective, and the gentleman ought to be fair enough to say that when Mr. Howe denied that he was a believer in free love I had his letter published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, let me read the exact words used by the gentleman from New York on that occasion:

> Mr. Speaker, it is of very little moment to the people at large whether in offering the particular amendment which I read in your hearing I discharged my duty to the best of my capacity. I believe I did, I know I did. But it is of tremendous importance that a half-baked radical, who has free-love ideas, no proper idea of the effect of the mingling of the bad with the good, should be spoken of plainly.

That is the statement that the gentleman made on the floor of this House on July 18. Of course anyone who knows Frederic C. Howe, anyone who has ever heard him lecture, anyone who has ever read his books, anyone who has ever come in personal contact with the man, knows the charge is cruelly untrue.

The gentleman says that Mr. Howe is an author, and that seems to be the most serious charge that he brings against him to-day; that Mr. Howe writes books and magazine articles. There was a time when our Republican friends insisted that the Democrats were unlettered, illiterate, ignorant, and that for that reason they were incapable of conducting the Government.

The gentleman now charges that we put men of letters in responsible positions; that they write books and magazine articles; and that because a man has written 3 books and 16 magazine articles it is self-evident that he could not have performed his official duties. That all depends. It may be that the gentleman from New York, if he had an opportunity to work from now until the end of his days, could not write one book that anyone on top of God's earth would read; but there are others, including Mr. Howe, who are capable of performing the duties they owe to Uncle Sam and at the same time contributing to the world's literature. But, gentlemen, think of a Representative of the American people coming upon the floor of this House and in one breath telling you that this man is a great author, is capable of producing 3 books of wide circulation and 16 magazine articles in two years, and then producing the kind of testimony the gentleman from New York has presented to this House to-day for the purpose of blackening that man's good name.

Mr. OVERMYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman will have to pardon me; I have not the time.

Mr. OVERMYER. I just wanted to inquire if the gentleman thinks the gentleman from New York might be a little peeved because Mr. Howe was one of the 37 eminent writers who addressed letters to Mr. Hughes a short time ago?

Mr. KEATING. That is not the reason the gentleman from New York is "peeved." I will tell the House why the gentleman is "peeved." I will tell the House why the gentleman from New York made the attack of July 18 and why he has renewed it to-day.

The firm of Hudgins & Dumar has a contract or concession for feeding immigrants at the Ellis Island immigrant station. The gentleman from New York while out of Congress was attorney for that firm. I understand he now says that since he came back to Congress he has ceased to be their legal representative, but there is no question that he was their attorney at one time.

Hudgins & Dumar's contract to feed the immigrants at Ellis Island was a very valuable one. On an investment of fifteen or twenty thousand dollars they did a business of about half a million dollars a year. The net profits were probably between fifty and one hundred thousand dollars a year. I do not pretend that these figures are official, but they will be found to be approximately correct.

When Frederic C. Howe took charge of the immigration station at Ellis Island he decided that public policy demanded that the task of feeding the immigrants should be performed by the Government, and he therefore recommended that the Government take charge of the work and refuse to renew the contract held by Hudgins & Dumar.

Mr. BENNET rose.

Mr. KEATING. I trust the gentleman will pardon me, but I can not yield, as I have very little time.

It was then that the gentleman from New York began his activities against Mr. Howe. The contract held by Hudgins & Dumar, and that alone, is at the bottom of all the attacks that the gentleman from New York has made on Mr. Howe.

The Secretary of Labor decided to support Mr. Howe in his contention that the Government should take charge of the work of feeding the immigrants, and plans were made to terminate the contract of Hudgins & Dumar. When the gentleman from New York learned of this he offered an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill, as follows:

> "Provided further, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be expended for the maintenance at any United States immigrant station of any of the privileges now disposed of after public competition, as provided by the act of February 20, 1907, entitled 'An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States.'"

This amendment rendered it impossible for Commissioner Howe and the Department of Labor to proceed with their plans. The incident led to some discussion in New York newspapers, and the gentleman from New York, because of his former connection with the firm of Hudgins & Dumar, was charged in the public prints with "practicing law" on the floor of the House.

In response to this attack the gentleman from New York introduced a resolution calling on the Department of Labor for certain information in relation to the conduct of Ellis Island, and in support of that resolution the gentleman from New York delivered his first attack on Mr. Howe.

The resolution introduced by the gentleman from New York was referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. The committee held a hearing. The gentleman from New York was present and had an opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses. Commissioner Howe was also there.

Among the other cases considered was that of this prostitute Giulietta La Marca.

In his first speech the gentleman from New York stated that Mr. Howe had had this prostitute released to himself and later transferred to a friend. In order that I may not do the gentleman from New York an injustice I will quote his exact language:

> As I was saying, he has recommended the admission of prostitutes on bond, and in one case, something unexampled, he recommended the admission of one of these prostitutes to himself, a woman named Giulietta, and had her transferred to the family of a friend as a servant. I do not believe that he is morally wrong in the sense that my remarks might indicate; I simply think that his governmental ideas are wrong, and, as he is said to have said, "What these people did with their bodies was their own business."

Now, what are the facts? Mr. Howe in his statement to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization—and remember, the gentleman from New York was present and in a position to cross-examine Mr. Howe—referred to the case of Giulietta La Marca, and told the story of her release as follows:

I want to take up the thing that concerns me as a citizen first; that is, the case of Giulietta La Marca, referred to by Mr. BENNET and said to have been committed to the custody of a friend. That is not true. I want to read my official letter bearing upon that woman. It was stated that I urged her admission. Here is the letter to the bureau:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, IMMIGRATION SERVICE,
OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER OF IMMIGRATION,
Ellis Island, New York Harbor, N. Y., February 14, 1916.

COMMISSIONER GENERAL OF IMMIGRATION,
Washington, D. C.:

This refers to bureau No. 53986/43, in the case of Giulietta (or Giuletta) La Marca, who has been detained at this station since May 28, 1915, awaiting deportation. The St. Raphael Society for Italian Immigrants has offered to take the woman and find her a good position where she can earn an honest living if released into their custody. As the alien is unable to furnish a bond, and there is no likelihood of her being able to return to her native country in the near future, I request authority to release her upon her own recognizance

FREDERIC C. HOWE, Commissioner.

That woman, either through the St. Raphael Society or some other agency, got in touch with one of the physicians at the station, who offered to take her as a servant. She went there as a servant. She has been there ever since. She is earning $5 a week. She is cooking and washing for 13 people and reports regularly to the station, and the doctor reports also. So far as I know, she is deporting herself with the utmost propriety. She is sticking to the hardest domestic job that I have heard of for a long time at $5 a week.

The CHAIRMAN. The society recommended the doctor to you?

Mr. HOWE. I do not remember that fact. He is a physician at the station; a perfectly reputable physician. He is one of the Treasury Department's physicians; not ours.

Mr. SIEGEL. He is connected with the Public Health Service?

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir. This woman was at the station for months. Matron after matron came to me and recommended her admission. They said, "This woman has conducted herself with propriety. She has kept away from the men. She has a son in Italy, and she wants to make a little money in order to bring him over here." The matter came up three or four times, and finally she was admitted. She could not be deported because transportation was suspended to the Mediterranean.

It will be seen from Mr. Howe's statement that the St. Raphael Society, a religious organization which operates at Ellis Island, recommended this girl's release. The physician in the Public Health Service, and according to all the evidence in the hearing, a reputable gentleman, agreed to take this girl into his family and give her a chance to make good.

On the suggestion of the San Raphael Society, Mr. Howe recommended the release of this girl. She was taken into the home of this physician; she is there now, so far as this evidence shows, and she is making good. Her shame would never have been revealed if it had not been for the desire of the gentleman from New York to besmirch the good name of a great and pure-mined official.

Now, what has Commissioner Howe been doing while in office in addition to writing three books—and, by the way, he has not written three books since he has been commissioner of immigration, but that is a detail of small importance, and it is quite as reliable and accurate as most of the statements made by the gentleman? The Secretary of Labor reported to the Committee on Immigration that Mr. Howe, while writing these 3 books and these 16 magazine articles referred to by the gentleman from New York, had "made thorough investigation with experts as to the cost of the hospitals, which were alleged to be self-sustaining. The commissioner found that the hospitals were losing over $100,000 a year, which loss was being paid by the Government for the benefit of the steamship companies."

Are there any attorneys for steamship companies in the House?

These steamship companies had been saving $100,000 a year under previous administrations, and Mr. Howe discovered the loss and compelled them to come across and put up $100,000 a year.

I ask again, are there any attorneys for steamship companies or ex-attorneys for steamship companies directing criticism at Frederic C. Howe? I would be glad to be interrupted now.

Second, he reinvestigated requests for money for permanent appropriations and after the investigation reduced such requests in 1915 by $300,000.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman has indicated he is willing to be interrupted by request——

Mr. KEATING. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman tell the House in connection with this the reason Mr. Howe cut them down was because this Congress in 1913 for the first time passed a law permitting the Department of Labor to collect these amounts from the steamship companies?

Mr. KEATING. I am reading from the report of the Secretary of Labor. Mr. Howe is a subordinate official and the Secretary probably knows what his subordinate has been doing.

Mr. BENNET. Is it not true, I will ask the gentleman——

Mr. KEATING. I will have to decline to yield further, because my time is passing so rapidly.

I will place in the RECORD at this point the summary of Mr. Howe's achievements as commissioner of immigration at Ellis Island as prepared by the Secretary of Labor and submitted to the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. It is as follows:

(1) A thorough investigation with experts was made of the cost of the hospitals which were alleged to be self-sustaining. The commissioner found that the hospitals were losing over $100,000 a year, which loss was being paid by the Government for the benefit of the steamship companies. He secured an increase in hospital charges to steamship companies which has increased the earnings of the hospital by approximately $100,000;

(2) He reinvestigated requests for money for permanent appropriations and after investigation reduced such request, in 1915, by $300,000;

(3) He reduced, in response to war conditions, the operating salary costs of the Ellis Island station by approximately $100,000 a year;

(4) He investigated the many immigration lodging houses and homes in New York and brought about a clean-up in a number of them;

(5) He secured the cooperation of the commissioner of police to clean up the conditions which surrounded the barge office, and by so doing protected the incoming immigrants at New York from the individuals who had previously preyed upon them;

(6) He investigated and brought about many reforms in the protection of the aliens en route from Ellis Island, both at Jersey City and along the route;

(7) He organized all of the employees at the station into an association for making the wants of the employees known and for securing the cooperation of all the employees in the administration of the station;

(8) He brought about a reorganization of the purchasing of supplies for the hospitals at a great saving and improvement in the service;

(9) He made an investigation of the conditions under which landing of first and second cabin aliens were made at the various piers around New York, and ended many abuses and losses to which the aliens were exposed;

(10) He brought about a change in the inspection of first and second cabin aliens on shipboard which greatly improved the service;

(11) He made a number of studies, at the request of the department, as to means for increasing the efficiency and the rating of the employees;

(12) He greatly increased the output of the Divisions of Statistics and brought about a complete change in the filing system;

(13) He worked in cooperation with the board of education in New York for the opening of night schools for the education of adult aliens;

(14) He organized a number of agencies looking to the protection of aliens in New York;

(15) He organized a movement in 1916 for Americanization day celebrations throughout the country, and over 100 cities held citizenship celebrations as a result of the commissioner's efforts; and

(16) During the past two years Ellis Island has been almost free from the constant criticism on the part of foreign organizations and of the foreign press, which prior to his administration was continuous. It was directed at the alleged lack of kindness and consideration to incoming aliens. The nonforeign press of New York has been almost unanimous in its approval of his administration and the many changes and improvements which he has brought about.

I remain, very respectfully, yours,

W. B. WILSON,
Secretary of Labor.

HON. JOHN L. BURNETT,
Chairman Committee on Immigration and Naturalization,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

These are some of the things Mr. Howe was doing when the reporters mentioned by the gentleman from New York called at his office: Instead of being there to chat with reporters, he was out organizing "Americanization Day" celebrations so as to assist in making the alien an American; instead of being there to converse with the reporters he was out investigating conditions in the lodging houses of Jersey City, Hoboken, and New York; instead of conversing with the reporters he was investigating how he might reduce the cost of feeding the immigrants and how he might protect them from the harpies who preyed upon them when they landed on these shores. And that is the great duty that this administration wanted Frederick C. Howe to perform.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. How does the press of New York, that is investigating this matter, regard Mr. Howe?

Mr. KEATING. At the time the gentleman made his first attack on Mr. Howe I took occasion to read the papers, and the papers I read sustained Mr. Howe's side of the case. But it is not necessary to appeal to the press of New York. All that I ask on behalf of my friend, Frederic C. Howe, is that every Member of this House who is interested in this subject, or who has heard the gentleman's charges, will read Mr. Howe's statement, which I will place in the RECORD; will read the letter of Secretary Wilson, which I will place in the RECORD. I am willing to go to the jury on those two statements, because when the gentleman from New York had his day in court before the Committee on Immigration, when Mr. Howe was there in a forum where he could answer the gentleman from New York, and the gentleman from New York had the opportunity to propound questions, the gentleman was unable to make a dent in Mr. Howe's armor. The hearings will show that every charge was disposed of to the perfect satisfaction of fair-minded men.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD to the extent of inserting the letter of the Secretary of Labor and the statement of Commissioner Howe before the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SECRETARY OF LABOR WILSON'S STATEMENT.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, the letter of Secretary W. D. Wilson of the Department of Labor to the chairman of the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, in reference to the Howe case, is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, July 27, 1916.

SIR: In response to House resolution No. 317, introduced by Mr. Bennet July 21, 1916, and referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, requesting information bearing upon conditions at Ellis Island, I beg to inclose herewith the following, requested by such resolution:

(1) Copy of memorandum inclosed by the Solicitor of the Department of Labor in his letter to the Department of Justice under date of April 15, 1916.

(2) Copies of all letters of commendation or criticism of the food contractors at Ellis Island written by the commissioner at Ellis Island between July 1, 1915, and June 30, 1916.

(3) No written report was made by the night watchman in the cabin detention quarters to Frank McKee. A report was submitted, however, by the inspector in charge of the night force to Supt. Baker. The substance of the report was immediately transmitted to the bureau under date of July 10, 1916, with a request for the deportation of the woman alien involved, who came from Austria and could not be deported under existing orders of the department. Officials at the station could make no further investigation of the case because the alien man involved had been ordered landed temporarily by the department before the facts referred to came to the attention of the station.

(4) The regulations at Ellis Island bearing upon the freedom of action of the ordinary nonwarrant aliens were not in written form. In general, they provided for permitting families to be together during the day in the large detention rooms at one end of the building. They also permitted the aliens to go upon the porch and also to the playgrounds after it was opened by the commissioner. In detention rooms, on the playgrounds, and porch matrons and watchmen are always in attendance, while charwomen and other employees are constantly cleaning the place.

(5) Copy of orders of Commissioner Howe bearing upon the segregation of the immoral cases. The orders were issued after a conference with the assistant commissioner, superintendent, chief of detention division, and Matron Harris. These orders followed an investigation by the matron, which were ordered a few days before, upon her appointment. The orders requested her to report on anything she could find to criticize, and were of a confidential nature. I do not deem it to be for the good of the service to have this confidential communication published.

(6) Copies of all letters written by Commissioner Howe recommending the admission of warrant-case women, as well as recommendations by him as to women who have been taken from the liners by inspectors for hearings before the board of special inquiry, which cases came before the commissioner on appeal. Of the former I find there are but 9 and of the latter 12.

(7) Copy of official letter from Commissioner Howe recommending the admission of an alleged immoral woman, Giulietta, which letter, however, did not recommend her admission to "his custody" as alleged, but to the custody of the St. Raphael Society for Italian Immigrants. This alien was, however, paroled to a physician, where she has since been working as a domestic and has been regularly reporting to the station.

(8) I am informed that no general orders were issued bearing upon the use of the playgrounds and porch by the ordinary aliens. As to the immoral cases, their privileges are covered by the standing order referred to in item 5 above. Immoral cases are not permitted to mingle with other cases. There are strict rules bearing upon them made by the commissioner. They are segregated in so far as physical limitations of the station permit.

(9) It is impossible to satisfy the request asking for the number of official communications from Ellis Island which bear the signature of the commissioner and other officials. A quarter of a million aliens enter Ellis Island each year. It is the great office of naturalization. The correspondence of the station is colossal. Only a part of it is on file at this office.

Inasmuch as this resolution bears upon the alleged immoral conditions at Ellis Island and the admission to this country of certain persons charged with immorality, it seems proper to me that the difficulties imposed upon the commissioner at Ellis Island, the improvements he has made in the service, as well as the problems the Department of Labor has had to face should also be laid before your body, for these conditions have been a matter of departmental concern and frequent conference and investigation.

I also desire to call attention to my own interpretation of the kind of service which should be rendered incoming aliens at immigration stations, and the directions to officials that these stations are "not intended to be penalizing." The reference to this matter appears in my annual report of 1913 and is as follows:

"For a satisfactory administration of the immigration laws the character and condition of immigrant stations at ports of entry are of prime importance. So far, therefore, as the Department of Labor is permitted by law and equipped for the purpose it aims to make these stations as much like temporary homes as possible. While regulation and exclusion, and therefore detention, are necessary in respect of immigration, it should be understood by all who participate in administering these laws that they are not intended to be penalizing. It is with no unfriendliness to aliens that immigrants are detained and some of them excluded, but solely for the protection of our people and our own institutions. Indifference, then, to the physical or mental comfort of these wards of ours from other lands should not be tolerated. Accordingly every reasonable effort is made by the department, within the limits of the appropriations, to minimize all the necessary hardships of their detention and to abolish all that are not necessary.

"The war upset the administration of Ellis Island. The station was designed as a rapid clearing house for peace conditions, the detained cases being deported within a few days after their arrival at the station. All of the internal construction of the station was planned to meet such conditions. There are no individual cells at the station, only a series of large dormitories scattered over a very great area and located on different floors and in different parts of the building. A long corridor, possibly 200 feet long, contains smaller dormitories which were designed to be used by first and second cabin passengers who were detained; other rooms designed for the temporary detention of men cases held under warrant for various offenses and other rooms for women offenders held under similar conditions. Thus, we have been compelled to hold in the same corridor first-cabin aliens, who may be detained merely because of sickness or some other question involving their right to land, as well as offenders of every shade of offense who have been brought to this port. This includes men and women who have been picked out of the passengers on board of the liners because of suspicion from anonymous or other communications or other reason for thinking that possibly they may fall within the excluded classes.

"Hundreds of aliens were at the station when the war broke out. They came from Russia, Poland, Austria-Hungary, Germany, and the whole of central Europe, to which countries they could no longer be deported. Ships in transit increased this number. Excludable aliens were being brought to Ellis Island by inland immigration officials because of lack of detention quarters at other stations, to be held at Ellis Island for deportation. For months the accumulation was permitted to grow in the hope of an early termination of the war. Incoming ships were adding to the congestion, while warrant cases were being thrown upon the station because of the responsibility of the Federal Government to care for such cases. The station was confronted with the necessity of carrying on its current business, and, in addition, there was thrown upon it the burden of being a detention camp for those who could not be deported, who represented every shade of suspected or convicted persons.

"Only two alternatives were presented to the department, either to permit warrant cases to accumulate, and, by so doing, contaminate the innocent persons detained because of sickness, poverty, or some other cause, or to relieve the situation by the admission of such cases as could be landed with reasonable propriety and safety to the country. For the only accommodations for immoral cases is in a corridor designed by Congress for offenders as well as perfectly innocent first and second cabin passengers.

"After some months, a policy of selection was decided upon. An investigation of the record in each case was held. On several occasions representatives of the department at Washington went to New York and examined numbers of excluded cases. Specially selected boards made studies of individual cases. Rarely was anyone admitted until they had been at the station a sufficient length of time to permit of the matrons, representatives of religious and other societies to gain an impression of them, or to find an institution, society, or private person who would be willing to assume the responsibility of accepting the alien under their employment.

"In this work of finding homes the Young Men's Christian Association and religious societies cooperated.

"From an examination of the records, only nine warrant cases have been admitted bearing the personal indorsement of Commissioner Howe.

"In addition to the so-called warrant or arrest cases, there are appeal cases. The appeal cases relate to persons seeking admission to the country who are temporarily held for examination by the inspector and are then examined by the board of special inquiry, and finally take an appeal to the Secretary of Labor. These persons, it should be remembered, are first, second, and third cabin passengers. They are held on various kinds of evidence, such as their general appearance, unsatisfactory, inconclusive statements as to the persons to whom they are going, communications received concerning them, or matters which develop at the trial. The great majority of these cases do not look any different from other aliens; they usually deny their guilt, and very great delicacy has to be exercised by the department before it stamps a woman as a prostitute or places her in the dormitory in which the prostitutes are held. A single mistake of this kind would not only be a disgrace to the detained alien, it would be a serious wrong for the department to commit. Only 12 communications recommending admission of appeal cases of this class have been found in the files.

"As to the alleged immorality at the station among the detained cases, probably 300,000 persons have slept at Ellis Island during the past two years, the average detention being probably 400 a day. The men sleep in one dormitory in one part of the building and the women and children sleep in another, there being no provision for individual accommodations. There has not been reported to us, and Commissioner Howe reports that no case has been reported to him, of any irregularity among the aliens who are temporarily detained in this way in the large dormitories.

"There have, however, been several cases of immorality reported by detained immoral men and women who offered to disclose specific facts, provided some privilege, such as admission to the country, or the payment of transportation to some other country than that from which the alien came, was granted by the Government. Each of these cases has been investigated officially. One alleged instance related to a male prostitute slipping into an unlocked room when the watchman on the corridor had temporarily left his post, and another case reported by an immoral alien involved a watchman whose name he did not divulge. There have been a few other cases of a similar sort, all of which have arisen within the past few months. They have all been investigated and acted on, in so far as action was possible.

"I am advised by the commissioner that the following are and have always been the regulations for preventing such occurrences: Immoral men and women are locked in their rooms at night. The aliens are counted into their room before the doors are locked. There are watchmen and matrons on duty at all times. The cabins for these aliens are on a separate floor from the great mass of the aliens and no possible means of communication exists.

"During the day the warrant cases are for the most part kept in their rooms, the women being segregated in one room and the men in another. The rooms can be locked only on the outside by officials. They are always liable to be opened. At the end of the corridor, and with a clear view of it, a watchman is stationed, while all day long watchmen, matrons, officials of the station, and representatives of the religious and philanthropic societies, of which there are 70 at the island, are going and coming in these corridors. Usually a matron sits in the room with the women warrant cases. During the day the men warrant cases are permitted to be at one end of the porch, with a barrier dividing them from other aliens.

"Immorality under these conditions can only occur under accidental circumstances, when all of the precautions provided fail to the ground at the same time.

As stated before, there are between 60 and 70 representatives of agencies at Ellis Island to look after the moral and physical welfare of the aliens. They include the Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., and the various Protestant and Catholic denominations. They are among them all the time, hearing their stories, ascertaining their needs. Friends and relatives of aliens come to the island daily. The commissioner has placed complaint boxes about the detention quarters, into which communications can be placed. Notwithstanding these facts, up to the present time none of the representatives of religious organizations has reported any immorality at the island, and no suggestions of the same have reached officials through the complaint boxes, nor have any of the thousands of friends of aliens complained. There is no difficulty in reaching the commissioner, as his office is known to be open to any employee, no matter how humble, to any society or representative, or to anyone else at the island who desires to call upon him, as many of these representatives constantly do.

The situation, as stated before, is an extremely difficult one. The station is not built for complete segregation, short of locking suspected persons in their rooms day and night without employment of any kind to relieve their minds. The alternative of locking immoral women in their rooms some months ago resulted in their smashing down the doors opening into the corridor. A similar outbreak occurred on Sunday last. The following freedom has been given the alien prostitutes: Immoral women are segregated at the table. They eat by themselves. On the north side of the building an immense open porch has been built, probably 300 feet long and 150 feet wide, onto which the aliens go from the day detention quarters. Upon this porch there are watchmen and matrons. The immoral women have been permitted to go onto this open porch, to sit on the benches, but the orders are that they shall not mingle with the other aliens. They are ordered to remain on the westerly end, as is indicated by the standing orders attached. Similar orders require the men to remain at the eastern end of the porch. All of the aliens are permitted to go to a large open lawn in the mornings and afternoons, under the supervision of watchmen and matrons. Here, too, they are under constant supervision. The standing orders relative to the freedom allowed and the supervision to be exercised were issued after a conference between the commissioner, assistant commissioner, superintendent, chief of the detention quarters, and the matron in charge, and are attached herewith.

Separate and apart from the quarters of detained immoral cases are three large day detention rooms, two of which are set aside for women with children and one for men. In view of the fact that whole families have been detained at Ellis Island for weeks and months at a time, and a large number of persons have been detained for nearly two years, the old rules which provided for the complete separation of families and men and women have been modified by Commissioner Howe, although husbands and wives sleep in separate dormitories. In each of these day detention rooms there is a corps of scrubwomen and matrons at work all of the time keeping the place clean.

Ellis Island, as stated before, was not built for this kind of a strain brought about by the hundreds of persons detained there. Along with the maintenance of a great inclosed hotel for an average of from 400 to 600 persons, precautions had to be taken to keep the immoral cases away from the others with the most limited facilities for doing so. The aliens have nothing to do, and the Government has no authority to provide employment for them. They sit day in and day out awaiting for the war to end, under circumstances which in prison have been universally recognized as conducive to insanity.

To meet these conditions, the commissioner has done a number of things. Among these are the opening of playgrounds to which the aliens go during the day. Concerts have been arranged for every Sunday for nearly two years. These concerts are given by various foreign and other societies, including the churches, schools, and public organizations. During the week motion pictures are shown in the main detention rooms. Calisthentics were introduced among the men by the Y. M. C. A. Religious societies organized classes in sewing for the women. The commissioner secured the cooperation of the board of education to open a classroom for the detained children which was continued until the board of education was compelled to abandon it. A big indoor children's playroom was opened. During the Christmas holidays, entertainments were given for nearly two weeks in the evenings. Swings, games of all kinds, victrolas, and other means of recreation have been secured by the commissioner for various organizations. The Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. have detailed men and women to aid in relieving the tedium of the long detention, while hundreds of organizations have cooperated in the endeavor to relieve conditions imposed upon the station by the war.

As to the final request in the resolution for a statement of the number of official communications received from the commissioner during the year bearing his name, I beg to say that between 80 and 90 per cent of the immigration of the country passes through Ellis Island. The correspondence is colossal. The appeal cases alone run into the thousands, while tens of thousands of applicants for naturalization, with endless other correspondence on every variety of the station's activities form part of the routine work of the station. Our records show that the appeals are duplicates largely signed by the commissioner; that all letters bearing on matters of policy bear his signature, as do contracts, many pay-roll vouchers, recommendations relative to the personnel and the general conduct of the station. Merely to sign all the communications from Ellis Island would occupy more than one man's time.

As bearing upon the above intimation of neglect, I beg to say, however, that the following substantial achievements in the efficient administration of the station have been effected by Commissioner Howe:

(1) A thorough investigation with experts was made of the cost of the hospitals which were alleged to be self-sustaining. The commissioner found that the hospitals were losing over $100,000 a year, which loss was being paid by the Government for the benefit of the steamship companies. He secured an increase in hospital charges to steamship companies which has increased the earnings of the hospitals by approximately $100,000;

(2) He reinvestigated requests for money for permanent appropriations and after investigation reduced such request, in 1915, by $300,000;

(3) He reduced, in response to war conditions, the operating salary costs of the Ellis Island station by approximately $100,000 a year;

(4) He investigated the many immigration lodging houses and homes in New York and brought about a clean-up in a number of them;

(5) He secured the cooperation of the commissioner of police to clean up the conditions which surrounded the barge office, and by so doing protected the incoming immigrants at New York from the individuals who had previously preyed upon them;

(6) He investigated and brought about many reforms in the protection of the aliens en route from Ellis Island, both at Jersey City and along the route;

(7) He organized all of the employees at the station into an association for making the wants of the employees known and for securing the cooperation of all the employees in the administration of the station;

(8) He brought about a reorganization of the purchasing of supplies for the hospitals at a great saving and improvement in the service;

(9) He made an investigation of the conditions under which landing of first and second cabin aliens were made at the various piers around New York, and ended many abuses and losses to which the aliens were exposed;

(10) He brought about a change in the inspection of first and second cabin aliens on shipboard which greatly improved the service;

(11) He made a number of studies at the request of the department as to means for increasing the efficiency and the rating of the employees;

(12) He greatly increased the output of the Division of Statistics and brought about a complete change in the filing system;

(13) He worked in cooperation with the board of education in New York for the opening of night schools for the education of adult aliens;

(14) He organized a number of agencies looking to the protection of aliens in New York;

(15) He organized a movement in 1916 for Americanization day celebrations throughout the country, and over 100 cities held citizenship celebrations as a result of the commissioner's efforts;

(16) During the past two years Ellis Island has been almost free from the constant criticism on the part of foreign organizations and of the foreign press, which, prior to his administration, was continuous. It was directed at the alleged lack of kindness and consideration to incoming aliens. The nonforeign press of New York has been almost unanimous in its approval of his administration and the many changes and improvements which he has brought about.

I remain, very respectfully, yours,

W. B. WILSON, Secretary of Labor.

Hon. JOHN L. BURNETT,
Chairman Committee on Immigration and Naturalization,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

COMMISSIONER HOWE'S STATEMENT.

Mr. Speaker, Commissioner Howe's statement before the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, in answer to the charges of the gentleman from New York, was as follows:

Mr. HOWE. I want to take up the thing that concerns me as a citizen first; that is the case of Giuletta La Marca, referred to by Mr. BENNET, and said to have been committed to the custody of a friend. That is not true. I want to read my official letter bearing upon that woman. It was stated that I urged her admission. Here is the letter to the bureau:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, IMMIGRATION SERVICE,
OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF IMMIGRATION,
Ellis Island, New York Harbor, N. Y., February 14, 1916.

COMMISSIONER GENERAL OF IMMIGRATION,
Washington, D. C.:

This refers to bureau No. 53986/43, in the case of Giulietta (or Giuletta) La Marca, who has been detained at this station since May 28, 1915, awaiting deportation. The St. Raphael Society for Italian Immigrants has offered to take the woman and find her a good position where she can earn an honest living if released into their custody. As the alien is unable to furnish a bond and there is no likelihood of her being able to return to her native country in the near future, I request authority to release her upon her own recognizance.

FREDERIC C. HOWE, Commissioner.

That woman, either through the St. Raphael Society or some other agency, got in touch with one of the physicians at the station, who offered to take her as a servant. She went there as a servant. She has been there ever since. She is earning $5 a week. She is cooking and washing for 13 people, and reports regularly to the station, and the doctor reports also. So far as I know, she is deporting herself with the utmost propriety. She is sticking to the hardest domestic job that I have heard of for a long time, at $5 a week.

The CHAIRMAN. That society recommended the doctor to you?

Mr. HOWE. I do not remember that fact. He is a physician at the station, a perfectly reputable physician. He is one of the Treasury Department's physicians; not ours.

Mr. SIEGEL. He is connected with the Public Health Service?

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir. This woman was at the station for months. Matron after matron came to me and recommended her admission. They said, "This woman has conducted herself with propriety. She has kept away from the men. She has a son in Italy, and she wants to make a little money in order to bring him over here." The matter came up three or four times, and finally she was admitted. She could not be deported, because transportation was suspended to the Mediterranean.

Second. Along the same line, it was urged that I encouraged the admission of a large number of warrant cases. I have no power to admit anyone. The department has made an investigation, and I find that in two years' time I have recommended the admission of nine out of I do not know how many cases—warrant cases—in every case through a society, through an organization, or through some one who was responsible for it. Almost all the aliens who have been admitted there were admitted after a long conference; the representatives of the Department of Labor came over there, and they held court; they brought the aliens in and they took testimony and relieved the congestion in that way.

Mr. SLAYDEN. They have authority to do that under the law?

Mr. HOWE. They are the only persons who have authority; I have not any authority.

Mr. SLAYDEN. You have authority to recommend?

Mr. HOWE. That is all. In two years' time there were only nine cases of the class whom I can find to have been recommended by me for admission. After they are admitted they are inspected just as periodically as possible. We send out persons, and, so far as I know, they are all making good; they are all working and have not gone back to prostitution.

Mr. RAKER. You recommended the admission of nine?

Mr. HOWE. In I do not know how many cases.

Mr. RAKER. Were those nine admitted?

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAKER. And they are making good, so far as you know?
Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir
The CHAIRMAN. They report to you frequently?
Mr. HOWE. Some of them, I know, report to me or to the station, or they are inspected by special inspectors whom we have out there all the time, covering the territory as well as we can. Of course, with our limited force we can not keep watch of them all the time.
Mr. SLAYDEN. You keep up with them?
Mr. HOWE. We keep up with them as well as we can. The alternative was of permitting I don't know how many of these people who had accumulated there to create the evil conditions complained of. We were between the devil and the deep blue sea, with all of these warrant persons in detention there and having all these other ordinary aliens with us. We tried putting many of them in homes like the Florence Crittenden homes, and we found other homes for them; but there is no home that they have gone into that I did not know about personally, and we have declined to permit them to go to some homes. I never recommended the admission of a single alien to my own custody, except one—or, rather, there were four of them. I was going around the station one day, and I saw sitting on a bench a big Irish woman who was 60 or 65 years of age. She was as big as any two of us. She had with her three beautiful children, who were sitting alongside her. I said to the woman, "Are you a visitor here, waiting to see some one?" She said, "No, sir; I am held here."

I said, "Is there anything I can do for you?" She said, "I am held here as one likely to become a public charge." I said that that did not seem to be likely to me, and I told her I wished she would come down to the office to see me.

She came down to the office with her three little children, one 7 years old, one 9 years old, and the other 13 years old. She said that her husband had been shot to pieces in Flanders; that one of her sons had been killed in South Africa; and that another son had disappeared in South Africa. They had a farm down there, but everything living had been taken from it by the British Government. She had come to this country to join a married sister in North Carolina, but when she got there her sister's husband refused to receive her. Then she was sent back as a person likely to become a public charge. I wrote to the department and said she ought to be admitted, because I did not think there was any likelihood of a big, strong woman like that becoming a public charge. She said that she would receive a pension on account of the injury to her husband in London, but she could not go back to London or South Africa because there was nothing there for her to do. I appended a note to the letter, stating that the children had won me so much and that I liked them so much that, if nothing else could be done with them, I would adopt them. The department wrote back that the woman and the three children were admitted in the custody of the commissioner. I carried them up to my own home and wanted to adopt two of the children. I got a cottage for them and I expected to get a job for the woman as a nurse. They were on my hands for five months and cost me $200 before I could find employment for them. I finally sent them down to a farm in West Virginia, where they obtained work. That is the only case where any alien has ever been admitted in the commissioner's custody.

The CHAIRMAN. That includes the four—the woman and her three children?

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir; they were the most beautiful children you ever saw. They were round, rosy, laughing children, climbing all over you in a minute. It almost broke my heart to send them away. I would adopt them in a minute if I had some place to send them.

Now, I want to come to the last thing discussed in this resolution—that is, about the attention I give to my official duties and the efficiency with which I have run that station, and in this connection I want to open with the statement that the immigration law says that it is the duty of the commissioner to protect the immigrants from fraud and loss. That is an obligation upon him just as much as any other obligation, but it is an obligation that, so far as I know, no other commissioner ever took very seriously. It is a thing that I have taken as seriously as I have taken anything else, and it has occupied as much of my time as anything else. The first thing I did when I went there was to communicate with the representatives of many of the most prominent philanthropic organizations in New York. For instance, I conferred with such men as Oscar Straus and with such women as Mrs. Lillian D. Wald.

I conferred with people and organizations all over New York, Jews and gentiles alike, and we mapped out a program for the protection of the immigrants. That program of protection ran into all sorts of places, both weak and powerful. I found that the second-cabin aliens were being dumped over in Hoboken and in Brooklyn and all along the water front of New York. I recommended to the department that the second-cabin aliens be brought to Ellis Island for protection from loss. The department had hearings on the matter at Ellis Island, and it seems to me that all of Hoboken came in there. The city officials, representatives of the chamber of commerce, etc., came to the hearings. They said that Hoboken lived off of the immigrants. They said, "They give us $500,000 a year." The hotels and expressmen were represented at the hearings, and the board of trade and merchants' association sent representatives. There were representatives from the hotel companies, from the express companies, and the railroad companies. They filled a great room like this. That room was filled with people protesting against the loss of the rake-off that they were getting in one way or another from the immigrants. It cost from $5 to $10 or $15 for an alien to land at Hoboken and then come over to New York, then drop back to the barge office, and then go west. It meant a loss of two days, possibly, and I do not know how many people preyed on him unnecessarily. Now, he might have come directly to Ellis Island and gone west from there. There was probably three-quarters of a million dollars involved in it.

I ordered an investigation of places around New York, for proper things or improper things, and I found that many men were preying on the aliens. I had the police department send around the best men that could be obtained in those investigations. We found that the railroad situation in Jersey City was not right. We found that the railroad pool there routed the aliens; we found that they sent them, say, over the Baltimore & Ohio and Chesapeake & Ohio to Chicago. It took them 50 hours to go to Chicago. Then they were packed in cars with inadequate toilet facilities, the men and women being bunched in together. We found that they were likely to be killed by the score in going over the tracks at Jersey City. We cleaned up that situation as well as we could with our limited powers.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you move the Hoboken station?

Mr. HOWE. No, sir; there was no Hoboken station at the time. They were fighting for one when the war was over.

Then I began an investigation of conditions surrounding the alien at Ellis Island. As soon as admitted the alien goes down to a place to get his money changed, and you can see the aliens lined up for 100 feet waiting to get their money changed by private money changers, Richards & Co. have that concession. Now, I do not say that they were dishonest, because I do not mean anything of that kind, but they have their clerks there doing the work. Now, the money that the alien gets he gets from a private individual—the clerk of a private person—who has every opportunity in the world to short change the alien. The alien wants to get a 20-franc piece exchanged and the man may give him $4 or he may not. The next man may have a piece of Greek money to be exchanged, and the next may be Russian or German. The alien only wants to get out. He does not know what the rate of exchange is, and he takes what is given to him.

Then he has to pass by the telegraph offices. The telegraph offices are there to make money, and they have men out urging the aliens to come in and telegraph to their friends. We have men there trying to stop any abuse, but we do not know what they do. Then they go over to the railroad office, and finally come to the food concessionaire, who sells cartons of food. It may be proper to sell them at the price at which they are sold, but it is to the interest of the private concessionaire to sell as many as he can for as much as he can. He has a man out trying to encourage them to buy. My protest is not as to the dishonesty of any man because I do not know about that. There is somebody trying to get money out of the alien all the time, and he wants to get through. He is eager to get out, and he has learned abroad that the only way to get out is to buy something all along the line. I say that that is a bad system—a rotten bad system—and the United States Government ought not to have private concessionaires at the threshold of this country for that purpose. I am sure that if the Government furnished the food it would do it as well as in the case of the hospital. I am sure that the hospital supplies are bought right down to the bone. We buy $40,000 worth a year——

Mr. BENNET. What proportion of the food for the hospitals is supplied by Rhodes & Brand?

Mr. HOWE. I do not know of any. We have competition for that every three months.

Mr. BENNET. They are the contractors, are they not?

Mr. HOWE. I do not know. I do know of one change that would take place if we ran the concessions there, and that is we would pay more wages. We would provide for $2 per day. We would provide that no wages less than $2 per day should be paid there.

Mr. SLAYDEN. To anyone?

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir; to anyone.

Mr. SLAYDEN. What do they pay now?

Mr. HOWE. As low as $6 per week.

Now, I want to come to the thing that affects me officially; that is, as to whether I have been an efficient commissioner, or whether I have been a good business administrator. I do not think that is the primary thing, but that is the point of view that many people take. I assumed that my obligation to the Government there was just the same as would be my obligation to a private person, and I tried to effect all the economies I could, to make that station just as serviceable as I could, and to cut down any expense I could. They came to me and said that the hospital was earning money and that it made a profit last year. I said, "We will find out about that." I had experts to go through all of the hospital records to find out whether they were making a profit or not. I did not believe that they were, and when these experts got through we found that they were losing $120,000 a year, although the department's instructions are that the charges to the steamship companies should be enough to make the hospital self-supporting. In other words, the steamboat companies were receiving outdoor relief to the extent of $120,000 a year from the Government. We eliminated from the cost the payments to the doctors, who were in the Public Health Service, and we only put in the cost of the food, the cost of the nurses, the depreciation on the buildings, and the cost of lights, water, and heat, and we increased the earnings of the hospital $100,000 a year by increasing the charges to the steamship companies. The steamship companies beefed and bellowed about it, and they have been beefing and bellowing about it ever since, but it is not my conception of my official duty to permit them, who are responsible for the bringing of improper aliens to this country, to enjoy that kind of privileges furnished by the United States Government without paying for it.

Then, when the order came from the department two years ago that economy was to be urged, I took up all of our requests for appropriations and went over them very carefully. I cut out something like $300,000 for permanent improvements. I am partially responsible for the fact that we have not made application for first-cabin accommodations, because I voluntarily reduced the requests that had been pending for years, believing that when the Secretary of Labor made that request he meant it. We cut out $300,000, and those things have never been requested from that day until this, although all of them could be defended.

Then later, when the Secretary said to me that it was urgent in order to meet the demands of Congress to make a reduction in our expenses, I took that mandate also seriously, and I cut them down with the cooperation of the department. We did that by transferring employees and finding other jobs for them, and by means of furloughs, and other ways. We cut the labor cost at Ellis Island $100,000. We cut down the clerical force alone $30,000, and then we lost a number of our watchmen. We lost a lot of men who went to the border on the call for troops, and as soon as the watchmen were gone, or simultaneously with their going, these troubles arose.

Now, there is another thing that I take a real, genuine, and hearty pride in. When I went to Ellis Island it was organized on the basis of what some people would say was the best kind of discipline. I called all of the employees into my office by groups, and I said to them, "My office is open every day from 11 o'clock to 1 o'clock for you to make any suggestions on any question and to give me any information on anything you want to bring before me. If there is anything you want to bring to the attention of the commissioner you bring it here to me; do not bring it up through the chief of your division, and if there is anything you want to see me about come to me." That rule has been in effect ever since. I found that every employee at the station there was in a hierarchy, composed of the commissioner, the assistant commissioner, and the chiefs of divisions. I said to the men, "You go out and organize yourselves into what we will call a union; let the matrons organize, let the inspectors organize, let the stenographers and engineers and every one of you organize. You get together and talk over the welfare of this station, and talk over anything that we can do to better it, and if you have any plan for improving it, bring that up through a committee. If you want a raise in salary, get your own associates to agree on it before you bring it to me."

Then we created another group to hear appeals, so that nothing would come to me of a frivolous nature. That had the effect of putting them on their mettle; they were put upon their honor, and they never took advantage of it. I got 98 suggestions. They ran all the way from the big things down to the little things. There was a suggestion by one humble employee by which an economy of $40,000 would have been effected in one division alone. Now, that is my idea of efficiency. It is the way to call out the full working capacity of any man, no matter how humble he may be. I like it, and it has been successful. Now, some men at the top do not like that, because it has diminished the power of their positions. Some men do not like to have other men have access to me, but I do like it. I am sure it has protected me, because it has given me 500 sources of information that a man who looks to only one or two men in the force would not have.

Then, I put complaint boxes all over the station, and I did that for the same reason. Those are complaint boxes into which anybody can put a complaint at any time, or a suggestion at any time. They may come from aliens, inspectors, or from visitors, and that is the way I keep in touch with the aliens and with the visitors who come over there. Very often they make valuable suggestions to me.

Mr. SIEGEL. The signs on the complaint boxes are in English. Has it occurred to you that they might be put into different languages?

Mr. HOWE. That may be, but the complaints come in every language now.

Mr. SIEGEL. They have other signs around there in different languages, but not these particular ones.

The CHAIRMAN. They know they are complaint boxes, whether they can read the signs on them or not?

Mr. SIEGEL. Some of them do, but some of them do not. They read in all kinds of languages.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Don't you suppose that the news as to what they are gets about among all of them?

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir. Now, I want to explain something else: Our statistical division employs 60 men, and I went into that division and studied it. I shook it up. I said to them, "You hate to be appointed into this division, and you call it the morgue. Now, let us see if we can not improve this division." I took it up, and in six months' time we had nearly doubled the per capita output of work in that division, and had cut down the operating cost. They were copying cards and doing that sort of work.

I took hold of the filing system in the same way, and appointed experts to make a study of the best filing systems in New York. We cleaned up the filing system, and I put the best man I could get at the head of it. As soon as I get a division like that cleaned up and reporting regularly I forget it, or take it as a purely routine matter. I went through the station division by division in the same way, making them efficient from my point of view.

Now, the war broke out on me just as I was appointed, and the war is responsible for this trouble that Mr. BENNET talks about. On the very day I went there, almost, the war broke out, and we had 400 or 500 aliens; and I am not sure but there were 800 aliens when I went there. They could not be deported to Russia, Austria, Hungary, Poland, Germany, or Belgium. At the same time they were coming in from the interior, from stations that had no places or facilities for taking care of warrant cases or the crooked cases. We have at the present time 90 people who have been there since the war broke out—men, women, and children.

I used to go through the detention rooms day after day, and I would see these little children sitting on benches with their parents. They were getting anemic and going to pieces. The only exercise they had was in walking to and from the dining room. At the end of a couple of months I said, "I can not keep these children there any longer; you have got to get them out and put them on the grass." Some of the people said, "You can not put them on the grass out there, because we have been working for three years to get the grass growing." They have had trouble with it because they have not had any too much soil. I said, "I am more concerned over dead children than I am over dead grass; put them out and see what happens." They turned them all out in front of my window and I watched them. They lay down on the grass like animals; they rolled over and over; they hugged the grass; they kissed the grass; and tears rolled down their cheeks. They were peasants, and that was the first time they had had access to the land for months. Then I opened up the playground as a permanent institution, and gave them their freedom.

The appetites of the children came back. And this is an interesting psychological fact. Prior to giving them freedom these aliens sawed their way through those heavy bars, as thick as your finger; they tore them down; they crawled out and got down by the use of suspenders, and so on, and leaped into the river; they leaped into the icy river in order to swim to the Jersey shore. They were so obsessed; they had nothing to do; there was nothing to do there, and you know what happens in prisons when people have nothing to do. People go insane. I gave them this freedom outside and permitted them to walk around. I got a lot of things for the children to play with. We organized classes; we organized sewing classes for the women; we put in a schoolroom for the detained children, there being no provision for such a thing there for the children. I got a Y. W. C. A. woman to take charge of it, because I had no money with which to do such a thing. With the exception of two German deserters, there is not a soul who has attempted to escape since they were given freedom.

What applied to that in that way applied also to these immoral cases. We locked them up, as they had committed some wrong. Those rooms had 10 to 12 beds in them, the rooms in which the prostitutes are kept. We keep as close a watch on them as we possibly can. There is almost always a matron in there looking after them. As we had no other place to put them, we had to do it in that way. Last Saturday we locked them up, and on Sunday morning we had a rough house. Two aliens attacked a guard and beat him up pretty badly. Men and women were raising Cain going through the corridors. It was all we could do to keep them from causing any damage. Now, we are up against that situation, with 400, sometimes 600, and sometimes 800 aliens over there, some of them kept there for months and months at a stretch.

The CHAIRMAN. How many warrant cases have you?

Mr. HOWE. At the present time 6 women and 16 men. The number will go up and down; sometimes we will have a large number there. Mr. BENNET says that at one time we had 100, and if we had 100 we had every available space occupied. I do not want 100 warrant cases there very long. At this moment, with those men locked in a room, as they are at the present time, and with the women locked up, you may expect anything to happen. I expect them to assault a guard who is unprotected. I should not be surprised that anything might be the result of the present policy.

Now, we had the alternative of locking them up or the other alternative of what has been called permitting them to mingle, which they did not really do. I defend my policy. I defend my policy and say that there is far more safety at Ellis Island in letting these people out on a big open porch, which is 300 feet long and 150 feet wide, with a watchman at this end and a watchman at that end and matrons going along all the time, and having the people where we could see them, than there was in locking them in their rooms. The same is true of the lawns.

Now, we have rules, which were adopted after an inspection made by Matron Harris, who was appointed last spring. I want to say that for the first 15 months I was there I had no head matron. The department could not give me any money so that I could employ a head matron. All I had was a lot of matrons there and a lot of scrub women there, with nobody over them. I think there ought to be a deputy woman commissioner at Ellis Island, and I said so before Mrs. Harris was appointed. I told her to make an investigation of anything she could find. She came back and made a report. Two days afterwards I called a conference of Mr. Uhl, Mr. Baker, Mr. McKee, superintendent of the deporting division, and Mrs. Harris, and we framed up these rules, which are the rules Mr. BENNET requests:

APRIL 15, 1916.

MEMORANDUM AS TO RULES GOVERNING WARRANT CASES.

1. The detained warrant men will be instructed to keep to their rooms or the men's day detention room; not to traverse the corridors except by way of the men's detention room to meals, and not otherwise; and not to enter the laundry or other rooms where women are detained.

They will be permitted on that part of the balcony to the east of the benches, and will be instructed that if they violate this rule and pass this line and mingle with the women the privilege of using the porch will be taken away from them.

Now, let me describe conditions there. Here are all the accommodations we have for warrant cases at Ellis Island [indicating on sketch]; here are all of the accommodations that we have for first-cabin aliens, who are just as clean as we are [indicating]; here are all of the accommodations that we have for second-cabin aliens [indicating]. Now, these are the ample, generous, and palatial accommodations that Congress has given us to take care of all the worst cases and the best cases as well [indicating]. There is a little laundry over there [indicating]. And that is a pathetic room. About three months ago I opened a laundry. These people had not many clothes, many of them having only the clothes they had on their backs. They would not send them to the laundries because they would mangle them, and so I opened this little laundry down here [indicating]; I put in washtubs and ironing boards, and the next day it was filled with these women aliens, who had nothing to do and who had not had a change of underwear for a long time. They went to their trunks there and pulled out a lot of things and washed them; then they came out with cleaner clothes, and it is the most popular place on the island, and that did more to improve their morals than a lot of other things might do.

They had no place in which to read or write, and so I fitted up this room [indicating] as a reading room and rest room. So the women are kept over there all day long. Now, there are almost as many children as there are women; maybe not as many as that, but there are many of them and they are of all ages. They are all around making noises and they are sometimes sick. They had no place to go except out here on the porch.

Mr. RAKER. You say children?

Mr. HOWE. Yes. In order to take care of the children I wanted to go out and buy a farm and take some of them on it. When I found the department could not do that, I was going to do it myself, but I found that if I did I might be indicted for making a profit out of the aliens. So I had to give it up. These little children were in there with their mothers, romping all around, and raising Cain all the time. Many of you gentlemen have families and you know what happens to your peace of mind when children are romping around all the time and raising Cain generally. They would get sick or their mothers would get sick. Now, we got them out on the porch and I opened up that rest room in there where the sick mothers could go, and that is the only place they could go except some little place in here [indicating], where there are a few beds; otherwise the children are compelled to lie on hard board floors.

Now, in the old days the women were there and the men were kept over there [indicating]. Three times a day the men come through here, walked out through here, and the women walked out through here [indicating], and they ate together. I let the husbands and wives be together all day long, and they met in this room over here [indicating]; they sat there and talked; they chat and they walk up and down the porch together. That left us a room for the first and second cabin passengers and four warrant rooms.

Now, here is the way we try to protect from immorality. It has not been perfect; it has not been completely successful, because we have had these cases for many months that have to be deported. We investigate them and we report our investigations to the department. Within 24 hours after a complaint of that kind comes it is a matter of record, if we get any knowledge at all. I think we get everything that happens through our system and through the talk and gossip that naturally takes place. It is all a matter of record right down here. Then, let me tell you that the only people who gossip or report on cases of immorality are prostitutes, pimps, and procurers, and nobody else, that I know of. And they often tell things for the purpose of making a deal. There was one man who offered to tell some things if we would send him to South America instead of sending him back to Austria, but we could not bribe him in that way. I want to say that whenever these reports come to us we investigate them up to the point where proof is almost impossible.

Mr. SIEGEL. As I understand it, this man Fair, who has been referred to, has been trying for about two weeks to bargain with the department so that he would be sent to Brazil instead of to Germany. He stated he would make certain confessions provided such a bargain was made with him.

Mr. HOWE. Yes. Here is the arrangement we have to protect these warrant cases. A watchman stays there [indicating] all day long; there is a corridor which goes up there, and there is a corridor which goes across there [indicating], and there is a corridor coming down there [indicating]. There is the men's detention room, and here is the women's [indicating]. There is a man there all the time on duty; those are the orders, and I have never been there when there was not one there.

The CHAIRMAN. Day and night?

Mr. HOWE. Well, I have never slept at the station at night, but the orders are to patrol that corridor at night; yes, sir. Now, there are no bolts on the inside of the doors; they all lock on the outside. At night these warrant men are locked in, and the keys are carried by the man on duty at night. In the daytime the doors are generally open. This is where we keep a matron [indicating], and nine times out of ten when I have been through there a matron has been there. Then, again, scrub women are scrubbing there all the time, because it is a dirty place. These people spit on the floor, and it is necessary to keep cleaning the floor all the time. There are matrons going back and forth, and there are workmen going back and forth all the time.

I give it all as much attention is I can, because the aliens interest me. I have met as many interesting people on Ellis Island as I have met anywhere. Then we have representatives of societies at Ellis Island. We have agents of the Y. W. C. A.; we have agents of the Presbyterian Church, the Lutheran Church, and the Catholic Church. I think there are 70 such institutions represented there. They are at the island all the time, and I am sure the ministers would see some of this immorality and bring it to my attention if it existed to any great degree. But, as I say, everything is done to prevent it. I think it is better to have these people outside than to have them locked in rooms all the time. I think there is less likelihood of immorality on the street than there is in a cellarway. I have adopted it as a policy that the more I can get them out the easier it will be to watch them; it will be easier to have somebody watch them while they are out on the lawn than it would be if they were locked in these rooms or compelled to remain in these rooms, where it might be possible for somebody to sneak in. Of course, that is a matter of judgment, but it is my judgment that that is the better plan, and it has worked pretty well and did work pretty well up to the time we were stripped of our employees who had to go to the war, when we could not watch them as carefully as we did before. Mr. Bennet, is it not true that every one of these stories has arisen within the last six weeks; I mean stories of immorality?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Every one that I have heard of has arisen within the last six weeks, and I guess I got them all.

Mr. DENSMORE. When you refer to your employees going to the war you mean that they went to the Mexican border?

Mr. HOWE. Yes. They called out our men, and we lost a number of them.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Would it annoy you if I would ask you a question merely for the expression of an opinion?

Mr. HOWE. Not at all.

Mr. SLAYDEN. We have been immensely interested in your statement. In your judgment, what percentage of the people who are detained at Ellis Island are downright immoral people? For instance, that woman and her three children, while they were detained, were not immoral.

Mr. HOWE. Of course not——

Mr. SLAYDEN (interposing). I say that that woman was clearly not immoral. Now, what percentage of the people there, in your judgment, might be accounted as decidedly immoral people, such as pimps, procurers, prostitutes, and others of that kind?

Mr. HOWE. It probably ranges from 20 to 50 out of from 400 to 600. It may be 5 per cent, or it may rise to 10 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course those who are not detained upon that ground are supposed to be all right?

Mr. HOWE. Of course we know how many warrant cases there are.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is a comparatively small number?

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir. Mr. Bennet, have you ever heard of any immorality among the ordinary detained aliens? Have you ever heard of a case of immorality among the ordinary run of aliens down there, outside of the detained warrant cases?

Mr. BENNET. I can not say that I have—not in your time.

Mr. HOWE. Possibly you would not include those Chinamen among nonwarrant cases?

Mr. BENNET. No, sir; I would include them, in view of your statement—I think I would not call them warrant cases. They were not detained there for any immorality, but simply because they were Chinamen.

The CHAIRMAN. There was no warrant for them, and they were not warrant cases?

Mr. HOWE. No, sir. Within two years' time 300,000 people have slept at Ellis Island since I have been the commissioner. They have slept in those dormitories upstairs. Husbands are separated from their wives. The husbands have not slept with their wives all the time they have been there. As I was saying, while 300,000 people have slept there during the last two years, there had not been any suggestion of any immorality there.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no place where husbands and wives can sleep together?

Mr. HOWE. They do not.

The CHAIRMAN. You have kept them together in the daytime?

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir. The trouble there is largely due to the fact that these people have been detained there for a long time. Ellis Island is not built like a prison, and we are not prison keepers. We have no means of punishment. They have to be either watched in those rooms or kept outside.

Mr. RAKER. Is not another great trouble due to the fact, not that you have no place to punish them but that you have nothing for them to do?

Mr. HOWE. That is true.

Mr. RAKER. I want you to elaborate somewhat on the question of punishment and the question of having something for them to do.

Mr. SIEGEL. On the other hand, you would not have any authority to put them to work?

Mr. HOWE. No, sir.

Mr. DENSMORE. In connection with whatever immorality that has been even alleged over there, if it has been committed, it has been committed upon one single prostitute who is absolutely incorrigible. From what Mrs. Harris told me, she is subnormal or abnormal. She is positively a degenerate. I refer to Ella Lebewetz. There is no difficulty with even the other prostitutes, except possibly Anna Bell.

Mr. HOWE. I want to complete the regulations we adopted governing the warrant cases.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I move that Mr. Howe be permitted to get through with his statement without interruption

Mr. HOWE. Here are the orders adopted after that conference:

"1. The detained warrent men will be instructed to keep to their rooms or the men's day detention room; not to traverse the corridors except by way of the men's detention room to meals, and not otherwise; and not to enter the laundry or other rooms where women are detained. They will be permitted on that part of the balcony to the east of the benches, and will be instructed that if they violate this rule and pass this line and mingle with the women, the privilege of using the porch will be taken away from them.

"2. The same instructions will be given to the warrant women, who are to be moved to room 212. They are permitted on the west side of the balcony, with instructions not to cross to the east end or to mingle with the men.

"3. The doors of the corridors are to be kept closed."

They are to be kept closed so that they can only be opened by the officials.

"4. There is to be no loitering in the corridors. This rule applies not only to warrant cases but to all aliens detained here. Watchmen and matrons are instructed to send both men and women out of all the corridors into the day detention rooms, except when they are passing through the corridors for meals or some other business.

"5. The warrant cases will be advised that continuance of the privileges they are receiving depends upon their good behavior, and these privileges will be taken away from them if they are guilty of any improprieties.

"6. Warrant men and warrant women are not to sit together at the tables.

"FREDERIC C. HOWE, Commissioner."

That is signed by the commissioner, and it is dated April 6, 1916. Previous to that these questions had been handled piecemeal under rules substantially like those I have read, although I think there were some abuses there that are covered in these rules that are not like the general instructions we gave to the matrons and watchmen. They had standing rules to see that the prostitutes did not go with the other people and to see that they stayed by themselves on the playground; to see that they walked together on the porch; and to see that they did not converse with the men. Two cases were reported to me by matrons. A matron came down one day and said: "Mr. Howe, there are familiarities going on on the porch by that prostitute who was brought over this morning. I watched her and saw her slap a man on the back and walk along the porch with him. I went to her and said, 'See here, you ought not to be familiar with the men like that; you have only been here since this morning and have not been introduced to anybody.'" I said, "What d'd she say?" The matron said, "She said, 'If you had been in a Florence Crittendon Home for eight months and had not seen a man in all that time, I think probably you would put your hands on a man, too, if you saw one.'"

We tried to watch it as well as we could. Now, I have talked longer than I intended to, but I simply wanted to show that I am perfectly open and frank about this matter.

Mr. DENSMORE. Mr. Howe, did you make it clear that the instructions that you have just read with regard to the warrant cases were made after Mrs. Harris had made to you her report that this resolution calls for?

Mr. HOWE. I did. They were delivered to the assistant commissioner and they were delivered to Mr. Baker, who was the superintendent; they were given to Mr. McKee, who is at the head of the detention division, and also to Mrs. Harris. Mrs. Harris has the power to enforce any rule just the same as I have, and Mr. McKee has the same power, but they are inadequately supplied with help. We are inadequately supplied with men, and we are trying to run a prison in an immigration station, and can not do it. I did not invite that when I was appointed commissioner. I did not expect to be the keeper of a prison.

The CHAIRMAN. There was some question raised about absenteeism.

Mr. HOWE. Yes; and I would like to answer that, too. Mr. Chairman, I get to the office all the way from half past 8 in the morning until 10 o'clock, depending upon the train connection that I make, or, rather, the ferry connection. If I do not catch the 9 o'clock ferry, I come in at 10 o'clock. As a matter of fact, I usually have a launch that brings me over at approximately half past 9 o'clock. I think I work with more rapidity than almost anybody else, and I usually catch the 5 o'clock train to the country, which means that I leave the station a little bit before the others do. They leave at 4.40 o'clock, while I leave at a quarter past 4. On many days I leave before that when I clean up all the work and there is nothing more to do. When the work is cleaned up and there is nothing further to be done, I leave. When I became commissioner I said that I would make it a rule to trust the men as far as I found I could trust them, and as soon as I found I could trust officials, I trusted them. I insist, however, that everything that relates to administrative policy shall be decided by me, and I decide everything that relates to personnel. I pass upon—I can not tell you the percentage of appeals—but I pass upon all the appeals when I am there, and upon the pay rolls and vouchers, and all administrative policies. I also sign all contracts. I have been devoting a large part of my time to the work of protecting the aliens from fraud and loss, to the question of bad conditions, and to the question of making economies in the expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not that so much, as I understand it, but the charge relates to absenteeism from the island.

Mr. HOWE. I can answer that, I think. Probably there has not been any two weeks in this year, and certainly not any three weeks, that I have not been called to Washington. Ellis Island does from 80 per cent to 90 per cent of the work of the entire Immigration Service, and I am here often anywhere from one to three days. So far as I can recollect, I have been away on my own personal matters only twice—I have been away possibly six times. Then, in addition to that I was away from the station to make, I suppose, 20 speeches—generally bunching them—on the subject of immigration. I have done that intentionally and consciously, because I was trying to interest the people of the United States in the question of immigration. In addition to that, I started, by correspondence and otherwise, 100 cities to having citizenship receptions on the Fourth of July. That was a year ago. I have spoken in St. Louis, to chambers of commerce in North Dakota, in Milwaukee, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, and, I think, in Providence and Syracuse, on the immigration policy, which is a policy that would educate the immigrants after we got them and which would protect them. I have given a great deal of time to that and considered it as a part of my duty as immigration commissioner, because I felt that the duty of the Government did not end when a man was admitted to this country; that there was some obligation on the part of the Government to see that he was not imposed upon after he got here.

The CHAIRMAN. Has that taken up any unusual amount of your time?

Mr. HOWE. No.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in connection with the statement of Mr. Howe, which has just been inserted in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend——

Mr. BENNET. Or in the alternative, if there is opportunity before the close of the session, that I may have six minutes, confined simply to that statement of Mr. Howe.

Mr. KEATING. Reserving the right to object, all that I want under the circumstances is simply an opportunity to comment upon what the gentleman may say. I have no desire to restrict the gentleman's activities at all.

Mr. BENNET. Then I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Colorado may also have six minutes to comment on what I say after I am through.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] asks unanimous consent that he may extend his remarks in the RECORD——

Mr. BENNET. This request was made at the conclusion of the gentleman's remarks, and he already has the consent.

Mr. KEATING. This will take the place of unanimous consent to insert matter in the RECORD.

Mr. BENNET. If I do not get a chance to speak, I will insert the matter in the RECORD.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman's request is that he have six minutes, and that I take six minutes at the conclusion of these other speeches.

Mr. BENNET. My request is that I have the alternative, if I can be reached at this session, of having six minutes to comment on Mr. Howe's statement, and if I can not be reached that I have the right to extend my remarks in the RECORD in relation to Mr. Howe's statement, which the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] has put in the RECORD, and if I do speak six minutes that the gentleman from Colorado may also speak six minutes after I am through.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that he and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] be allowed six minutes each to comment on the statements made by Mr. Howe, or, if that is not possible, that the gentleman from New York may have unanimous consent to extend his remark in the RECORD in order to comment on the statement of Mr. Howe. Is there objection?

Mr. KEATING. Reserving the right to object, I feel that this discussion should close unless Mr. Howe is given the same opportunity for a statement, through his friends on this floor, that the gentleman from New York desires.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, on the 17th of July I offered a resolution for investigation of the whole matter. If the House Committee on Rules will report that out, not only will Mr. Howe, but everybody else, have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas I would not do that.

Mr. WINGO. The gentlemen have already taken up about 15 minutes in talk. I am willing to have the gentlemen use six minutes apiece, but there is no use of bandying words across the aisle.

Mr. BENNET. I make the request, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. KEATING. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GODWIN] is recognized for 60 minutes.

IS THE PRESENT UNEQUALED AMERICAN PROSPERITY TEMPORARY.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, in the midst of the greatest war of all time, a war in which 15 nations are already engaged, with 30,000,000 men on the firing line and 14,000,000 men already killed, wounded, and missing, with an expenditure of over $55,000,000,000 and countless billions of dollars' worth of property destroyed; in the midst of this great war, which is shaking the very foundations of European society, bringing devastation, poverty, ruin, and despair to a great civilization, the American Commonwealth, sir, is at peace with the world and all mankind and is enjoying a period of prosperity unequaled before in the annals of any country.

Sir, this gives our friends, the enemy, on that side of the aisle no little concern. In fact, it has much perturbed the spirit of their dreams. Many have been the efforts sought to be made to account for this widespread and unequaled prosperity. Among other speeches made upon this floor was one made a few weeks ago by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG], always engaging, often plausible, sometimes convincing, in an effort on his part to resurrect his party from political insolvency and bankruptcy. Strange and extraordinary indeed, Mr. Speaker, was a part of the speech of the gentleman from Illinois. In giving an account of the causes that brought about the overthrow of that party, let me read to you the queer and novel statement made by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG]:

> But, strange and anomalous as it may seem, it was this very unprecedented and unparalleled prosperity that was responsible for the overthrow of the Republican supremacy and for the installation of the Democratic administration. The American people are in some respects a peculiar people. They are always restless, and they are never entirely satisfied. They are constantly looking for something new, and when they have found it they are willing to experiment with it simply because it is new. Especially is this true when everything is moving along smoothly and there are no signs of impending disaster in the skies.

Mr. Speaker, the Republican Party has indeed been very ingenious in drilling into the minds of the people of the country, controlling as it has done and as it still does largely the great press of the country, the theory that the Democratic Party and hard times go hand in hand, and that the Republican Party and prosperity are concomitant, coeval, and coterminous. Sir, the distinguished gentleman never once referred to the great panic in 1907, when all the coordinate branches of the Government were absolutely and unqualifiedly within the control of the Republican Party. He does not refer to that greatest of all modern scandals, the absorption of the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. by its only great rival, the United States Steel Corporation, by an executive order of the then President of the United States, Theodore Roosevelt, and does not recall that other scandal, sir, in connection with that great panic, when the news spread all over the country that a great financier in the city of New York, Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, had thrown himself into the breach and proclaimed to the world that he was the world's benefactor in that behalf [applause on the Democratic side], when he said that he would stop the panic and go to the rescue of the failing banks—which did not stop the panic—and by loaning his own funds and those which he controlled in the various banks, $25,000,000; but, later on, sir, when an investigation was held it was then and there learned that the $25,000,000 did not come from his coffers, but that it was the people's money, deposited in the great banking institutions of Wall Street, loaned not to the small bankers of the country to meet local emergencies but loaned upon the stock exchange, in the gambling pit, upon the curb, upon call loans, not at a small rate per cent, not at 4 or 5 or 10 per cent, but at the exorbitant rate of interest as high as 125 per cent upon call loans.

Why, Mr. Speaker, if the so-called "good times" of those days—a misnomer in fact and in name—were the cause of the downfall, the death, the despair, the hell and damnation of the Republican Party [applause on the Democratic side], then, sir, indeed every red-blooded, patriotic American citizen to-day may well tremble in his boots lest our Republic be overthrown and destroyed when he realizes the unequaled prosperity now overflowing the country, under the auspices of the Democratic Party, guided by a Democratic President. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But here we listen to much said about "efficiency" and the "lack of efficiency" now in our governmental institutions. It has been the policy of the Republican Party to say that it is the only one qualified to administer the affairs of government. I remember in the great coal strike a few years ago, Mr. George F. Baer, the president of the Reading Railroad and of the Reading Coal & Iron Co., owner of extensive anthracite coal fields in Pennsylvania, said that the good Lord had vouchsafed these vast fields of coal to him, and to his friends, as "trustees for the American people"—a partnership, if you please, between the Lord and those who sit in high financial places.

Sir, there is efficiency, there should be efficiency, in government, but there should not only be efficiency but there should likewise be honesty in the conduct of affairs of administration. Does anyone suppose for one moment, Mr. Speaker, that a parallel could now take place under Woodrow Wilson's administration in the absorption by a great trust of its only rival by violating the Sherman antitrust law, as was done in the absorption of the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. by the United States Steel Corporation with the permission of Theodore Roosevelt? Does anyone, Mr. Speaker, for one moment think an iniquity like the spending of the Government's money by J. Pierpont Morgan upon call loans as high as 125 per cent could take place with William Gibbs McAdoo as Secretary of the Treasury? Nobody has challenged the honesty of this administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But the Republicans say they are the only ones who are efficient. Let me call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to something else that they would like to remain forever a closed book. A few years ago—and I guess it is well within the memory of most of us—there had been conducted in the customhouse of New York a system of highway robbery which redounded to the behoof and to the interest of the great Sugar Trust and sugar importers of this country.

Throughout part of the administration of Mr. Roosevelt, while Mr. W. H. Moody was Attorney General, all throughout the administration of Charles J. Bonaparte as Attorney General, and partially through the administration of William Howard Taft, when Mr. Wickersham was Attorney General, efforts had been made for years and years by George H. Earle, jr., to induce the Attorney General and his staff to investigate those awful sugar frauds. These letters were afterwards published in a Senate document, letter after letter showing the unqualified proof. Neither Mr. Roosevelt, Mr. Moody, Mr. Bonaparte, Mr. Taft, nor Mr. Wickersham took action until public opinion was so thoroughly aroused that they were forced and compelled to take action, and when action was taken what happened? The Sugar Trust and the importers of sugar came across and compromised with Uncle Sam by paying into the coffers of the Federal Treasury, as I now recall, $3,600,000 as an evidence of their graft and of their misdeeds.

What else in that connection? I want to read a letter written by Mr. Wickersham to Henry A. Wise, district attorney of New York, dated Washington, D. C., June 27, 1909:

[From the Cleveland Plain Dealer, August, 1909.]

WASHINGTON, Sunday, June 27, 1909.

MY DEAR WISE: Senator Root has sent me the proof of a petition signed by Bowers, Milburn & Guthrie in support of their contention that the statute of limitations has run in favor of Messrs. Parsons, Kissel & Harned. If the only overt acts done to carry out the objects of the unlawful conspiracy were those referred to in the brief, I should think they were insufficient to save the bar of the statute.

A strong effort will be made to-morrow to persuade the President to interfere in some way to prevent the indictments, but aside from that no indictments should be returned against anyone if there is no reasonable ground to believe they can be sustained. If, for instance, the offenses charged are clearly barred by the statute. I need hardly say this to you.

What I want to impress upon you is that, if you have any reasonable doubt in the matter, you either have the grand jury or ask the court for instructions, or, if that is not feasible, that you advise the department of the specific charges on which you rely to save the statute before actually having the indictments brought in. You may telephone either to me, or to Mr. Ellis if I should be out of the department, when you call on this point.

GEORGE W. WICKERSHAM.

P. S.—As I am writing from my house and have no copy of this, will you kindly have your typewriter make and send me a copy?

Now, Mr. Speaker, that letter was written some five or six years after these sugar frauds had been known all that time to other Attorneys General, including Mr. Wickersham, and to two Republican Presidents of the United States. When Mr. Earle, the receiver of a defunct real estate company up there, familiar with all those proceedings, had begged and importuned the department to take action in the premises, we have the spectacle of a Senator of the United States, a great lawyer, writing to the Attorney General in the way indicated in that letter. I will not charge that he was the attorney for the Sugar Trust or for those who committed the sugar fraud, but at that time Elihu Root wore the toga as a Senator from the great Empire State of New York, and hurriedly, on Sunday evening, he wrote a letter to the then Attorney General, George W. Wickersham, and upon that as a predicate and a basis, this letter which I have just read to the House was penned at the home of the Attorney General in this city to the then district attorney at New York, Henry A. Wise. When this letter and additional evidence came before the people, so strong and potential became the wrath and sense of outrage of the people of this country, that proceedings were brought, and the compromise which I have referred to followed by the payment into the Federal Treasury of the amount as I recall named by me.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not contend that all of the virtue is in the ranks of the Democracy or all the turpitude and baseness in the Republican Party. Men are corrupt regardless of party affiliations; but that which I do want to emphasize is this: While distinguished gentlemen upon that side of the aisle claim to have a monopoly of efficiency, we want and we have coupled with efficiency, honesty and integrity in administering the affairs of government. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I here now, Mr. Speaker, charge, and I ask our good Republican friends on that side of the aisle to now rise in their places, and I will pause for an answer at any time throughout this address, for any challenge of the fact that for many years past there has been an alliance, a distinct and a most unqualified alliance subsisting between the great, big business, privilege-seeking interests of this country upon one side and the great Republican Party upon the other side; that in exchange for heavy campaign contributions levied upon the coffers of those for whom special legislation had been enacted, to carry the elections at the polls, that party, sir, not unmindful, not ungrateful to their benefactors, put upon the statute books in return certain laws, in order that the contributors might extract from the bounty and the substance of the people the donations and the contributions made for Republican success at the polls. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I here now challenge, and I invite successful contradiction of the charge and allegation, that the Standard Oil Co. for many years has been a most liberal benefactor and contributor to the Republican Party; and that it has contributed lavishly to its campaigns.

I here now charge, while speaking upon the question of integrity and honesty in the discharge of the functions of government, that in 1904 the great Standard Oil Co. contributed $125,000 to bring success to the Republican Party in that year in its campaign. I furthermore charge that that was done with the knowledge, by the connivance and with the consent of Theodore Roosevelt and George B. Cortelyou, a member of his Cabinet, who had been promoted to the chairmanship of the Republican national committee. And I furthermore here and now charge, and I challenge successful contradiction, that an additional $150,000 was demanded of the same Standard Oil Co. in that campaign, urgently insisted upon by Theodore Roosevelt, by George B. Cortelyou and others who stood in high places. Does any gentleman upon that side of the aisle deny or challenge that charge? If so, I will give him time now to interrupt me. You do not deny it, do you, Mr. FESS?

Mr. FESS. Oh, I have not the facts.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. No; but I have the facts, and that is the beauty of our contention. The facts have been put in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. Speaker, four years ago—I believe it was on the 21st of August, 1912—when the great kilkenny cat fight was on between the regulars, the "Old Guard," the standpat Republicans, and the Progressives, when the Progressive Party, through Theodore Roosevelt and others of its adherents, had called the "Old Guard," the standpat Republicans, porch climbers, thieves, thugs, highwaymen, robbers—and I have heard no good Democrat or Progressive deny those charges to this day, and when the "Old Guard" said that Theodore Roosevelt was a mountebank and a buffoon, and since then I have heard no standpat Republican deny that charge—on that 21st day of August, 1912, I chanced into the United States Senate, and there I heard and saw the distinguished senior Senator from the Keystone State, BOIES PENROSE, arise in his place and expose and wash the dirty linen of his party and the good Progressive friends who now have lined up with him ostensibly. In that speech he said the same things that I have charged here against campaign contributions for that year, that Theodore Roosevelt knew of the $125,000 campaign contribution made by the Standard Oil Co. in that campaign; that in addition to that Roosevelt sought another $150,000 to be contributed by the Standard Oil Co. to the Republican campaign fund.

Furthermore, he said that William J. Flynn, who in that year had suddenly been converted to the Progressive cause, had offered him and a man by the name of Durham, from Pennsylvania, $1,000,000, or even $2,000,000, if the late governor, Samuel W. Pennypacker, who only a few days ago passed off the stage of life—if those two gentlemen would be responsible for the governor appointing him, Flynn, successor to the late Matthew Stanley Quay as United States Senator for Pennsylvania.

One million or even as high as two million dollars was the sum, was the gratuity, was the consideration. Ah, Mr. Speaker, I do not know what a senatorship is worth to gentlemen from the great State of Pennsylvania or of the neighboring States to Pennsylvania, but if they can give $2,000,000 for a temporary appointment by the governor, what might be given for a full senatorship?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I have just come in, and I have observed that the gentleman from Arkansas is making an attack on my State and naming a Senator of the United States. I do not want to make a point of order, but the gentleman is wholly without the rules in using the name of a Senator, and for the present I shall ask the gentleman where he got all this remarkable information about the governor of Pennsylvania whose body was laid away in its grave day before yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas can not refer to a Senator of the United States by name.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I am referring only to what is in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. It makes no difference about the RECORD, the rule is that the gentleman can not do it.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I am not making any reflection, Mr. Speaker, on the late governor of Pennsylvania. I am simply giving some data that was furnished by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania as to certain propositions and transactions that took place in 1904.

The SPEAKER. The rule is that Members of the House can not refer to the Senate or a Senator.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I always do so, Mr. Speaker, with the greatest deference.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is not referring in complimentary terms to the senior Senator, and is naming him, and as he is not here I shall have to make the point of order against the use of his name in debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed and comply with the rule.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I need not call the Senator's name, but I will read the telegram from Mr. Flynn to John D. Archbold, which the senior Senator from Pennsylvania read while addressing the Senate, and if that disturbs the gentleman's equanimity he can go home and take a powder to make him sleep.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, what the gentleman says or does as to record matters I have nothing to do. If the matter to which he refers is a matter of record, he may proceed to use the record; but I hope the gentleman will confine himself to the rule, so far as personalities are concerned.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I am somewhat familiar with the rule, and all I have said is historical and in complimentary terms if one wants to consider it as such.

I will now read a telegram from William Flynn to John D. Archbold, of the Standard Oil Co.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think that a senatorial toga from Pennsylvania or from Arkansas is worth one or two million dollars?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I do not know what it is worth in the gentleman's State, but down our way we have not been offering quite that price. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has the gentleman's State been entirely free from criticism in times past in reference to political conditions around and about the State capitol?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, there have always been and always will be corruption in high places and in low places. But I was only making certain animadversions on some persons in the State of Pennsylvania standing high in Republican councils, and I insist that honor and integrity should be a cardinal principle as well as efficiency in government.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman include the State of Arkansas in his animadversions?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, the lack of efficiency is coupled with every criticism Republicans make of Woodrow Wilson's administration, and it seems to be the shibboleth of the Republican Party.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not true that several years ago a lieutenant governor in the State of Arkansas and several members of the legislature were tried for passing contracts out of which there was some graft taken for the benefit of themselves?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I will say that the gentleman is correct about there being certain indictments down there. I think there has been corruption, unfortunately, in many legislatures of the country, but I do not here allege corruption in the Arkansas Legislature; but, Mr. Speaker, that is far from the mark. I am only addressing myself to the contention that you gentlemen insist on efficiency and by your preachments you have never said anything about official honesty and official integrity.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman will concede, as colleague to colleague, that members of the Pennsylvania delegation do the best they can to uphold the honor of the State in this House, and they concede the same right to their colleagues.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I will agree to that, and I have some of my best friends among the Representatives from that State.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If we had time we could pick flaws in each other's State if we desired so to do.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I think so, but "art is long but time is fleeting," and I must proceed, as my time is limited.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I realize that, but a million dollars is a large sum of money.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. And two millions is twice as much, and a large amount to give for a temporary senatorial appointment.

Now, I will read the telegram sent from William Flynn to John D. Archbold as read into the Senate proceedings on the occasion I have referred to. It is as follows:

PITTSBURGH, PA., June 7, 1904.

I tried to talk to you over the phone last night, but could not hear you. I am making an effort to go to the United States Senate as M. S. Quay's successor. As it now stands the appointment will go to Allegheny County, and I expect to get it. The Republican organization of Allegheny County are desirous of my appointment and are working in. Also the Republican organization of the surrounding counties. The decision of the question is up to Senator BOIES PENROSE, State chairman, and Israel W. Durham. The efforts of a few of my influential friends put forth at once with PENROSE and Durham will settle the question. If you will use your influence with them in my behalf I will greatly appreciate it. The decision will probably be reached Wednesday. Can you help me?

WILLIAM FLYNN.

You see Mr. Flynn sent forth an S O S signal—something must be doing right soon. Now, read the answer to that telegram. It is dated June 7, 1904, and this is a classic, and I will ask gentlemen to listen to it very attentively:

Telegram received. Sorry that the Posy did not shout friskiness. I expect to jail pop sharply parsed fanning, and until flagon prefix it is lamented for me to have flood hatred reship.

[Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, that must be a cipher code, so to speak. I have heard it said—and I do not know how true it is—that these big fellows—I will not say any Member of this House or the other House knows the meaning of all of that code, but I have understood that they have practically a Webster's unabridged cipher-code dictionary, which they use in big business affairs. What does that telegram mean when translated according to the code? Here is the interpretation as made by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania in his speech:

Telegram received. Sorry that the phone did not work better. I expect to have talk with Senator PENROSE, and until after that it is impossible for me to have any definite view.

JOHN D. ARCHBOLD.

Mr. Speaker, I am only speaking now in reply to the charge made against the Democratic Party that it is inefficient in the Government's business. I maintain, as I am making every effort to show and will show later, that we have been not only efficient, but likewise that we have been honest in our dealings with the American people.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. I wish at this particular time that the gentleman would inject into his remarks the speech made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations last year in respect to Democratic economy.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Did the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations make any insinuations as to the political integrity of the Democratic Party?

Mr. MEEKER. But the gentleman has been talking about economic efficiency.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I am talking about economic efficiency, business efficiency in affairs of government, as contradistinguished somewhat from economies in savings.

Mr. MEEKER. The gentleman makes no charge against his party that it has been economic in its expenditures?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I say that it has been the most economic, efficient, business administration in a broad sense of any administration since the Civil War, and no Republican, however bitter in his partisanship, has ever questioned the honesty and integrity of a single official act of Woodrow Wilson's administration.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman means in a liberal sense. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman absolves the Democratic Party from any contact with corporations or big interests, as I understand him?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Oh, I make no absolution of any political party as to its whole history.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How does the gentleman account for the reception of the President two years ago of the 62 presidents of the railroad corporations and other large concerns, including the Standard Oil and the United States Steel interests, who desired certain things in the way of legislation?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Are the presidents of the railroads supporting Mr. Woodrow Wilson to-day? Are they not supporting Mr. Hughes?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They supported Mr. Wilson until very recently, up until the threatened railroad strike; and does the gentleman mean to say that the Standard Oil Co. is not sympathetic with the President to-day?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I am sure that the great industrial corporations are not supporting Mr. Wilson, nor is the Standard Oil, and no one knows it any better than the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman mean to say that the United States Steel Corporation is not in favor with the departments and the White House to-day?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Has the gentleman any proof that it is? The gentleman from Pennsylvania is an adept at making insinuations in debate that can not be supported by proof.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have seen the evidence of the appreciation by this administration of the assistance that has been given to it by the United States Steel Corporation.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Has the gentleman any evidence like a certain letter that Theodore Roosevelt, grateful and appreciative of things done for him by Wall Street and by the late Mr. Harriman, addressed to Mr. Harriman after his election in 1904, when he said—and I am not quoting the exact words—in effect:

MY DEAR HARRIMAN: You and I are practical men. I appreciate the $250,000 you went out on the curb of Wall Street and raised. I am deeply appreciative of that. Come down to the White House; come in at the back door, as it may be best for you not to be seen. I have just finished my message. Perhaps you would like to look it over before it is submitted to the Federal Congress.

Has the gentleman from Pennsylvania any proof, document, or evidence or any inferential proof that Mr. Wilson ever even winked in that direction?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have seen the list of contributors to the Wilson campaign in 1912, and they include representatives of the United States Steel Corporation, the Standard Oil Co., and all the big railroad interests of the country, and Mr. Schiff, of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., now operating large financial affairs, was one of those who contributed large sums of money.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. And are they supporting his administration to-day or contributing to the Democratic campaign fund? They are supporting your candidate for the Presidency.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think not.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. We know they are.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows full well that when Mr. Vanderlip, who is now operating large transactions in South America and Europe and a number of other gentlemen heading railroad corporations, appeared before the President of the United States two years ago and asked him to establish a war-risk insurance bureau, taking $5,000,000 of capital out of the Treasury of the United States, which any one of them could have furnished himself, the President when they recommended it came up here and forced the Democratic Party to grant it.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. And I will say that I know nothing about the correctness of Mr. Vanderlip's visiting the President, but I will say this—did not you oppose the war-risk insurance bill? And is not Mr. Vanderlip strongly supporting Mr. Hughes for President?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I surely did.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. And in doing so, you are absolutely consistent with your political record. In those days war-insurance rates were absolutely prohibitive and confiscatory and by coming to the rescue of the shipping interests, agricultural as well as manufactured products, we cut the rates down that had been so high on the high seas, and in doing so we put $2,000,000 of profit into the Federal Treasury. Otherwise over-sea commerce would have been paralyzed and it was practically paralyzed until a Democratic Congress had the Government of the United States take over the war-risk insurance, thus reviving commerce on the high seas, giving us the greatest foreign trade in the history of the country. You were standing by the insurance trust; we were standing by the people.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Who got that benefit? The Standard Oil Co. and the United States Steel Corporation in their transport business——

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Nothing of the kind. It was a benefit enjoyed by the shipper of grain, the shipper of wool, the shipper of steel, and of cotton—in short, for all American shippers alike.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It was the large corporations who got the entire benefit from it.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Oh, the gentleman knows he is mistaken.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The President came up here only last month——

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to decline to yield further, as my time is fast slipping by.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And asked——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I must decline to yield. Some people talk ad infinitum and some talk ad nauseam. [Laughter.]

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman referred to the very thing to which I wish to call attention, namely, that we had made $2,237,000 by the enactment of the war-risk bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And lost $700,000 the first crack out of the box when the Evelyn and——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Arkansas yield?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Not further. I will say, furthermore, Mr. Speaker, that neither the Standard Oil Co. nor the Steel Trust needed this insurance, because they are wealthy enough to carry their own insurance. They have their own vessels that plow the high seas.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I will not yield further.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to know whether the gentleman yields further or not. If he does not, the Chair will keep everybody out of his speech.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I think I had better proceed now, because I have only a few minutes left. Mr. Speaker, it has been said in this connection and repeated upon the other side that the great unrivaled and unprecedented prosperity is only temporary in this country. That has been one of the contentions of Charles Evans Hughes, the Republican candidate. Mr. Hughes said that we are indeed living in a "fool's paradise."

I am glad that the titular head and leader of the Republican Party is forced by these unexampled times, good times, fat times, to admit that we are in a paradise in this country, a land literally flowing with milk and honey, but he says it is a "fool's paradise," and having a paradise, Mr. Speaker, it is most lamentable, indeed, that this paradise can not be inhabited by wise men, but the foolish, who, like the poor, we always have them with us, especially during Republican ascendency, inhabit a part of the paradise that the balance of the country is rejoiced to live in. But are the good times due to the war? I want to be fair in this discussion. I want to be dispassionate in everything I say. I want to say that some of this prosperity—of course no man except he be a blind partisan would deny that—is, of course, due to the abnormal condition of the world. But let us analyze the figures. The wealth of this country when Mr. Taft left the Presidency was $187,000,000,000, less than four years ago, and to-day, Mr. Speaker, so tremendous have been these good times that the national wealth of this country is $228,000,000,000, an increase of $41,000,000,000. Dividing $41,000,000,000 of increase in national wealth by 100,000,000 American people and we have a per capita increase—you may not have it, I may not have it, all the people may not have it—but there is a per capita increase in wealth of every man, woman, and child of this country for the past three and a half years of $410. Never before has there been such an increase in the history of all the world. But they say this great increase in wealth may be ascribed entirely to the development and condition of our great export trade. But let us see in regard to our export trade. The average increase of exports over imports for the past four years before Woodrow Wilson assumed the reins of government was $550,000,000 per annum, or $1,110,000,000 for the years 1911 and 1912. Now, proceeding upon the theory that this increased prosperity is due absolutely to the war, we will see how the books stand. From 1914 to 1916, giving the fiscal years, our excess, not our total foreign trade, but, sir, our excess exports over imports, were $2,310,000,000, or $23.10 per capita. Twenty-three dollars and ten cents for every man, woman, and child! Now, that even is not fair, because all of these exports were not profits.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Not right now, please. All of these were not profits, Mr. Speaker. But counting, for the sake of argument, all of our excess exports as profits—and I suppose 15 or 20 per cent possibly would register the amount of profits—still we only have $23.10 as the result of the prosperity coming to the average man, woman, and child of this country on account of the war as against $410 per capita, the increase of wealth during the period to which I have referred. Subtract $23.10 from 410 and we have $386.90, if my figures be correct, as I am speaking entirely from my recollection of the figures. In other words, sir, the American people to-day for every man, woman, and child are nearly $400 more prosperous up to this time than they were when Mr. William Howard Taft quit the Presidency of the United States. Now, I will yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman has been making a very excellent speech. In referring to the prosperity of the country, in reference to the prosperity of the farmers, I would ask if the gentleman has read the last Republican platform of 1916, and did he know that no reference whatever was made to the farmers in the last Republican platform, and that the word "farmer" is not mentioned or referred to, nor is "agriculture" mentioned at all?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I understand that to be the case. I will say that I have not read the platform that closely, but my good friend from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] I know has, for he is certainly one of the fairest and most exact Members of this House, and he would not make that suggestion if he were not sure of his footing. But I will say in reply to my good friend from Oklahoma that it causes no surprise to me, because the great rank and file, the producers, the men who bare their backs to the hot sun, and with tanned cheeks and face feed and clothe the world, are seldom looked after in the legislative proceedings of that party, and it is quite possible that the Republicans were unmindful of that splendid class of people when their platform was enunciated at Chicago. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And what else, Mr. Speaker? Is the Republican Party the only hand that can stanch the commercial wound the European countries will seek to inflict upon American commerce when the war is over? They say they should come into power because they are a great constructive party. They have coupled our name with the word "destructive," because they say we are not constructive but destructive. Since when, sir, did the Republican Party ever think of expanding our commerce across the seas? Since when did they begin to have ambition to go out and conquer the world commercially and to have our ships floating upon all the seas and entering all the ports of the world with the products of our fields and factories? Why, sir, I well recall——

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman asks us to answer. He said, "When," and I will tell him. It was when Grover Cleveland abrogated the reciprocal trade relations with Central and South American Republics that our commerce ceased.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. That great Secretary of State, James G. Blaine, in 1890, under President Harrison, had a vision as to the great South American trade.

Mr. FOCHT. And he got it, too.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. And so did Mr. McKinley have a vision, as demonstrated by that great utterance of his just before the assassin's bullet felled him to an untimely grave. But what have you done in all that time, from Blaine in 1890, as Secretary of State, to Philander C. Knox in 1913, to extend American commerce abroad and to break the shackles that have fettered and bound the country to a domestic, to a provincial commercialism?

Mr. FOCHT. You ask the question, and I will answer. We were kept busy supplying our own home market under the protective tariff.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. We have not only done that, but we have sent our products and merchandise into the four corners of the earth.

Let me give you some figures. You talk about building up a merchant marine. Why, in July, 1912, under Taft's administration, there were only 131 ships, steel ships, then in the course of construction, with a tonnage of 271,313, but on the 1st of July, 1916, under the great forward-looking, world-wide progressive administration of Woodrow Wilson, we have 385 ships, with a total of 1,225,794 tons; or, in other words, Mr. Speaker, three years from the time Mr. Taft went out of office, there were under course of construction three times as many ships of commerce as were under construction when Taft left office—that is, American steel ships—there was more than five times the amount of tonnage under course of construction. That is what we have done within three years, manifestly more than your party would accomplish, if uninterrupted in the course of government control, in the course of a quarter of a century.

I am quoting the figures from a letter I received from the Department of Commerce on August 10, 1916. I will give the figures to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] for his investigation.

Mr. FOCHT. Now, my good friend, we will agree that you are building a great tonnage, but will you show the House the figures as to how the commerce with Central and South America has fallen off ever since Woodrow Wilson was elected President?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is quite mistaken. Our trade with South and Central America has not only not decreased since the Democratic Party came into power three and one-half years ago, but has increased wonderfully during the past three years, as shown by the following figures. This commerce, of course, shows a balance of trade against the United States and in favor of South and Central America, but this, I believe, has been the invariable rule under all administrations, Democratic or Republican, for the reason that we buy pretty much all our coffees, citrus fruits, and the like from these countries, and many hides and other raw material, which we manufacture into the finished product; and under the liberalized terms of the Underwood bill and the Federal reserve act we have given a stimulus to American industry not only at home but abroad.

There was a falling off of exports to South America for the first two years, but the gentleman should know that practically all European credits had been withdrawn, not only from South America but from other borrowing nations of European capital, for the reason that Europe was upon the brink of war and she was withdrawing and reservoiring in her banks all foreign loans as rapidly as they fell due for the purpose of prosecuting the war that she knew inevitably would follow. Therefore our neighbors to the south of us had no credit. Moratorium after moratorium was declared throughout 1913 and 1914. Debts could not be collected and practically all further credits had been withdrawn. Not only was South and Central America without credit, Mr. Speaker, and therefore unable to buy from us as much as had been their custom, but the country knows that when the European war came on over-sea commerce was largely at a standstill. Ships could not be had. War-risk insurance was prohibitive, so high were the rates, until the Treasury Department, through Democratic legislation, took over the war risks and made possible a renewal of American commerce for all American products. I here quote the figures of our Latin-American trade:

Foreign commerce of United States with Latin America, comparing last three years of Taft's administration with last three years of present administration.

Year ending June 30—	Imports from Latin America.	Exports to Latin America.	Total trade.
1910	$392,955,257	$242,123,502
1911	371,300,234	273,525,344
1912	423,037,208	296,141,651
Total	1,187,292,799	811,790,497	$1,999,083,296
1914	469,082,667	282,070,153
1915	557,413,053	251,469,431
1916	760,133,729	411,474,170
Total	1,786,628,449	945,013,754	2,731,642,203
Increase in Latin American trade under present administration			732,558,907

England, the mistress of the seas, is conducting her export trade, not in a reciprocal way by carrying commerce of her neighbors and the balance of the world, but her commerce has increased by confining her carrying trade largely to her own wares. England has ships, Germany has ships, all the warring nations have ships; but these ships, Mr. Speaker, are not to-day engaged in world trade save and except for the benefit of the nations themselves engaged in war. Is that satisfactory to my good friend from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FOCHT. If the gentleman will add the postscript that it is all due to the horrible war and the munitions that are sent there.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. In spite of the horrible war, I am endeavoring to show that this country is going forward by leaps and bounds commercially and enjoying a prosperity never before equaled in the history of this country.

But my friend from Pennsylvania insists, as do other Republicans, that our great volume of export trade as well as domestic prosperity is due to the European war. I submit herewith, Mr. Speaker, a group of imports and exports for the fiscal years 1914 and 1916, respectively:

Analysis of the foreign commerce of the United States for the nine months ending March, 1916, compared with the nine months ending March, 1914.

Groups.	Nine months ending March—
	1915	Percent of total.	1914	Percent of total.
EXPORTS—continued.
Manufactures for further use in manufacturing	$441,592,642	15.0	$280,656,211	15.1
Manufactured ready for consumption	1,324,344,607	44.9	545,746,785	29.4
Miscellaneous	82,805,505	2.8	5,219,435	.3
Total domestic exports	2,949,166,335	100.0	1,859,116,141	100.0
Foreign merchandise exported	48,006,037	.....	24,105,771	.....
Total exports	2,997,172,472	.....	1,883,221,915	.....

It will be noticed that our excess imports of 1916 over 1914 consist largely of crude and raw materials, and that our excess exports for 1916 over 1914 are over $1,000,000,000, and that only a small part of these exports consist of munitions. In fact, Mr. Speaker, our excess exports to the European warring nations exceed our usual exports to those countries only 3 per cent of our industrial production, and this excess is $1,350,000,000, whereas our total export business amounts to $4,300,000,000, and that is less than 10 per cent of our aggregate volume of production, which for the fiscal year 1916 was $45,000,000,000. Does the gentleman think this is temporary prosperity, or that this unequaled American business is due entirely to the European war? Do our Republican friends contend that our total manufactures for the fiscal year 1916, exceeding $30,000,000,000 as against $20,670,000,000, as shown by the 1910 census, or an increase of 45 per cent, is due entirely to the European war? Do gentlemen on that side of the aisle contend that the railroad earnings of 1916, the heaviest on record and which amount to from fifty to sixty million dollars per month, an increase of over 25 per cent as compared to 1912, can be ascribed to the European war and to temporary prosperity? Do our Republican friends seriously contend that the increase in farm products from $9,000,000,000 per annum under Mr. Taft to $10,000,000,000 per annum under Woodrow Wilson's administration, and but $7,000,000,000 during the Roosevelt administration, constitute temporary prosperity and due entirely to the European war? Or do they contend, Mr. Speaker, that the increase in bank deposits in the United States and the Hawaiian Islands from $8,015,511,000 in 1912 under Mr. Taft's administration, whereas the deposits in 1915 were $11,135,000,322, or an increase of over $3,000,000,000 in the national banks alone in this country, constitute temporary prosperity and that the Woodrow Wilson administration is a blight upon the hopes and happiness of the American people? Or, sir, do they contend that the total bank deposits of all banking institutions in this country, which amounted to $19,207,000,000 in 1912 under Taft, as compared with $24,208,000,000 under President Wilson, an increase of over $5,000,000,000, or an increase of over 26 per cent, constitute temporary prosperity and that this prosperity is due entirely to the European war? Or that our foreign commerce in 1913, amounting to $6,531,000,000, as against $4,278,000,000 in 1912, making an increase of $2,253,000,000, or over 52 per cent increased foreign trade, constitutes only temporary prosperity?

Or will our good Republican friends insist that our great prosperity is due to the European war, when less than two-thirds of 1 per cent of the total industrial production of the United States for the fiscal year 1916 consists of war munitions?

Or that the increase in wages paid to laboring people in this country under Wilson's administration was $3,000,000,000 more than the wages paid to these people during the Taft régime, and that this constitutes temporary prosperity and due to the European war?

Or that the increase in manufactured products from $22,800,000,000 in 1912 to $32,200,000,000 in 1916, or over 41 per cent increase, is due to the European war, and that this brings us only temporary prosperity?

Or will our friends insist that the Wilson administration has been a failure in the face of an increase of $41,000,000,000 of national wealth during the past three years, and that to-day the American people possess more national wealth than Great Britain, Ireland, Germany, and France combined, with several billion dollars to spare?

I might continue indefinitely, Mr. Speaker, in giving additional data as to the great increase in business, as well as prosperity of the country, under the Democratic administration over any other period in our national history; but this certainly should be an answer—a complete and final answer—to the hue and cry raised every day upon this floor and throughout the country in the Republican press that the Democratic Party is incapable of governing the country and the best interests of all the people.

We have been, Mr. Speaker, not only efficient, but no Republican can point to any official act of the administration and claim that the same was corrupt. Nay, he can not point his finger to one legislative achievement and even insinuate with a grain of truth that such legislation was backed up by certain interests expecting to be served and against the interests of the great mass of the people. Therefore I say that we have been not only efficient, but we have been honest with the American people in our dealings, and these two virtues—efficiency and honesty—should be our slogan throughout this campaign, efficient in all the fiscal and economic laws that we have placed upon the statute books, honest in our endeavor to serve the great body of American people without fear or favor to the predatory interests of the country, who in the past, as well as to-day, have lent succor and help to perpetuate the Republican Party in power.

We stand on our record and our achievements, and upon the fact that we have peace with the world and all mankind, and that this peace has been maintained without the sacrifice of national honor or national dignity.

But, Mr. Speaker, in the face of this most horrible war, when every American patriot, regardless of politics, should have been holding up the hands of the administration, we find our partisan friends on that side of the aisle, and the partisan press of the country, doing all within their power to complicate and embarrass the very delicate international disputes and controversies that have engaged our Republic, and, Mr. Speaker, no administration has ever before been confronted with more perilous and threatening international controversies. Yet these have been settled—settled without the sword being drawn, settled by international law as it has existed for many years, adjusted with honor and with peace to the American people.

Mr. Wilson, like every great man who meets a crisis courageously and patriotically, has been assailed hundreds of times upon this floor when he should have had his hands upheld by gentlemen on that side of the aisle. He has been the recipient of more epithets, and more indignities have been heaped upon him than any American of modern times. It was so to a large extent with Washington, with Jefferson, with Jackson; it was so with Lincoln, and it was the same with Grant, but these men have survived in the hearts and the memories of the American people; yea, they have been enshrined in the affections of the American people, while their detractors have long since been forgotten; and I am glad, Mr. Speaker, that the American people in 1912 once more turned their eyes to the "Old Dominion" for a son that should lead them in peace and in honor during the greatest crisis in the history of all the world. All honor to Woodrow Wilson and to the glory of his achievements. All honor to Virginia, who claims him as her own, as there he first saw the light of day, and we may say of Mr. Wilson as Lowell said of Washington:

> Virginia gave us this majestic man,
> Cast in the massive mold
> Of those high-statured, ages old,
> She gave us this imperial gentleman.
> What shall we give her back but love and praise?

[Prolonged applause.]

Mr. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BORLAND). The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentlemen who are on the list to speak to-day who may not be reached before adjournment shall have leave to address the House to-morrow under the same conditions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that all Members who are on the list to-day to speak who are not reached before adjournment shall have leave to speak to-morrow under the same conditions. Is there objection?

MISSISSIPPI CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION AT GULFPORT, MISS.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 252.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution by title, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 252) authorizing the transfer of the Government exhibit, or such portion thereof, as the President may determine is advisable, now at the Panama-California International Exposition at San Diego, Cal., to the Mississippi Centennial Exposition at Gulfport, Miss

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has some amendments to cover the hiatus between the termination of the exposition at San Diego and the opening of the exposition at Gulfport.

Mr. HARRISON. I have; and I will offer an amendment that will be satisfactory to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman explain what the purport of the amendment is?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. The purport of the amendment is, that if, in the discretion of the exhibit board, with the approval of the President, they should desire to take this exhibit and rearrange it and add to or subtract from it in the meantime, they can do so, between the closing of the San Diego Exposition and the beginning of the Gulfport Exposition.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman know what will become of the exhibit during that period of time?

Mr. HARRISON. No; except to leave it absolutely in the discretion of the exhibit board. The same provisions will be applicable to the board then as are now applicable to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it the gentleman's purpose to have the same expense continue in connection with the exhibit when neither exposition is in progress?

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, no. The idea is to bring a large portion of the exhibits to Washington for rearrangement. I have talked with the gentleman in charge of the exhibit and he tells me that will be done.

Mr. STAFFORD. One further inquiry: The gentleman limits the amount that will be expended under this resolution by the Government to $75,000. Does the gentleman think that will meet all the expenses of the exhibit at the Mississippi Exposition?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. I have a letter from the board stating that that will be an ample amount to cover the expense necessary to transfer, maintain, and keep this exhibit. I assure the gentleman that it will not be violated. There will be no greater amount asked.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, I am in sympathy with the idea of having the exhibit presented at the Mississippi Centennial Exposition, but I thought it might involve considerable expense to keep it intact for nine months or more, from the time the San Diego Exposition closes on December 31 next until the time of the opening of the Gulfport Exposition.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand some of the departments are not now represented, and they have a larger exhibit for other departments.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection on the explanation of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this House joint resolution be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the resolution be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas there is to be held at Gulfport, Miss., beginning in October, 1917, and ending in March, 1918, the Mississippi Centennial Exposition to commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of Mississippi into the Union; and

Whereas there is now a Government exhibit at the Panama-California International Exposition at San Diego, Cal., which exposition will close December 31, 1916: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the said Government exhibit at the Panama-California International Exposition, or such portion thereof as may be determined by the President as advisable, be transferred at the close of the Panama-California International Exposition to the Mississippi Centennial Exposition at Gulfport, Miss., and to be maintained during the continuance of the said Mississippi Centennial Exposition and until not later than March 31, 1918: Provided, That the Government of the United States does not become responsible in any manner for any bond, debt, contract, expenditure, expense, or liability of the said Mississippi Centennial Exposition, its officers, agents, servants, or employees, or incident to or growing out of the said exposition beyond such appropriation as is necessary to cover the expense of transferring and maintaining the said exhibit of such portion thereof as may be determined by the President as advisable, said appropriation to be expended out of any funds not heretofore appropriated.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

On page 2, after the word "eighteen," in line 10, insert "and for the purposes herein named there is herein authorized to be expended the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as is necessary to cover the expenses of transferring and maintaining the said exhibit, or such part thereof as may be determined by the President as available." And on page 2, strike out, in line 24, after the word "advisable," the comma and the words "said appropriation to be expended out of any funds not heretofore appropriated."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to the second paragraph, on page 1. Strike out "October" and insert "December," and, on the next line, strike out "March" and insert "April."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk reads as follows:

On page 1, on the second paragraph, strike out the word "October" and insert the word "December."

Mr. HARRISON. That is on the second "whereas."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to strike out "March 31" and insert "April 30."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 2, line 10, by striking out "March 31" and inserting "April 30."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to strike out, on page 2, line 15, the colon and insert a period.

The SPEAKER. What line is it in?

Mr. HARRISON. Line 15, page 2. Strike out the colon and insert a period.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 15, page 2, strike out the colon and insert a period.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer another amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HARRISON: Page 2, line 5, strike out "Provided" and insert in lieu thereof a new section, No. 2, as follows:

"That all laws or parts of laws relating to said Government exhibit and constituting a Government exhibit board and authorizing the detail of civilians and Army and Navy officers of the United States in connection with the Government exhibit at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition and which were continued and made applicable by act of Congress, December 17, 1915, so far as the same could be made applicable, to the Panama-California International Exposition at San Diego, Cal., is hereby continued and made applicable, so far as the same may be made applicable, to the Mississippi Centennial Exposition, at Gulfport, Miss., during its said continuance."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HARRISON. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that is in the exact words, except changed to meet this case, of the law with reference to San Diego touching the exhibit that was moved from San Francisco to San Diego.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it purposed by this amendment to continue in office all those servants and attachés who are now connected with the exhibit at San Diego?

Mr. MANN. Oh, not at all. The Government board consists of men from various departments, who constitute a Government exhibit board. No extra expense attaches, so far as that is concerned. Dr. Stratton of the Bureau of Standards, is one of them, and Mr. Ravenel of the National Museum, is one of them. There are four or five of them who constitute a Government board on exhibits. They do not get any extra salaries.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HARRISON: After section 2 insert the following as section 3:

"That nothing herein contained shall prevent the Government exhibit board, in their discretion, with the approval of the President, from transferring said Government exhibit at the close of the Panama-California International Exposition from San Diego to some other point in the United States, if desirable, for being rearranged, repaired, or added to before transferring said exhibit to the Mississippi Centennial Exposition at Gulfport."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HARRISON: After section 3 insert as section 4 all on line 15, page 2, from the word "That" to and including all on line 24, page 2.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman want to include the part that was stricken out by amendment?

Mr. WEBB. No; I am just making the last provision into a new section, to be numbered section 4.

Mr. MANN. I understand, but line 24 includes "said appropriation to be expended out of any funds not," which words were eliminated.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; they were eliminated by action of the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. HARRISON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

OREGON NATIONAL FOREST.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives and calls the attention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] to it.

H. R. 13046. An act to consolidate certain forest lands in the Oregon National Forest, in the State of Oregon, was read twice by its title.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is a local bill and it is exactly the same as a bill which is now on the calendar, Senate bill 5515, reported out by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. OWEN. I am not willing to yield the floor. By unanimous consent the bill may be disposed of without taking me from the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Oklahoma next, but the Senator from Oklahoma does not have the floor. He could not get it in the absence of a quorum. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of consolidating forest lands belonging to the United States within the Oregon National Forest, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and empowered, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture, to exchange, upon the basis of equal value, lands belonging to the United States in the Oregon National Forest for privately owned lands lying within the exterior limits of the Oregon National Forest; and upon the consummation of such exchanges the lands deeded to the United States shall become parts of the Oregon National Forest.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill (S. 5515) to consolidate certain forest lands in the Oregon National Forest in the State of Oregon, will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. HUGHES. As a substitute for that motion I move that the Senate proceed to consideration of House bill——

Mr. OWEN. That is not in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the vote must be on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma the yeas are 32 and the nays are 14. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] not voting, these Senators constitute a quorum. The yeas have it, and the Chair lays the bill before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15842) to revise, amend, and codify the laws relating to publicity of contributions and expenditures made for the purpose of influencing the nomination and election of candidates for the offices of Senator and Representative in the Congress of the United States, extending the same to candidates for nomination and election to the offices of President and Vice President of the United States, limiting the amount which may be expended, providing for the publicity of campaign expenses, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. OWEN obtained the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me for a moment?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I voted against the consideration of this bill at the present time. I did so because I did not think it was prudent to now take it up. The bill being before the Senate, if it shall reach a vote, I shall vote in favor of it.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I think every Senator on this floor understands the contents of this bill. It requires no further explanation. I shall, therefore, not take the time of the Senate to attempt any further abstract of this bill than that which I have heretofore given to the Senate and placed in the RECORD. The bill is very simple in its terms. It defines the meaning of the words, fixes the amounts that may be used, and makes it a criminal offense to be guilty of certain corrupt practices.

Mr. President, the House of Representatives at the last Congress passed a bill to strengthen the safety of our elections. It was favorably reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate of the United States, but no action was taken because it was pushed off by other things. My urgent desire that there might then be action was disappointed. At the beginning of this session, on the first day of this session, the chairman of the Democratic conference introduced a bill of like character in the Senate. It was favorably reported by the committee, but remained on the calendar without action. Although the steering committee made it a part of the legislative program, and although the Democratic conference by a formal vote made it a part of the legislative program of the Democracy, no action was taken. Other things pushed it aside; and I verily believe that it was pushed aside because of the opposition of Senators on the other side of the aisle.

The House of Representatives then again passed a bill (H. R. 15842) to further protect our elections. This bill was duly considered by the Committee on Privileges and Elections and favorably reported. It is now before the Senate for action, and can only be defeated by a standpat filibuster.

Mr. President, this bill, simple in its character, only proposes to put an end to some of the most egregious corrupt practices in this country. The time ought to have arrived in the United States when it shall be made by law impossible to buy the governing power of the people of the United States. That is all I ask. I ask it in the name of the honest men of all parties. I hope it is not too much.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I realize that a majority of the Members of this body desire to go home; that they have been here so long that it has worn out their patience; yet I believe that the most valuable service which they can render their country at this time is to take up this bill and pass it. The relief which it offers has been overdue for more than a half century.

Anyone looking back over the past history of the country, any American citizen who is loyal to his country, and who loves it and wishes it to be respected by other nations, must blush with shame when the history of the election of many Members of this body, as it was composed a number of years ago, is brought to his attention.

The American Nation, through the sale and the purchase of seats in this body, for instance, at one time became a stench in the nostrils of all of the other civilized nations of the world; and it will take years to come and better conduct and a radical departure from previous methods of election before we regain the respect of other countries. The lack of power upon the part of the people to prevent traffic in their affairs in and out of the Halls of Congress by their representatives and in the corruption of their trusted agents is an evil that bears down upon every decent and honest citizen of the country, from the highest to the lowest. It prevents just and equal legislation; it causes an increase in taxtion; it causes corrupt government. It is at the root and is the foundation of inefficiency and waste and loss upon every hand.

Why should there be any question or any deliberation on a measure which attempts to cure an evil that is a disgrace to the Nation, which will rot it, which will sap its foundation, is beyond my comprehension. The people are at a disadvantage; they are engaged in their daily toil; they are unable to watch the machinations of those who use money to control the affairs of this Government. The methods used are so insidious that they are incapable of proof, yet so thoroughly do they permeate the elections to public office that the matter is one of great gravity and imperils the life of the Nation. Money by the thousands and by the hundreds of thousands of dollars in individual States is being expended in the primary elections which are now taking place; money is being used to-day, was being used yesterday, and will be used again to-morrow, not for the benefit of the people but to their destruction; and this corruption will continue if we do not do something to stop the evil. If we do not pass a law under which a permanent and absolute estoppel can be put upon that method of controlling the affairs of the people. This, in my opinion, as I said before, is a matter of public concern so important that it would justify the President, even at this time, to call a special session to demand the enactment of such legislation if the Congress should adjourn the session without having done so.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in the cautious language of exalted diplomacy this bill would be called "A bill to prohibit the improper influence of electors and to bring about purity of elections," but in the terse expression of contemporary slang this bill would be called "A bill to prevent corrupt men from buying their way into power."

It is very appropriate at this time that this bill should be passed. There are evidences making themselves manifest that the standpat element of the Republican Party, which dominated the country for so many years, is extremely resentful over the record of achievement presented by the Democratic Party. It is impossible to estimate the number of dollars corrupt politicians of the standpat variety and the privilege-hunting classes would be willing to contribute to prevent the election of Woodrow Wilson and a Democratic Congress. Why are they so resentful? Because, as I said last night, the corrupt lobbies which in the days of Roosevelt and in the days of Taft had their free will have been driven from the Capitol. They are now required to make legitimate and logical arguments in order to convince voters and public officials. The "wireless" which once worked between the White House and those who made large contributions to the campaign is no longer in action. The President of the United States now comes before the Congress and makes his recommendations personally. It is a day of the rule of the people, and I trust this Congress will not adjourn until it shall have enacted this bill into law.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. It does not matter. I will wait until the Senator is through.

Mr. ASHURST. As I was proceeding to say when the ponderous form of my distinguished friend on the other side silhouetted across the aisle—and I am not surprised to "get a rise" out of him when I begin to talk about campaign contributions, although I am not here to assail individuals—the improper use of money in political campaigns began in this country in 1876. It grew in volume, as contributions were made to both sides. It was widely charged in 1876 that one of the candidates had used money in trying to influence voters; it was widely charged in 1884 that the improper use of money had influenced the election; it was widely charged, and generally believed, in 1896 that the election was purchased. I do not assert it to be a fact, but I do say, in view of the serious charges of the improper use of money that have been bandied back and forth and that have been voiced in the public prints, it is high time that this Congress should pay attention to the evil and attempt to remedy it.

In the old days, before the people had the right to elect their Senators, millionaires sometimes captured a legislature on the bargain counter, bought their way into the Senate, and sat dumbly here, speechless except at roll calls, and almost inaudible then, finding in senatorial life not a place for exalted and useful public service, but a place for ostentatious and ridiculous display. Therefore it is proper at this time that a bill—the bill now before us—should be considered and passed by this Congress. It is one of the most, if not the most, essential and notable reforms that can be effected.

The next reform that will come, in my judgment, will be a rule of the Senate providing for a modified form of cloture. On last Saturday, the second day of this month, the Senate was in session, and every American had a still further right to be proud to be an American when he saw the Senate in session. Speeches were made for and against the bill then pending. They were of a high order; there was legitimate debate, a debate in which not one word was wasted; and it was an edifying spectacle to see the American Senate proceeding in a dignified and in an orderly way. Now, if we had not had the 5-minute rule or the 15-minute rule, Senators would have risen and droned away for hours at a time without hesitation or reflection, but with the 5-minute or the 10-minute or the 30-minute rule in force, Senators were required to use words to express their thoughts and not to conceal their thoughts. So, in addition to the passage of the corrupt-practices act I hope also that the Senate next December will pass a modified form of cloture.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator to yield, although it is not necessary, because I rise to a point of order.

Mr. ASHURST. I cheerfully yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand the Senator is discussing a bill that has not been read; am I correct?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not in possession of the information.

Mr. GALLINGER. Perhaps the Secretary can give it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed by the Secretary that the bill has not been read.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not like to interrupt the Senator, but at the conclusion of his remarks I shall ask that the bill be read.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, we certainly could gather a more intelligent conclusion regarding the Senator's remarks if we had this bill read. It is difficult to follow the drift of the Senator's statements when not a line of the measure to which his remarks are directed has been read.

Mr. ASHURST. The distinguished Senator from New Hampshire and the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania are correct, and I am going to yield for the purpose of having the bill read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The SECRETARY. The committee proposes to strike out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and to insert, beginning on page 18, line 10——

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, let the text of the bill as it came from the House of Representatives be read. We want to know all about this measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the entire bill.

The Secretary read the text of the House bill proposed to be stricken out by the committee.

Mr. THOMAS. I have been looking at the recitals of the bill during the reading of the House text by the Secretary. I find, on page 32, a provision that in case of the violation of the preceding recitals of the section—such candidate shall be deemed guilty of a felony and shall be disqualified, if nominated, to have his name appear upon the ballots for the ensuing election, and, if elected, from holding his seat as a United States Senator, and on conviction shall be punished as hereinafter provided.

On page 33, lines 9, 10, and 11, there is a similar recital in regard to Representatives in Congress, and on page 45, beginning on line 9, it is provided that—

No candidate found by the House in which he claims membership to be a party to a violation of this act shall receive or retain the office for which he was a candidate.

The Constitution of the United States expressly declares that "each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members." I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill how he reconciles those provisions with the express authority given by the Constitution to the two Houses?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. The reading of the bill has not been completed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is not subject to discussion until it has been read.

Mr. THOMAS. I thought the reading of the bill had been concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. No.

Mr. THOMAS. I thought that all the Secretary was requested to do was to read the House text. Of course, if I am not in order I will postpone my query for another time.

Mr. OWEN. I ask that the amendment of the committee be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill must be read, and it has not been read.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the words just read the Committee on Privileges and Elections propose to insert the following words:

That the act of Congress approved June 25, 1910, entitled "An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected," shall be further amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. Definition of words and phrases in this act: (a) The term 'political committee' wherever used in this act shall mean and include the national committees of all political parties, and the national congressional campaign committees of all political parties, the regular or special committees provided for by the rules of any party, where such committee is directly or indirectly attempting to influence the election or defeat of any candidate for the office of President, Vice President, United States Senator, or Member of the House of Representatives, and such other committees, associations, and organizations as shall become political committees in the manner provided for by the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 2. That every association, organization, or committee, consisting of five or more members, excepting corporations organized for profit, may constitute itself or themselves a political committee under the terms and provisions of this act in the manner following:

"At a regular or special meeting of the members of said association, organization, or committee a resolution shall be duly passed expressing the desire of the members that said association, organization, or committee shall be constituted and known as a political committee in order that it may participate in a primary or election or both in connection with which presidential and vice presidential electors or Senators or Representatives in the Congress of the United States are to be voted for, and said resolution shall state fully and in detail the particular candidate or candidates in which said association, organization, or committee is interested, and in whose behalf it is desired or intended to participate and influence the result of said election. Upon the adoption of such a resolution, a copy thereof, with the correct name and a list of officers of said association and the location of the principal office or headquarters thereof, shall within five days be certified under oath and in duplicate to the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States. Upon the receipt of such affidavit in duplicate and in proper form, the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States shall issue his certificate, declaring said association, organization, or committee a duly constituted political committee under the provisions of this act, which said certificate shall have attached to it the duplicate copy of the affidavit theretofore filed, and the same shall be delivered to the so constituted political committee, whereupon said association, organization, or committee shall become a political committee under the terms of this act and shall be subject to all of the provisions hereof. The said certificate, with affidavit attached, shall be kept in a conspicuous place in the principal office or headquarters of said political committee as designated in said affidavit, and shall at all times be subject to inspection by any duly qualified elector of the State in which said headquarters is situated. The original affidavit shall remain on file in the office of the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives for the period of two years from the date of the certificate issued thereon. The principal office or headquarters of such political committee can be changed upon filing notice of such proposed change, together with a statement of the proposed new location, with the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

"The certificate of the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives shall be effective and shall constitute said association, organization, or committee a political committee as defined and provided for by the terms of this act for the period of two years from the date thereof, and at the expiration of said period of two years said certificate shall be void and of no effect and said association, organization, or committee shall cease to be a political committee: Provided, however, That another certificate may be secured in the manner provided for by this act: Provided further, That no association, organization, or committee shall be permitted to file the affidavit provided for by this section expressing the desire of its members to be constituted a political committee and designating the name of the candidate or candidates in whose behalf such proposed committee desires to participate and influence the result, unless there shall be attached thereto the written statement of such candidate or candidates, consenting to the issuing of a certificate by the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States, declaring such association, organization, or committee a political committee under the provisions of this act for the purposes set forth in said affidavit: And provided further, That in the case of candidates for President or Vice President of the United States, such candidate may, by power of attorney filed with the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States, appoint an agent who shall be authorized to execute such statement as fully as his principal might do under the provisions of this section.

"SEC. 3. Political committees to have chairman and treasurer—Treasurer's duties: Every political committee shall have a chairman and a treasurer. It shall be the duty of the treasurer to keep a detailed account of all money or its equivalent received by or promised to such committee or any member thereof, or by or to any person acting under its authority or in its behalf; and the name of every person from whom received, and of all expenditures, disbursements, and promises of payment or disbursement made by the committee or any member thereof, or by any person acting under its authority or in its behalf, and to whom paid, distributed, or disbursed. No officer or member of such committee or other person acting under its authority or in its behalf shall receive any money or its equivalent or expend or promise to expend any money on behalf of such committee until after the chairman or treasurer of such committee shall have been chosen: Provided, however, That the record of all money, or its equivalent, received by a political committee shall constitute a public record and shall be open to the inspection of every other candidate and to the officers of every other political committee at any time, and the refusal of any officer of a political committee to permit such an inspection shall be a violation of the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 4. That every political committee shall keep in the name of its treasurer a bank account in some bank authorized by law to receive deposits of moneys, funds, and credits paid to or received by said political committee, which shall be regularly deposited to the credit of said association or treasurer in said banking institution. No money shall be expended for any purpose by said political committee or its officers, agents, and employees, except by a check duly drawn against said account, which said check shall be payable to the person to whom said political committee is indebted to the full amount of the proceeds thereof, or to the person by whom services are to be rendered to said political committee. In no case shall any check be issued to any person for the purpose or with the intent that said payee shall pay the proceeds or any part thereof to any other person.

"SEC. 5. Receipts for payments, etc., by political committees to be preserved: Every payment or disbursement made by a political committee exceeding $10 in amount shall be evidenced by a receipted bill, stating the particulars of expense, and every such record, voucher, receipt, or account shall be preserved for 15 months after the election to which it relates, and open to public inspection.

"SEC. 6. Account to treasurer and record of contributions, etc.: Whoever, acting under the authority or in behalf of any such political committee, whether as a member thereof or otherwise, receives any contribution, payment, loan, gift, advance, deposit, or promise of money or its equivalent shall, on demand, and in any event within five days after the receipt of such contribution, payment, loan, gift, advance, deposit, or promise, render to the treasurer of such political committee a detailed account of the same, together with the name and address of the person from whom received, and said treasurer shall forthwith enter the same in a ledger or record to be kept by him for that purpose, which leager or record shall plainly show the items or sums contributed, paid, loaned, given, advanced, deposited, or promised by citizens of each State separate from other States and shall be open to public inspection.

"SEC. 7. Statements by treasurer to be filed with Clerk of House of Representatives; to be preserved and open to inspection: The treasurer of every such political committee shall, not more than 15 and not less than 10 days next before any election whereat any Representative in Congress is to be nominated and elected make, transmit, and cause to be delivered for filing to the Clerk of the House of Representatives at Washington, D. C., an itemized statement, and on each sixth day after the day of delivery of said original statement to and until the day of such election, and once again within 30 days after such election, said treasurer shall also make, transmit, and cause to be so delivered for filing in each case a similar supplemental statement.

"Each statement thereof shall be signed and sworn to by said treasurer, shall be true and complete, and shall both in form and substance conform to the requirements of the next following section of this act, save that no supplemental statement need contain any item already given publicity in an earlier statement filed as herein provided.

"Said clerk shall receive, and from time to time file, each such statement in his office, and shall there preserve the same, subject to inspection like other public records, for full 15 months after the receipt by him.

"SEC. 8. Details of statements: The statements required by the preceding section of this act shall state:

"(a) Contributions, etc., of $100 or more:

"First. The name and address of each person who or which has contributed, promised, loaned, given, or advanced to such political committee, or any officer, member, or agent thereof, either in one or more items, money or its equivalent of the aggregate amount or value of $100 or more, and the total amount or sum so contributed, promised, loaned, given, or advanced by each.

C., statements in regard thereto similar to those required by section 5 of this act, which statements shall be held by said Clerk in all respects as required by section 5 of this act. Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to present an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill, and ask that it may be read and printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEE of Maryland in the chair). The amendment will be read for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, at the proper place, a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. Any person, association, partnership, or corporation engaged or interested, directly or indirectly, in the manufacture, distribution, or sale of intoxicating liquors who shall contribute anything of value, or pay any sum whatsoever to any person or political committee to be used in any way to assist or promote the election of any candidate for nomination or election to any office covered by this act shall be guilty of a felony and punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not less than one year, or by both fine and imprisonment; and any candidate who shall knowingly receive, directly or indirectly, any sum of money or contribution of any kind from such person, association, partnership, or corporation shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction shall be punished as above provided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that the report be read.

Mr. THOMAS. Before the report is read, will the Senator permit me to pursue the inquiry which I made a few minutes ago of the Senator having charge of the bill? It will take only a moment.

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish again to ask the Senator having charge of the bill how he reconciles the recitals of pages 32, 33, and 45, to which I called attention a few moments ago, with that provision of the Constitution which makes each House the exclusive judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members?

Mr. OWEN. There is no conflict whatever. This is an act of the lower House, in the first place, and they interpret their membership rights within the light of the statutes as they exist; and even if they had a constitutional right, regardless of the statute which they themselves had passed, they would be within their rights to determine it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, one House or one Congress can not abrogate or lessen the constitutional powers of succeeding Congresses; and if that is the basis upon which these insertions appear, I am afraid the Senator will find that he is leaning upon a very weak support. I stated a few moments ago that I would be glad to support a bill for the regulation of elections and the prevention of corrupt practices; but I am unable to give my assent to a bill which contains clauses like these, which in my judgment are palpably in violation of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. OWEN. It is entirely within the Senator's rights to vote against the bill on constitutional grounds. I have no objection to his doing so.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask for the reading of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request is made that the report be read. If there is no objection, it will be so ordered. The Chair hears none.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report.

Mr. OWEN. The Secretary is reading the exhibits, which are merely copies of existing statutes. I move that the reading of the existing statutes be dispensed with.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask for the reading of the entire report. It will save the reading of it in the debate.

Mr. OWEN. If the Senator insists on having it read, of course I shall not interpose further objection, but I call attention to the fact that it will take a great deal of time, which is quite unnecessary, and will make it more difficult to act on this measure which we want to have passed on.

Mr. CURTIS. I think it will give Senators some information they do not have. I think a great many Senators do not realize what is contained in the existing law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will resume the reading of the report.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the report, which is as follows:

Mr. KERN, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report, to accompany H. R. 15842:

Your committee, having had under consideration H. R. 15842, respectfully report the bill to the Senate and recommend that it pass with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

This act of the House of Representatives is similar to an act which was reported during the last Congress by the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate, and which was again, in a somewhat similar form, reported to the Senate in the early part of this session.

The bill, now proposed as a substitute by your committee, was considered by the Committee on Privileges and Elections and reported to the Senate on May 18 (calendar day, May 29), 1916 (Rept. No. 498).

The difference between S. 5437 and H. R. 15842 consists in some technical definitions suggested by the Department of Justice and certain provisions which are deemed necessary in order to strengthen the act. These provisions will better appear from the proposed act than from the report.

Your committee respectfully recommend that the bill as substituted be passed.

"Every statement herein required shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the candidate, taken before an officer authorized to administer oaths under the laws of the State in which he is a candidate, and shall be sworn to or affirmed by the candidate in the district in which he is a candidate for Representative, or the State in which he is a candidate for Senator in the Congress of the United States: Provided, That if at the time of such primary election, nominating convention, general or special election, or election by the State legislature said candidate shall be in attendance upon either House of Congress as a Member thereof he may at his election verify such statements before any officer authorized to administer oaths in the District of Columbia: Provided further, That the depositing of any such statement in a regular post office, directed to the Clerk of the House of Representatives or to the Secretary of the Senate, as the case may be, duly stamped and registered within the time required herein, shall be deemed a sufficient filing of any such statement under any of the provisions of this act.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Will the Senator withhold the call for a moment that I may make a statement?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I desire to state that I was called out of the Chamber on public business this morning and I was unable to vote on the motion to take up this bill for consideration. I regret it very much, because I am in thorough accord with the purpose of taking up the bill and heartily in favor of its enactment.

Mr. CURTIS. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, in deciding to take up the corrupt-practices act the Senate has been entirely consistent with its record made during this session. It was taken up, as the RECORD shows, by a vote of 32 to 14, which demonstrates the overwhelming sentiment in this Chamber in favor of a corrupt-practices act.

It has been said here and charged, I think, that there is going to be a filibuster that will delay, hinder, and obstruct the passage of this bill. I understand that it is the hope of some Senators that by obstructing, hindering, and delaying the vote they may tire out the Democrats so that they will cease their efforts to pass this bill. I do not know what is the disposition of other Senators on this side of the Chamber, or on the other side, but I should like to be recorded as saying that I for one am ready to stay here until election day if necessary to pass this bill. I believe I am also warranted in saying that there is the same thought and purpose in the minds of many other Senators on this side. I think that if there is going to be such a test of endurance a number of Senators on this side at least are ready for the test; they are not afraid of the test.

I believe every Senator is anxious to go back to his State and take part in the campaign, but anxious as he may be, and necessary as it may be for him to go there, I think a great many feel that we can perform no better service to the people whom we represent or to the country than to pass a bill to prevent the purchase of elections and the corruption of the electorate.

We all know what has happened in the last number of years. It is a matter of common knowledge that money has played a prominent part in elections in the past. If this country knows itself, and if it is going to continue to exist as it deserves to exist, it will have to keep clean and pure the very fountain head of its political life. Everybody knows that we can not poison the fountain of our political existence, that we can not pollute it, without having that poison and that pollution run through every vein and artery of the body politic. The people will not endure a government, they will not tolerate a government, they will not suffer a government to govern them which does not represent them and which is not the result of a free and fair electorate. In other words, the people will not abide a decision which they believe is not a free and true expression of public sentiment or of public choice, which they know is merely the manifestation, not of the people's will, nor of the will of the electorate, but of the will of certain money powers which are holding the money bags and which are holding the purse strings that make the puppet dance according to the way they pull the strings.

I say that in my humble judgment this Congress can not more fittingly bring its session to a close than by passing an act which will make difficult if not impossible the corruption of the people of the States and the purchasing of elections, and which will insure a fair and unpurchased verdict of the jury—of the American jury—who will soon sit upon and consider the matter of electing the President and the matter of indorsing the work of his past administration.

We all know in a general way what has been done in this country. It is not necessary to go back and rake up all the foul material of this nature that is a blot upon the country. I do not know that it is necessary to remind Senators here of moneys that have been expended in elections, or of reminding them that men have been elected to office not as the result of a fair choice but as a result of conspiracy, financed by money kings who put men in places of responsibility not to serve the public but to serve the men who paid the price.

There is another phase of this situation, and one follows the other just as logically as the day follows the night. When the people have a free choice, and it is exercised voluntarily and freely, and properly represents their sovereign will, and they elect a man to one of the Houses of Congress to represent them, they always find that the man whom they elect, and whose election is an expression of their own will, will serve them, the people who elected him. When men are elected to office by a free electorate, whom do they serve? They serve the people. It is just as natural and as true to-day that when a representative is elected by some sinister and outside influence he will, when he gets into a place of responsibility, serve that very sinister influence that put him there; in other words, he will serve the instrumentality that served him. If the people want to be well served, they will have to insist that they be given a free rein and elect men who will recognize their masters and not be committed to some other intervening force which, by electing a man to office, not only expects but demands and will always receive the services of that man.

We have had corruption, we have had the expenditure of great amounts of money, in presidential elections in the past. Do we want to leave the door open here, now on the eve of adjourning this Congress, so that those influences can work their will in the coming election? Why are Senators so frantic about staying this legislation and saying, "We will take it up next December"? Do we want to lock the stable door after the horse has gone? Do we want to put this legislation into operation only then in a sanctimonious way, by sanctimonious expressions, after the campaign is over and corruption has done its work? Or do we not want to say now that, if it is a good thing, we can not put it into operation too soon, and, therefore, we will enact it now, so that in going to the country with "a fair field and no favor," we can let the people judge whether or not they want to reelect President Wilson on his record and not be subjected to conditions where they may lose sight entirely of the main issue and elect somebody whom somebody else wants elected?

Everybody knows that money has heretofore been expended in presidential elections by the millions. We have had experiences of this nature in the State of Wisconsin in the way of elections, and those same elections have been heard from in this Chamber. It is not so many years ago when certain candidates for the United States Senate, in a primary election, by their own sworn statements admitted having expended at least within a few thousand dollars of $400,000. And one man was nominated for that high office who admitted, on his own sworn statement, that he had spent at least $200,000 to secure the nomination. That election in Wisconsin was followed by another election in Illinois, which also came before this body.

I do not know anything about the Illinois conditions except from hearsay, but I did see something of the effects of the methods employed in Wisconsin. I have a personal knowledge of the expenditure of money in my State and in every nook and cranny of the State of Wisconsin in the primary campaign when nearly $400,000 was spent in attempting to secure the nomination of candidates. Men were given sums as high as $5,000, and when asked to account for them they could not remember what they had done with the money. They gave incomplete returns and they attempted to make the investigating committee believe that they had absolutely forgotten what they did with the $5,000. Sums ranging all the way from $5 to $100 were given to ward workers, ostensibly for the purpose of getting men to the polls. An army of men was employed as pickets in every voting precinct in the State of Wisconsin, and they were paid from $5 to $10 apiece to work for and to build up the vote for their man. It would take too long to go on and to give in extended detail an account of what happened there; but, suffice it to say, there was put in circulation in that State nearly $400,000. That election resulted in the nomination of the man who spent the most money—the man who spent $209,000. And when the final contest was decided in the legislature men belonging to an opposite party were induced to stay out of the senate chamber in order to permit the election of a man of a party other than their own. It is a foul blot, a foul chapter in the fair history of Wisconsin.

I am glad to say that those conditions, I believe, have gone from Wisconsin, never again to return. Corrupt-practice laws were passed. If I may be pardoned a personal allusion, I had something to do with the drafting of the bill, a great deal of the substance of which finally became the law in Wisconsin. The committee, of which I was a member, that had the framing of the original proposition, after this Wisconsin debauch, made up its mind that there was only one legitimate way to expend money in a campaign, and that was for information to the voter and that the spending of money for any other purpose was wrong and should be stopped. I am glad to see that this bill contains that same idea. The purposes for which money may be expended are enumerated in the bill, and a study of that language will show that those expenditures are permissible only for publicity. Then such expenditures are limited in another portion of the bill by the total amount of money which can be expended only for publicity.

I think everybody will agree that a man who wants to be elected to office ought to be elected on his own merits, or on the merits of the measures he stands for, or upon the principles of his party; and he should be given every reasonable opportunity to tell and to fully inform the people of his district, or of his State, or of his country, as the case may be, for what he stands, for what his opponent stands, and everything else that is pertinent to the questions involved.

I know very well that there was a time when it was thought entirely proper for a candidate to entertain his friends in saloons, by junkets, or in "any other old way." He was a public entertainer, and he was elected many times because of his ability as an entertainer, though it often happened that he was not endowed with the ability to make him a proper officer, a public servant, or a public official, such as he ought to be. I think that this condition is now a thing of the past.

I say that that time has gone by, and this bill provides for the expenditure of money for the purpose of publicity, and publicity only. The expenditures for purposes of publicity are further limited by the total amount of money that can be expended for that purpose.

There is a reason why that should be done. Men can, for instance, in a great many places, unless the laws are properly drawn, go to a newspaper, and, ostensibly for newspaper and publicity purposes, pay a newspaper $500 or $1,000 for space in the paper which would ordinarily or legitimately cost only a few dollars, or they may flood the country with material in such a way that an opponent of less financial ability will not have the opportunity to bring his name in like manner before the public. So even this publicity has got to be circumscribed to a certain extent. Even that may be overdone and become a pernicious practice if not limited to certain amounts.

It seems to me this bill ought to pass. I should like to hear one good reason advanced by its opponents, if they can do so, why it ought not to pass. The contest over the passage of this bill ought not to be one of endurance. This bill ought to pass or it ought to be defeated on its merits. It is a simple bill. I think many States have laws now in force similar in their provisions to this bill. Division on this bill will not be on its details, but it will be on the broad issue, which I understand to be this: Are you in favor of the expenditure of an unlimited amount of money in an unlimited manner by unlimited agencies to get your man or yourself into office, or do you believe in a corrupt-practices act which puts your opponent and yourself on the same plane and permits you to go to the people upon the merits of your case? Is not the latter the American spirit?

Is it fair play for one man to sandbag his opponent with a bag of money? How can any American citizen who believes in fair play oppose a bill which is calculated only to give him and his opponent a fair field and an open field and no favor?

So, I say, the issue is plain enough, and the vote will show where Senators stand on the issue. I do not think that the fight on this bill, if one is going to be made, will deceive anyone. I think it will be perfectly obvious and plain that those who are against this bill are against it because they believe that in some way it is going to curtail their power to get money to elect their candidates, to "put their candidates over." I think their opposition to the bill will prove that they do not want a fair fight in this election, but that they want to go into this fight with their opponents laboring under the handicap of a lack of funds, and that they expect and hope that they will have the advantage in that respect, so that they can go in and, with their money, win the election.

I repeat that the people are not going to be deceived on this question. They are going to know who are for this bill and why they are for it, and who are against it and why they are against it. They are going to understand that the fight is on here now in the Senate for pure elections in the coming campaign and in all future campaigns. They will understand that the fight is on here now to put a stop once and forever to the purchase of elections and the corruption of the electorate of this country.

They will know that the fight is on here now between those interests that are not satisfied when the people alone are well served and those people who believe in political purity. There are, it appears, certain interests which, in addition to the special privileges which they now enjoy, want the special privilege of electing a President of the United States and both branches of Congress, so that these branches of government will do their bidding and will serve them and not the people of the United States. The people of this country will understand very well and fully that this fight is on here now and that there will be a division upon this question. They will understand that the men who vote against a good corrupt-practices act are doing so because they fear that their only weapon is going to be taken away from them. They will also know and understand that the fight is on as to whether certain people of this country can be corrupted to defeat, destroy, and punish a President who refused to put his neck under the yoke of the financial interests which have many times in the recent history of this country supplied such yokes for others. They will understand very well what the purpose is. They will understand very well what a filibuster is, as my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] suggests; and they will understand that if a filibuster is instituted at this time it will be instituted for the purpose of attempting to carry this bill over until after the next election, so that these powers can work their own will in their own way in their attempt to elect a President of the United States and to defeat the man who has been our President for the past four years and who has served the people who elected him, and who they know will serve them again if elected this time, and not the money kings who buy what they want and who expect to get what they pay for.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VARDAMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HUSTING. Certainly.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Does the Senator think that presidential electors are Federal officers in the sense that their election can be controlled by laws passed through the Congress of the United States?

Mr. HUSTING. I will say to the Senator that I have never given the matter very much study, but I should say that obviously they are so closely connected with the election of the President of the United States that I would have very little doubt but that we have a right to control their election and pass a corrupt-practices act to prevent fraud and other evils in their election.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I did not submit the inquiry altogether as the result of my own curiosity. I was rather prompted to do so by this quotation from a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Fitzgerald against Greene, in One hundred and thirty-fourth United States:

> The sole function of the presidential electors is to cast, certify, and transmit the vote of the State for President and Vice President of the Nation. Although the electors are appointed and act under and pursuant to the Constitution of the United States, they are no more officers or agents of the United States than are the members of the State legislatures when acting as electors of Federal Senators or the people of the States when acting as electors of Representatives in Congress.

Mr. HUSTING. Was that a case involving a corrupt-practices act?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It was a case involving the punishment of a presidential elector for failure to do his duty, and making false returns as a presidential elector.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. HUSTING. Certainly.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, a citizen of the United States without conflict fills the position of a citizen of his town, of his county, of his State, and of the Federal Government. There is no conflict of allegiance between the one and the other, and when he acts as a citizen of the United States in the exercise of his franchise in the choice of an elector, he acts as a citizen of the United States. The electors chosen by citizens of the United States resident in Oklahoma are electors and officials and functionaries of the United States, and not of the State. It makes no difference if this decision of the Supreme Court of the United States be read. The powers of Government are vested in the people of the United States, who make constitutions and make supreme courts and make Presidents; and the Supreme Court can change its mind on that subject, if it is necessary to do so. The people of the United States have got a right to defend the life of their own Government. To make an argument that the people in their organized form can not control corrupt practices vital to the selection of a Senate, of a House, and of a President is making an argument which the people of this country will not stand for.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, let me make one further observation in justification of the suggestion I have made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HUSTING. Before the Senator makes any further observation, I should like to say what I want to say in regard to the question the Senator propounded to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin refuses to yield.

Mr. HUSTING. I will say that certainly the Government of the United States has a right to protect the very fountain head of its own elections.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HUSTING. If the Senator will wait a moment——

Mr. CURTIS. I rise to a point of no quorum. We are discussing a very important question, and I should like to have a quorum here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin declines to yield for that purpose.

Mr. CURTIS. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present, and I hope the Senator will yield for that purpose.

Mr. HUSTING. I decline to yield for that purpose in the midst of the argument that I should like to make on this matter. I say that the Congress and the Government of the United States has certainly a right to protect the fountain head of its own existence through laws calculated to insure fair and uncorrupt election of such electors. Whether electors are strictly Government officers or not is another question entirely. I take it that the official status of an elector was the point involved in the case referred to by the Senator from Arkansas, but that does not go to the question of a corrupt-practices act. It is certainly within the province of Congress to say to the man invested with some office, whether as an elector or as any other officer, who performs the function of assisting in sending a Senator to Congress, that he shall not buy an election or have it bought for him.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senator did not understand me as suggesting that the Congress of the United States has no——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HUSTING. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That the Congress of the United States has no right to regulate the election of Senators and Members of the Lower House, I hope.

Mr. HUSTING. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I say the Senator did not understand me to intimate that Congress did not have the power to regulate the election of Senators and Members of the Lower House of Congress, because that is expressly provided for by the Constitution. I did not intend to do more than simply to get the opinion of the Senator. I did not expect to confront any further remarks by my objection; but I want to call attention to a section of the Constitution that prompted me to make the inquiry. Section 1 of Article II provides:

> Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress.

It will be seen that there is no provision of the Constitution of the United States, and there can not be any, that would require presidential electors to be selected by an election at all. Down to the time of the Civil War many of the States chose electors directly through the action of their legislatures. I simply asked the question I did in good faith for information.

Mr. HUSTING. I am trying to answer the Senator in good faith.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I merely desired to ascertain whether the Senator thought there was any such connection between the service of presidential electors and an election as to justify Congress in providing for any system of regulation for the selection of officers of that kind.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, I will say that, for instance, under the old system of election in the States there was no such thing as a primary election. Nominations were made by conventions, and yet the States went on and prescribed rules of conduct for conventions and now prescribe rules of conduct for nominations by primaries, and impose penalties for the violation of election laws under the corrupt-practices acts. I have never heard the question raised that they had no right to legislate as to the conventions or primaries which selected and nominated men, or that they were precluded from passing laws providing pure elections either by primaries or conventions.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That would be determined by the character of the officer to be elected at a particular election. The Senator would not insist that the Congress of the United States could pass a corrupt-practices act that related exclusively to a State election for State and county officers, would he?

Mr. HUSTING. Not in an exclusively State election, but this bill does not attempt to do that. I might illustrate it by saying that surely it would be within the province of Congress, at least I think so, and within their authority, if they wanted to exercise the power, to provide that no one shall corruptly buy a legislature. I think that they have got a right to go into a question——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That is the answer that I wanted; that is to say, I wanted to locate the Senator's view on that subject, and probably, if the occasion required, I might antagonize that view.

Mr. HUSTING. I want to say further that there does not seem to me to be any doubt that Congress has a right to pass a corrupt-practices act and that it has a right to provide that corrupt practices shall not be employed in the election of the President; and yet, if the point of the Senator from Arkansas were well taken, we would be powerless to punish corruption in the election of the President of the United States, because he is only elected through the instrumentality of an electoral college, and it would reduce this proposition, I think, to one approaching absurdity to say that Congress would be absolutely powerless to prevent or punish corrupt practices in the election of a President.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HUSTING. I do.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Would the obvious necessity for some remedy of that kind justify a criticism of the constitutional convention which delegated the power of electing a President exclusively to State agents, or would it warrant the Congress in extending its own power beyond the terms of the Constitution in order to protect the public against an obvious defect?

Mr. HUSTING. If there were any constitutional provision which prohibited the Congress from passing laws of this kind, I would say that that would be a matter to be considered; but I do not understand the Constitution to so provide.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The Senator, of course, recalls the fact that the National Government is a Government of delegated powers, and that no power not expressly or by necessary implication granted comes within the competency of Congress.

Mr. HUSTING. I understand that; but I do not see the application of it, because the fact that the States have reserved to themselves the powers not expressly granted to the Federal Government has no bearing upon this question.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. What is the power that is expressly granted to Congress by the Constitution of the United States? It says that electors shall be chosen in such manner as the State legislatures of the several States shall provide—not Congress but the State legislatures.

Mr. HUSTING. Will the Senator read that again?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I will read it from the Constitution:

> Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representative to which the State may be entitled in the Congress.

The States select the presidential electors, and not the National Government.

Mr. HUSTING. It says:

> Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress, but no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

I must confess to the Senator from Arkansas that I can not see anything in that which is in any way repugnant to or in conflict with the purpose of this proposed law. The mere fact that they "shall appoint in such manner as the legislature * * * may direct" does not mean that the legislature can authorize the purchase of these electors, or sell them to the highest bidder in the manner that they may direct, and then say that the great Government of the United States is powerless to prevent or punish them. When we are talking about powers expressly delegated and those reserved, when they delegate to the United States a government, and provide that a President shall be elected, why have they not thereby directly delegated to the Government the right to protect and safeguard the manner in which that President shall be elected in everything else except that it shall be done by electors? Such delegation must surely be implied in the express delegation.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. In order to make my question a little bit clearer—and then I will not intrude upon the Senator further—I call attention to a clause in the same section of the Constitution, which appears on page 210 of the manual, which defines the extent of the control that the Constitution reserves to Congress over presidential electors, and the manner in which they shall discharge their duties:

> The Congress may determine the time of choosing the electors, and the day on which they shall give their votes, which day shall be the same throughout the United States.

That is the ultimate control that the Constitution gives Congress over presidential electors. There is nothing said in that about authorizing the Congress of the United States to prescribe a system of election by which they can be elected.

Mr. HUSTING. I want to say to the Senator that I do not think the Constitution will bear any such narrow construction as that. I would be willing to say offhand, with a great deal of positiveness and assurance, at least in my own mind——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. One other word, and then I believe I will be through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin further yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HUSTING. Not at present. I should like to make a connected statement in regard to this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin declines to yield.

Mr. HUSTING. I say that the election of a President of the United States is a matter of national concern, a matter affecting the very life of the country itself. The President is our ruler, in so far as we can have a ruler; and the mere fact that we have said that each State shall appoint, as the legislature may direct, a certain number of electors does not in any way circumscribe or hinder or obstruct the United States in determining at least that they shall not choose such electors corruptly. It must mean that the States must have electors chosen legally and not fraudulently or corruptly.

Here is the President of the United States. He is elected by electors. These electors are necessarily chosen in the several States. With all respect to the Senator from Arkansas, I think he would not want to stake his reputation as a lawyer on the proposition just suggested by him—he does not say that he really believes it, but it is suggested by him—that a corrupt practices act governing the election of President of the United States is absolutely unconstitutional.

I want to say to the Senator that I do not believe that he or any other lawyer who wants to maintain a reputation as a constitutional lawyer would ever want even to raise that question before the Supreme Court of the United States. I think the Supreme Court of the United States would say that inasmuch as the election of a President is a matter of national concern and a matter of national business, and that inasmuch as it is conceded that to buy that election is contrary to the welfare of the United States, and that the purchase of such an office is a crime against the people of the United States, Congress has the fullest power to prevent and punish such crimes as that and enact laws to prevent them. To hold otherwise would be to say that while we are interested in the election of a President of the United States, we are absolutely powerless to prevent the corruption of the election of that President.

Because of the Senator's high standing as a lawyer and my great admiration and respect for him I really do not want to pay the poor compliment to the Senator of taking him seriously this time, and so I really think that he is trying to have a little merriment. I really do not think the Senator meant it at all seriously, and with that I will pass on from that phase of the subject.

But I do not think any Senator in this body is going to vote against this bill because he is afraid that it is unconstitutional. In my experience in legislative halls and my much shorter experience in this body I have found that constitutional questions are raised against almost every measure that has merit; but I do not think any Senator will get up here and seriously contend against any provision in this bill on constitutional grounds. Let me say this in concluding: If any Senator tries to do so, let him not delude himself into the belief that he is deceiving anybody. Let him not think for a moment that the people really believe that he thinks the bill is unconstitutional. They will probably attribute his opposition not to his great reverence for the Constitution, but to his reverence for the old election institutions—"for the good old times" when it was permissible to use an unlimited amount of money to get an office, when money was used as a potent persuasive of the merits of a candidate who oftentimes had none. The people will know that such a legislator has tried to throw this monkey wrench into the wheels of this legislation for the purpose of breaking it up and not for the purpose of preserving the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. HUSTING. Certainly.

Mr. CHILTON. This bill, as I understand, disqualifies a candidate for Senator or Member of the House of Representatives who violates its provisions. Does it disqualify a candidate for elector of President and Vice President in the same way?

Mr. HUSTING. I shall have to refer that question to the Senator from Oklahoma. I am informed by that Senator that it does not.

Mr. CHILTON. Is there any reason for that? Was that an oversight, or should that be done to make this a proper bill, to cover the whole subject?

Mr. HUSTING. I will ask the Senator from Oklahoma, who prepared the bill, to answer that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized to answer the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. OWEN. Since the electors, under the practice of the American people, simply vote as their States direct them to vote, they are merely automatic instrumentalities; so that it is not regarded as of any importance.

Mr. CHILTON. At the same time, electors are elected. They do have certificates of election. But whatever they may be, it seems to me that we ought to disqualify an elector who was elected by corrupt means, if we can do it, as we are trying to disqualify a candidate for the Senate or for the House in the same way.

Mr. OWEN. I think there is a good deal of force in the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. HUSTING. I want to say that I entirely agree with the Senator on that proposition. I am not speaking in behalf of this bill in its details, or saying that it should not be subjected to some amendments. I am talking on the main features of the bill, the main scheme of the bill; and I shall be glad to support any amendments which make it better and stronger and will do the business better than this bill will. I do not presume that the Senators who have charge of this bill have any objection at all to making it stronger; only let not the amendments be made to emasculate the bill, to make it mean nothing, or to make it do nothing along the lines that it has for its purpose.

In conclusion, I just want to say this: We all know what has happened in the past. We all know what may happen in the future unless something of this kind is done. I have not any doubt but that we all want the same thing. We all want, in the American system of elections, fair play—that is all. We want men elected on their merits. We want parties to prevail on their merits. We are going into a campaign at this time with the forces lined up, with capable men on both sides. Why should any Senator object? Why should any person object to a bill of this kind? Here are the issues. Let us go before the people on these issues.

You ought not to want to win unless you are right. We ought not to want to win unless we are right. The means by which the people can find out who is right and who is wrong is not by the unlimited expenditure of money, but by publicity, by debate, by talking, by arguing, by using the newspapers and the mails, by using every legitimate vehicle of argument and of publicity. Then let the great American people decide upon the record—a record made up of facts; a record open for inspection; a record open to the daylight—and fight it out on those lines. Then, no matter who wins or who loses, the people will have expressed their will; and if they have a right to express their untrammeled and unpurchased will they are entitled to have the men elected by them put into office and the measures for which they have voted put into force.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, this is a very important measure coming up for consideration in the Senate very late in the session; but, for one, I am willing to remain here and help in my humble way to perfect this bill, and write a law at this time that will prevent corrupt practices in the election of the President and Vice President of the United States and Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] raised some question about the constitutionality of this bill. There are very few bills that come up for consideration in this body but that somebody, at some time, raises the question of the constitutionality of the law that we at that time are attempting to enact. I remember, in the consideration of the child-labor bill, that lawyers on both sides of this Chamber argued for days against the constitutionality of that measure, and Members of this body voted for it, expressing at the same time their opinion that it was unconstitutional; and yet they were willing to vote for a good law, and have the matter forever settled by our Supreme Court. Just so with this bill. The time has arrived when it should be enacted into law. I believe it is constitutional. Whether it is constitutional or whether it is not is a matter that must be decided eventually by our Supreme Court and not by this body, and I am willing to do my part to place it in a form to be submitted to the Supreme Court, if necessary, that will forever settle the question as to whether or not we are to have a corrupt-practices law upon our statute books.

My good friend the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HUSTING] very naturally, as seems to be usual with my Democratic friends, reserves for the Democratic Party all the virtue and all the honesty of all the world. I believe that there have been just as many men elected in this body and in the House of Representatives by corrupt practices that were Democrats as that were Republicans. I do not believe a man's political faith is any criterion of what he will do in a corrupt way in a political campaign. We have dishonest Republicans and we have dishonest Democrats, and we have honest Republicans and honest Democrats. This law is not intended to cover Republicans or to cover Democrats, but it is intended to cover all dishonest practices, whether by one party or the other. This bill is liberal in its provisions. It affords a candidate ample opportunity for publicity, and a careful study of this measure will demonstrate that the publicity that may be obtained, with the allowance for expenditure and the privilege of printing and distributing literature, is sufficient to place before the public the claims of any candidate for office, and any man who can not be elected to an office under the provisions of this bill is not entitled to hold that office.

The Senator from Wisconsin is very fearful that there is going to be a filibuster on the Republican side. I hope he will be disappointed. The vote this morning on taking up the bill of the Senator from Oklahoma does not indicate that there is any more opposition to this bill on the Republican than on the Democratic side.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BRADY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HUSTING. I want to say to the Senator that I said I had been informed—I did not say I had any knowledge of it—that it was the purpose of several Senators on the other side to engage in a filibuster. I did not intend to include the Senator who is now speaking in that idea; but I have been told that there are some Senators getting ready to talk here, not only several hours but several days on this subject. I see some material on the desks now that seems to indicate that somebody has a long speech in his system.

Mr. BRADY. That may be quite true, Mr. President. I am quite an observing person myself, and I think I observe some indications of a filibuster on the Democratic side of this Chamber. A moment ago I think I heard the Senator from Wisconsin say something about a Democratic Senator "throwing a wrench in the proceedings" in order to delay them. You are going to find opposition on both sides of the Chamber, and you are going to find assistance on both sides of the Chamber.

Let us take what occurred this morning. There were 46 votes cast on the question of taking up the bill offered by the Senator from Oklahoma. Thirty-two votes were in favor of it and 14 against it. Nine Republicans voted for taking up the bill—a little bit over one-fourth. Five Democrats voted against taking up the bill, lacking just 2 of being one-half the votes cast against it. So there is no reason why we should talk to each other about which party is going to try the hardest to defeat this bill. Your business and mine and that of every other man who believes in honest, straightforward elections is to use his best efforts and to cooperate in every possible way in having this bill enacted into law with proper amendments. I believe it needs some amendments. I expect to offer some amendments to this bill; but if it can not be amended, rather than not have any corrupt-practices law I shall vote for the bill as reported by the committee. I am convinced, however, that there are some things we should counsel together upon and some things we should give careful consideration to and some changes we should make in order to make it a workable bill.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BRADY. I yield, with pleasure.

Mr. OWEN. I am glad to say to the Senator that I am most anxious to have the bill meet the reasonable requirements of its friends, in order that we may have a bill that is really acceptable. I understand that there may be things in this bill that are not altogether acceptable. I only ask that the amendments be offered for the purpose of perfecting the bill and enabling the bill to become a law.

Mr. BRADY. I am glad to have the Senator make that statement; and at this time I want to call the attention of the Senate to the changes that have been made in the House bill, or some differences between the two bills that are very material. The House gave careful consideration to the bill before passing it, and they decided that the law applying to Senators and Representatives should not become effective until January 1, 1917.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the Senator called attention to a provision in the House bill, as follows:

Provided, That the provisions of existing law limiting the amount that may be expended by candidates for Senator and Representative in securing nomination and election shall remain in force until January 1, 1917.

That is because the campaign has already progressed in part. I am willing to accept that as an amendment, if the Senator wishes it done, to be inserted on page 38, after line 24, and I ask that that be accepted as an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, let us understand it, Mr. President. Does the Senator think it is desirable to continue corrupt practices for a few months? Is that the idea?

Mr. OWEN. I hardly supposed the Senator was asking that question of me with a view to eliciting an answer, as to "continuing corrupt practices."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair understand. Is there objection to the adoption of that amendment?

Mr. GALLINGER. I want an explanation, first, Mr. President, before I conclude whether to object or not.

Mr. OWEN. The explanation is this: In the House bill the following language occurs:

That the provisions of existing law limiting the amount that may be expended by candidates for Senator and Representative in securing nomination and election shall remain in force until January 1, 1917.

I say that I have no objection to that going in, if Senators desire it.

Mr. GALLINGER. My inquiry was along this line: The Senator says that corrupt practices prevail in this country. That is not true in my State, I will say. The Senator says corrupt practices prevail, and yet he is willing to allow the present status to continue until the 1st of January next. If conditions are as bad as the Senator says, I do not see why the Senator should agree to that.

Mr. OWEN. I am simply, in the interest of conciliation, willing to make concessions that may promote the passage of the bill. If the Senator from New Hampshire objects to it, of course I leave that between him and the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. GALLINGER. My only point is that if conditions are such as the Senator depicts, the remedy can not be applied too soon, I should judge, from the Senator's point of view. I have a different point of view.

Mr. OWEN. I should prefer not to have it, but I am willing to concede it in order to get something.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator object to the amendment that has been proposed?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not object to that amendment if the Senator from Idaho does not. I do not think it will make any special difference whether it goes in or stays out.

Mr. BRADY. I do not object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 38, after line 24, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the provisions of existing law limiting the amount that may be expended by candidates for Senator and Representative in securing nomination and election shall remain in force until January 1, 1917.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I think it will be conceded by all parties that if there are any corrupt practices the Democratic Party has just as much of a burden to bear along those lines as the Republican Party. There is not one bit of difference as to which party is practicing corruption, if it is practiced at all.

I have no knowledge of any corrupt practices myself, and do not propose to make any such charge at this time, but I want to have enacted a bill that will be fair and equitable to all parties. This campaign is halfway through. I have heard it stated—and I want it understood that I do not say that it is true—that the reason why the Democratic Party want this bill passed at this time is because they have their campaign fund raised, and they are satisfied that the Republican Party have not their campaign fund raised, and for that reason they want this law enacted at this time. I do not say that I believe anything of that kind, but these charges are being made. We can enact a better bill by giving it careful and proper consideration and having it take effect January 1, 1917, than we can by rushing it through at this time, when the campaign is half over, for, of course, we can not enact a law that will be retroactive in effect.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BRADY. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator has just referred to the canard to the effect that the Democratic Party have their campaign funds raised. The Senator has said he does not believe that, as I understand him. If there is any question about it, it will be a very easy matter to place a limitation upon the expenditure of any such sum.

Mr. BRADY. There is no question that we can impose that limitation. But they have started this campaign, and have conducted it almost halfway through, under the old plan; and, as I have just said, we can not pass a law that will be retroactive. We have no legal way of finding out how much money has been spent up to this time. They have no system of bookkeeping. It would be almost impossible to find out where these funds come from or how they have been expended, and it would be the easiest thing in the world for either party to violate that law without being detected. I believe it would be better for us, if we enact this law, to have it take effect on January 1, 1917, and, at least, we will have made a long stride in the right direction. It will certainly cover the next general election, and I therefore offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section at the end of the bill as follows:

SEC. 22. This act shall be in force and effect on and after January 1, 1917.

Mr. BRADY. I ask that the amendment may be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered.

Mr. BRADY. I can offer this amendment consistently, for we do not have any election of United States Senator in my State this year, and there is no accusation on either side that any money is unlawfully being used in the presidential election. I offer it for the consideration of the Senate, not at this time but at a later day when the amendments are considered, and I hope the Senator from Oklahoma will see his way clear to have it adopted. But whether it is adopted or whether it is not I am going to vote for this bill. All the provisions apply now practically to Senators and Representatives. The laws of my State are much more strict than the law we are enacting here to-day, and why not let it apply to the office of President and Vice President just as well as to Senators and Representatives? For that reason I shall favor and vote for the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I do not intend to help in a filibuster against this measure. Personally, I will go as far as any Member of the Senate in passing a corrupt-practices act. In fact, I would go further than this measure goes.

I do think, however, that it is a great mistake to take up this bill at this time, for several reasons. First, the campaign is half over. The amount that each candidate for the Senate and House could spend is proposed to be changed. Some of the candidates already may have expended as much money as the pending bill would authorize them to expend, or, rather, under the law they would not be permitted to make any further expenditures before the election. Of course that would be unfair if the expenditures were for legitimate expenses.

Another thing, this bill amends the House measure. We are told that there is no quorum in the other House. Yet it is proposed that we shall send them an amended bill. I know a large number of Senators on this side are away because they were advised that this measure would not be taken up.

As was said by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY], I have heard—I do not know how much truth there is in it—that the other side, or those conducting the campaign for the Democratic administration and are trying for the reelection of President Wilson, have already raised all the money they need for this campaign.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. I have heard in one State——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CURTIS. I decline to yield now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas declines to yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I have heard that the Democratic committee has sent over $200,000 to one State already.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HUSTING] has left the Chamber. I should like to ask that Senator to go over the list of the contributions that were made four years ago—the list has been printed in the RECORD—to help out this Democratic administration and help elect Mr. Wilson President; and if he will read the list, he will not question anyone on this side of the Chamber about raising money for campaign purposes.

Mr. President, as I said, I will go further than this bill goes. I am fortunate in living in a State where the Republican State committee will ask for no contributions from the Republican national campaign committee. They will need none. The State of Kansas will give Mr. Hughes some 80,000 majority, and the Republican committee does not need help to do it. We will do it on the record, and we are willing to go before the people on the record and advocating Republican principles.

But I want to call the attention of the Senator who has charge of the bill to the fact that we already have upon the statute books five corrupt-practices acts, passed by Republican administrations. Those corrupt-practices acts, if what has been said on the other side is true, have not been enforced.

Now, what change does this bill make? The only change you make is that you include the President and the Vice President.

Mr. OWEN. No; the Senator is mistaken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield, if I am mistaken. I intended to state some others, but that is the principal change.

Mr. OWEN. The act referred to by the Senator only relates to committees having charge of two or more States and requires no publicity, much less control of individuals or individual committees inside of one State. The law is therefore worthless.

Mr. CURTIS. The committees in the States, as is known by the Senator, are State committees. The only committees that have charge and who will be compelled to report under this law are the congressional committee and the national committee—that is, the State committees do not report to Congress; they run the State's campaign.

Now, I would make this law go a little further. If I had my way about it, I would make it a crime for a Senator of the United States to use the stationery that is furnished him by the Government or to his committees to advance his campaign.

I hold in my hand—and I want it read from the desk or I will read it myself—a letter which was sent out with the letterhead printed by the Government, furnished by the Government, to the number, I am told, of over 70,000 under the frank of a Senator. I should like to have that letter read in my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., July 3, 1916.

MY DEAR FRIEND AND CONSTITUENT: It is but proper that I should render to the people of Arizona some account of my record as United States Senator.

The departmental work has been enormously heavy (usual regarding a new State), but none of it has been neglected. Every letter received by me requiring an answer has been promptly answered and the information furnished as soon as the same could be obtained.

Within twenty days after entering the Senate I discovered that the phrase "of all the national forests within said State, the area" (referring to Arizona) was unfortunately omitted from section 24 of the enabling act, although the phrase appeared in section 6 of said act wherein it referred to New Mexico. Believing it was the intention of Congress to apply the same rule to both Arizona and New Mexico with regard to the proportionate amount to be paid to each State to the credit of the common-school fund by reason of school lands in national forests, I obtained departmental construction of said section 24, which results in securing $28,000 additional annually for the Arizona common-school fund.

Within three months after entering the Senate the bill establishing a parcel post was considered, and I made one of the principal arguments in favor of the constitutionality of the same.

As evidence of my vigilance, take for example the first session of the present Congress. The whole number of bills introduced to date in the Senate is 6,700; of these bills 1,412 have passed the Senate, or one in every 4.1. Of these bills I introduced 42 and have passed 19 of them through the Senate, or 1 in every 2. The average number of bills passed by each Senator in a long session of Congress is 14, and it will be observed that I have passed 19.

I have not attempted to be prominent in debate, but have always addressed the Senate when I could add any new fact or throw any light on the subject under discussion. The power and opportunity to render useful service in the Senate depends largely upon the committee assignments a Senator may secure. No other Senator has more important committee assignments than I. After twenty-two months' service I was made chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, which annually appropriates over ten millions of dollars. I am the only Senator of whom I have any knowledge who has been chosen chairman of one of the important appropriation committees after so short a service. I am the ranking member—that is, I am next to the chairman—of the Committee on Mines and Mining, a committee extremely important to our mining States. I am a member of the Committee on the Judiciary. This is the law committee and is regarded by many as the most important committee of the Senate, for it deals with every question of law and constitutional limitation that may arise in the Senate. As a member of the Judiciary Committee, I favorably reported my colleague's bill requiring sessions of our Federal court twice a year at Globe, Tucson, Prescott, and Phoenix. My membership on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has enabled me to secure favorable action on the following: A bill appropriating $110,000 for a site and Federal building at Nogales; a bill appropriating $100,000 for a Federal building in Douglas; a bill appropriating $100,000 for a Federal building in Globe; a bill appropriating $7,500 for a site and $100,000 for a Federal building in Prescott; and a bill appropriating $25,000 for a site for a Federal building in Bisbee, and I have to-day favorably reported my colleague's bill appropriating $325,000 for a Federal building in Tucson.

I am also a member of the Committee on the Census; Expenditures in the Interior Department; Cuban Relations; and recently have been chosen a member of the Committee on Education and Labor.

I submit herewith a statement as to my votes upon a few of the important questions, which will serve as an index as to my general attitude upon public questions:

I voted for woman suffrage; for prohibition in the District of Columbia; for a system of Government railroads in Alaska; for the income tax; for an inheritance tax; for rural credits; for tariff commission; for the bill prohibiting child labor; for the Webb-Kenyon-Sheppard law; for the bill providing Federal aid to good roads, and under this wholesome good-roads law Arizona will receive for her roads within the next five years from the Federal Government $1,077,000. In addition thereto Arizona will also receive $100,000 per year for the next ten years for the construction of roads within national forests in Arizona, and this total of $2,077,000 will be in addition to the $112,690 Arizona is now annually receiving on account of national forests. I voted for the bill creating a Bureau of Markets; for the resolution proposing to abolish secret sessions of the Senate; for authorizing the Department of Agriculture to study and report upon methods promoting cooperation among farmers; for the bill limiting campaign contributions; for the resolution investigating contributions made in previous campaigns; for establishing the new currency bill and financial system, the result of which law has been to deprive Wall Street of the control of the money market and to provide a currency sufficiently elastic to meet the requirements of our trade at all times. I voted to expel Senator Lorimer because I believed it was proved that bribery and corruption had been used in procuring his election. I voted to convict Judge Archbald because I believed the evidence disclosed that he had been guilty of corrupt misconduct on the Federal bench.

I voted for the Federal Trade Commission; for freedom for the Filipino people; for extension of pure-food and meat-inspection acts; for academic and vocational education for men in the Army and Navy; for abolishing unfair and cutthroat competition; for requiring all contractors and subcontractors doing work for the National Government to observe the eight-hour day; for eight hours per day for all post-office clerks, letter carriers, and employees in the railway post offices; for the bill amending and strengthening the Bureau of Mines act, thereby tending to conserve the health and safety of metalliferous and coal miners; for compensation of persons injured in Government employ; for the physical valuation of steam railroads and express companies; for the bill to develop rescue work in the Bureau of Mines; for the Children's Bureau; and for extending the right of petition to Government employees.

I voted repeatedly against measures which were designed to injure and hamper the parcel post in the interest of the express companies. I strongly opposed the pernicious practice of government by injunction in labor disputes, and in the Senate repeatedly denounced the arbitrary ex parte orders issued by some Federal judges against workingmen.

As a member of the Judiciary Committee, I assisted in framing and passing the Clayton antitrust bill, which, among other things, declares that the labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce, prohibits arbitrary ex parte injunctions against workingmen and guarantees the right of trial by jury in all cases of alleged contempt committed outside the presence of the court.

I voted for the creation of a Commission on Industrial Relations. This commission held hearings, took testimony, and made its final report in 1915. An attempt was made to prevent the publication of the report, whereupon I introduced and passed a resolution providing for the printing of one hundred thousand copies of the report and ten thousand copies of the testimony. I introduced and passed the resolution providing for the investigation of the labor troubles in Michigan. I voted in favor of the seaman's bill, the effect of which was to relieve American seamen from an odious slavery.

I led the fight in behalf of the confirmation of Louis D. Brandeis to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. I favored Federal aid to indigent tubercular patients; election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people; rigid and close inspection of all imported meats; the bill to require the installation of safety devices on all railroads doing interstate business, which greatly diminishes the possibility of wrecks; and the bill proposing to acquire some Government ships for carrying our over-seas trade.

After three years' work on my part the principles of my bill proposing to erect a Government armor-plate factory were enacted into law, and by virtue of this legislation the Government will save upward of one million dollars annually on armor plate alone. I delivered the first speech made in the Senate showing the necessity for a Government plant for the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen in order to supply our American farmers with sufficient fertilizers and our Government with nitric acid for making explosives.

I have passed a bill appropriating $50,000 for a fish-cultural station in Arizona and many bills not of a public nature but for the relief of citizens having just claims against the Government.

As chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs I reported the appropriation bill of May 15, 1914, containing items aggregating $606,000 to be disbursed in Arizona; on March 9, 1916, I reported the Indian appropriation bill containing items aggregating $688,000 to be disbursed in Arizona. Among the principal Arizona items in the 1916 bill are two items of $75,000 each for beginning the construction of diversion dams for diverting water from the Gila River near Sacaton and above Florence. During my term of service as a member and as chairman of the Indian Committee $153,300 have been appropriated for the construction of bridges in Arizona.

I have made it a special object to assist in securing favorable legislation for homesteaders.

At my suggestion and request, the Secretary of the Interior set apart $3,500 for the purpose of exploring for artesian water in Mohave County.

I have introduced and am advocating a bill authorizing prospecting and mining on Indian reservations. I am also advocating legislation proposing appropriations to construct roads within Indian reservations. To me it seems but just that the Federal Government should pay the expenses of constructing such roads, for the Government withholds these large tracts of land from settlers in the State. I have also favored the opening to our settlers of such Indian reservations and national forests as were not actually required for Indian and forestry purposes. I have favored appropriations for the eradication of loco weed, foot-and-mouth disease, and for the destruction of predatory animals.

In the matter of raising revenue to pay the expenses of the Federal Government I have especially urged the graduated income tax, an inheritance tax, and excise taxes on arms and ammunition manufactured for shipment to foreign countries, for, in my opinion, the above methods of taxation are equitable and draw heaviest upon those persons most able to bear the burden and lightest upon those least able.

I have constantly cooperated with my colleague, Senator SMITH, who is chairman of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, and Representative HAYDEN in efforts to secure proper relief for the water users under the Salt River and Yuma projects. I have made continual and vehement demands that sufficient troops be kept on the border to protect the lives and property of our citizens, and that all raiding bandits and outlaws be apprehended and speedily punished.

Here I must stop; this letter would prove tedious to you were I to say more, and I will conclude by stating that I have served with industry and with an earnest desire to promote your welfare.

Very respectfully, yours,

HENRY F. ASHURST.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I do not believe there is another Senator in this body who has had printed upon the Government stationery 50,000 letters of that kind and sent them out under a frank. I do not believe a Senator should do it. More than that, if a Senator does do it it comes with bad grace for him to stand in his place and criticize the conduct of anyone on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. CURTIS. I will yield for a question.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It is not particularly a question I wanted to ask, but I should like to suggest the common propriety and the courtesy in this sort of an assault, and it should not be made in the absence of my colleague.

Mr. CURTIS. It is not an assault. It is a statement of facts.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I know nothing about it one way or another; but I would certainly have given notice to the Senator from Kansas if I had had anything to put in the RECORD.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Arizona was here taking part in this debate, and I thought he was about the Chamber when I began. I have been here on the floor all the time.

Mr. ASHURST entered the Chamber.

Mr. CURTIS. He is here now. In addition to having the letter read, I ask that this estimate as to what the letter cost be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

AUGUST 30, 1916.

I hereby make the following estimate on 50,000 five-page circular letters, according to the specifications required to conform to the samples submitted. The sheet of the sample is of a different quality than the four follow sheets, it being of high-grade bond that would cost wholesale about 21½ cents per pound laid down in Phoenix, 500 pounds being required for the job. The four follow sheets are of a cheaper grade of bond, costing about 13½ cents per pound wholesale laid down in Phoenix, and 2,000 pounds being required.

For printing the letterhead on the top sheet, which has been done at a separate operation on the sample	$225.50
For the stock and printing of 50,000 top letter sheets	237.85
For stock and printing the four follow sheets	405.30
For gathering the five sheets, 250,000 pieces, making two folds and inserting letters in envelopes	180.00
For the stock and printing on 50,000 No. 10 envelopes	217.08
Making a total of	1,062.73

The above does not include the addressing of the envelopes.

F. O. ADAMS,
Superintendent Arizona Republican Job Department.

Added to the above is an item of $75 for addressing (by hand) the envelopes, and for stamps, $1,000.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator if the Post Office Department has not ruled that such a letter is frankable?

Mr. CURTIS. They have.

Mr. KENYON. Why is the Senator from Arizona selected for criticism?

Mr. CURTIS. I stated to the committee that if I had charge of this measure I would amend it so as to prohibit the use of the letterheads of a committee, and I would also amend the law so as to make such matter unfrankable. The letternead submitted is clearly a committee letterhead.

Mr. OWEN. I will say——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. CURTIS. For a question.

Mr. OWEN. I will accept an amendment of that sort.

Mr. CURTIS. There will be some more amendments suggested by me.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. OWEN. If it does not weaken the bill, I think I would accept it.

Mr. GALLINGER. If I understand the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], the Post Office Department has ruled that this is a document which can be properly sent under the frank of a Senator. Am I right?

Mr. KENYON. I asked the question——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. I asked the question of the Senator from Kansas and he stated that the department had so ruled.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a most extraordinary ruling, if it has been done.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Kansas has yielded to me. It is a most extraordinary ruling. I have not been in the habit of criticizing the departments of the Government; I have not been in the habit of criticizing the President, as every Senator knows; but I have a letter here that I feel constrained to read and call attention to the use that is being made of the post offices of the Government at the present time. It is a letter from the Democratic national committee, the treasurer of whom is Mr. Wilbur W. Marsh. The officers of this committee are Vance C. McCormick, chairman; Homer S. Cummings, vice chairman; Wilbur W. Marsh, treasurer; and Henry Morgenthau, chairman finance committee:

DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL COMMITTEE,
OFFICE OF TREASURER,
HEADQUARTERS, 30 EAST FORTY-SECOND STREET,
New York, August 29, 1916.

This letter, Mr. President, was written to a man whom Mr. Marsh supposed was a Democratic postmaster. He happened to be the Republican postmaster who was superseded some months ago. Mr. Marsh had not acquainted himself with that fact. He writes to the man supposing that he is the postmaster at the present time:

DEAR SIR: I wrote you—

The man to whom the letter was written is a citizen of New Hampshire—

I wrote you some days ago asking you to supply me with the names and occupations of five to seven of the best Democrats in your town available to serve as a local branch of the Democratic national committee.

As yet I have not received a reply to that request. Possibly you have been away. Possibly you put my letter aside, expecting to answer it later. Possibly you are doubtful about whether you should answer it.

Mr. Marsh had a doubt in his mind whether it was advisable to use the postmasters for this political purpose.

Whatever the reason, the fact remains that our failure to receive your reply is holding us back. It is putting an obstruction on the track. It is helping the enemy, not us.

Please answer my letter now. Don't put it off another day. If for any reason you feel that you can not conscientiously comply with my request, a prompt reply either way will be appreciated. It is now a good many days since my letter was mailed, and your delay is very discouraging. I assure you it is proper for you to comply—

He thought it over after he had written the other sentence, and concluded that it was proper to use the post offices of the country for political purposes—

I trust you are really with us.

Sincerely, yours, WILBUR W. MARSH, Treasurer.

Mr. President, I want to say that if the Postmaster General is permitting the post offices to be used in that way in this country, it is not remarkable that he ruled that the document which has been read could properly be sent out under a frank, which we all know ought not to have been done.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does the Senator contend——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield for a question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish to ask a question of the Senator from New Hampshire. Does the Senator contend that that was sent out under the frank of any Senator?

Mr. GALLINGER. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is there anything improper in the letter itself?

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Democratic Party thinks that the post offices of the country should be made political headquarters, there is something objectionable; if there is not, it is not so.

Mr. SHAFROTH. He was asking for information. Is there anything wrong in asking for information as to five persons who might——

Mr. GALLINGER. He asked for information from a Democrat, as he supposed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The fact that he was a Republican does not make him immune from any letters that might be written and questions that might be asked.

Mr. GALLINGER. We have heard a great deal about political activity, and we have been criticized a great deal about it. I simply want to say if this is a proper thing to do the post offices of the country can be used for any political purpose whatsoever.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does the Senator claim that the Postmaster General is a party to it in any way?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not claim that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It seems to me there is nothing in the point the Senator makes.

Mr. GALLINGER. But inasmuch as he ruled that that extraordinary letter was frankable, I have no doubt he would think it proper to use the post offices for a purpose that the Democratic national chairman thinks would be of use, that is all.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CURTIS. For a question.

Mr. STONE. I simply want to inquire whether I understood the Senator from New Hampshire correctly when I understood him to say that the Postmaster General has ruled that the letter he read was frankable?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not the letter that I read, but the letter the Senator from Kansas had read. It is said that he ruled it was frankable.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kansas yield to me?

Mr. CURTIS. For a question.

Mr. ASHURST. I was called from the Chamber about 20 minutes ago by a constituent over at the Senate Office Building, and I have just returned. I have been told that my esteemed friend the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] had very generously read a letter purporting to have been written by me. I will ask if the Senator was kind enough to read it all?

Mr. CURTIS. I had it all read. I thought it was used in violation of the franking privilege notwithstanding the ruling of the department, and that it ought to be read. It is now in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and the Senator can take it from the RECORD.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will yield to me, I will state to him that so far as his charge that this letter was in violation of the franking privilege is concerned, the Senator exhibits sweetbreads for brains when he makes such a charge.

If the Senator will pardon me, I will state that before I prepared the letter I asked what was the custom for the last 40 years among Senators and Representatives. I was told that they send out under their frank various material, and I could prepare, if I wished to frank it, anything whatever in the way of a communication to any person, and I prepared the same.

I then took it to the Postmaster General, and he read it and said it was frankable, and he referred me to Gen. Dockery. The general after complimenting me on the letter said, "It is the first and only letter submitted for a long time that is all frankable." The general's word goes with me, but in this life I must have things in writing. So I said to the general, "Will you kindly write a letter stating that the letter is frankable, because I have been very anxious in behalf of my constituents, and the American people in general, and I intend that my constituents shall have an accounting in the way as to how I have voted. I can not send them all copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD."

So in the letter which the Senator from Kansas has read, and which has gone into the RECORD, he has anticipated me, because I had prepared and sent to the Printing Office in advance a speech which I intended to make, and I was going to put the same in the RECORD either to-morrow or this afternoon, containing this letter. The Senator has relieved me, but I think along with it should go a letter from Gen. Dockery, and I ask that it be read at this time.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator can read it.

Mr. ASHURST. The poison which the Senator has intended and has vainly attempted to inject into the discussion will have no lodgment.

I think, if the Senator wishes to be fair in this discussion, he will now permit the letter from Gen. Dockery to me, stating that the whole thing was frankable, to go with his statement.

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection to the reading of the letter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

[In your reply refer to C. D. No. 150051.]

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
THIRD ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
DIVISION OF CLASSIFICATION,
Washington, July 6, 1916.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring to your call to-day, submitting a draft of a circular letter, a copy of which is inclosed, which it is your desire to send to your constituents and inquiring whether it is frankable, I have to say that a careful examination of the circular shows that it is upon official business, and therefore frankable under the law.

Yours, very truly,

A. M. DOCKERY,
Third Assistant Postmaster General.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., July 3, 1916.

MY DEAR FRIEND AND CONSTITUENT: It is but proper that I should render to the people of Arizona some account of my record as United States Senator.

The departmental work has been enormously heavy (usual regarding a new State), but none of it has been neglected. Every letter received by me requiring an answer has been promptly answered and the information furnished as soon as the same could be obtained.

Within 20 days after entering the Senate I discovered that the phrase "of all the national forests within said State, the area" (referring to Arizona) was unfortunately omitted from section 24 of the enabling act, although the phrase appeared in section 6 of said act, wherein it referred to New Mexico. Believing it was the intention of Congress to apply the same rule to both Arizona and New Mexico with regard to the proportionate amount to be paid to each State to the credit of the common school fund by reason of school lands in national forests, I obtained departmental construction of said section 24, which results in securing $28,000 additional annually for the Arizona common school fund.

Within three months after entering the Senate the bill establishing a parcel post was considered, and I made one of the principal arguments in favor of the constitutionality of the same.

As evidence of my vigilance, take, for example, the first session of the present Congress. The whole number of bills introduced to date in the Senate is 6,700; of these bills 1,412 have passed the Senate, or 1 in every 4.1. Of these bills I introduced 42, and have passed 19 of them through the Senate, or 1 in every 2. The average number of bills passed by each Senator in a long session of Congress is 14, and it will be observed that I have passed 19.

I have not attempted to be prominent in debate, but have always addressed the Senate when I could add any new fact or throw any light on the subject under discussion. The power and opportunity to render useful service in the Senate depends largely upon the committee assignments a Senator may secure. No other Senator has more important committee assignments than I. After 22 months' service I was made chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, which annually appropriates over ten millions of dollars. I am the only Senator of whom I have any knowledge who has been chosen chairman of one of the important appropriation committees after so short a service. I am the ranking member; that is, I am next to the chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining, a committee extremely important to our mining States. I am a member of the Committee on the Judiciary. This is the law committee, and is regarded by many as the most important committee of the Senate, for it deals with every question of law and constitutional limitation that may arise in the Senate. As a member of the Judiciary Committee, I favorably reported my colleague's bill requiring sessions of our Federal court twice a year at Globe, Tucson, Prescott, and Phoenix. My membership on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has enabled me to secure favorable action on the following: A bill appropriating $110,000 for a site and Federal building at Nogales; a bill appropriating $100,000 for a Federal building in Douglas; a bill appropriating $100,000 for a Federal building in Globe; a bill appropriating $7,500 for a site and $100,000 for a Federal building in Prescott; and a bill appropriating $25,000 for a site for a Federal building in Bisbee; and I have to-day favorably reported my colleague's bill appropriating $325,000 for a Federal building in Tucson.

I am also a member of the Committee on the Census, Expenditures in the Interior Department, Cuban Relations, and recently have been chosen a member of the Committee on Education and Labor.

I submit herewith a statement as to my votes upon a few of the important questions, which will serve as an index as to my general attitude upon public questions:

I voted for woman suffrage, for prohibition in the District of Columbia, for a system of Government railroads in Alaska, for the income tax, for an inheritance tax, for rural credits, for Tariff Commission, for the bill prohibiting child labor, for the Webb-Kenyon-Sheppard law, for the bill providing Federal aid to good roads, and under this wholesome good-roads law Arizona will receive for her roads within the next five years from the Federal Government $1,077,000. In addition thereto Arizona will also receive $100,000 per year for the next 10 years for the construction of roads within national forests in Arizona, and this total of $2,077,000 will be in addition to the $112,690 Arizona is now annually receiving on account of national forests. I voted for the bill creating a Bureau of Markets, for the resolution proposing to abolish secret sessions of the Senate, for authorizing the Department of Agriculture to study and report upon methods promoting cooperation among farmers, for the bill limiting campaign contributions, for the resolution investigating contributions made in previous campaigns, for establishing the new currency bill and financial system, the result of which law has been to deprive Wall Street of the control of the money market, and to provide a currency sufficiently elastic to meet the requirements of our trade at all times. I voted to expel Senator Lorimer because I believed it was proved that bribery and corruption had been used in procuring his election. I voted to convict Judge Archbald because I believed the evidence disclosed that he had been guilty of corrupt misconduct on the Federal bench.

I voted for the Federal Trade Commission; for freedom for the Filipino people; for extension of pure-food and meat-inspection acts; for academic and vocational education for men in the Army and Navy; for abolishing unfair and cut-throat competition; for requiring all contractors and subcontractors doing work for the National Government to observe the eight-hour day; for eight-hours per day for all post-office clerks, letter carriers, and employees in the railway post offices; for the bill amending and strengthening the Bureau of Mines act, thereby tending to conserve the health and safety of metalliferous and coal miners; for compensation of persons injured in Government employ; for the physical valuation of steam railroads and express companies; for the bill to develop rescue work in the Bureau of Mines; for the childrens' bureau, and for extending the right of petition to Government employees.

I voted repeatedly against measures which were designed to injure and bamper the parcel post, in the interest of the express companies. I strongly opposed the pernicious practice of Government by injunction in labor disputes, and in the Senate repeatedly denounced the arbitrary ex parte orders issued by some Federal judges against working men.

As a member of the Judiciary Committee I assisted in framing and passing the Clayton antitrust bill, which, among other things, declares that the labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce, prohibits arbitrary ex parte injunctions against working men and guarantees the right of trial by jury in all cases of alleged contempt committed outside the presence of the court.

the printing of 100,000 copies of the report and 10,000 copies of the testimony. I introduced and passed the resolution providing for the investigation of the labor troubles in Michigan. I voted in favor of the seaman's bill the effect of which was to relieve American seamen from an odious slavery.

I led the fight in behalf of the confirmation of Louis D. Brandeis to be associated justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. I favored Federal aid to indigent tubercular patients; election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people; rigid and close inspection of all imported meats; the bill to require the installation of safety devices on all railroads doing interstate business, which greatly diminishes the possibility of wrecks; and the bill proposing to acquire some Government ships for carrying our overseas trade.

After three years' work on my part the principles of my bill proposing to erect a Government armor-plate factory were enacted into law, and by virtue of this legislation the Government will save upward of $1,000,000 annually on armor plate alone. I delivered the first speech made in the Senate showing the necessity for a Government plant for the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen in order to supply our American farmers with sufficient fertilizers and our Government with nitric acid for making explosives.

I have passed a bill appropriating $50,000 for a fish-cultural station in Arizona and many bills not of a public nature but for the relief of citizens having just claims against the Government.

As chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs I reported the appropriation bill of May 15, 1914, containing items aggregating $600,000 to be disbursed in Arizona; on March 9, 1916, I reported the Indian appropriation bill containing items aggregating $688,000 to be disbursed in Arizona. I have made continual and vehement demands that sufficient troops be kept on the border to protect the lives and property of our citizens, and that all raiding bandits and outlaws be apprehended and speedily punished.

Here I must stop; this letter would prove tedious to you were I to say more, and I will conclude by stating that I have served with industry and with an earnest desire to promote your welfare.

Very respectfully yours

HENRY F. ASHURST.

Mr. CURTIS. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield to me for just one more question?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield for a question, certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. I should say for a statement, not a question.

I think I should make the statement that I paid, of course, for the printing of this letter some $146, and made my return; I have filed it, in accordance with the law, and the Senator will find it on file with the Secretary of the Senate, wherein I say for printing this letter, so much money—$146, I believe.

As to the paper, I did what the Senator from Kansas does and has done, and what every other Senator here does.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, right there I want to say that the Senator from Arizona did not do what the Senator from Kansas has done. When the Senator from Kansas in his campaign four years ago desired to go before his people, he paid the postage on every letter he sent out; he paid for every letterhead that was printed; and paid for every bit of paper on which the letters were written. That is the way the Republicans carry on their campaigns.

Mr. ASHURST. I am very glad to hear that. It is very gratifying to learn that the Senator has in some way paid for something.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I merely want to make a further statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield further?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield only for a question.

Mr. JONES. I merely want to make a statement in connection with the statement made by the Senator from Arizona. That Senator has made his statement very broad.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield; and, if so, to whom?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield only for a question, and not for an argument. I wish to finish my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas yields to the Senator from Washington for a question.

Mr. JONES. I have no question to ask. I simply want to say that the statement made by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] is not correct, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Arizona came in I had stated that this letter had been held by the department to be frankable.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator from Kansas for the statement of facts. I did not know the Senator had so stated.

Mr. CURTIS. I simply questioned the good judgment of the Postmaster General, and I think it is evident that not only the Postmaster General but every Cabinet officer of this administration is doing everything he can to stretch the law to help reelect Mr. Wilson as President of the United States. Reports have come to me within the last two weeks that the administration are sending men out over the country to the larger post offices and calling in the clerks to talk efficiency, and instead of talking efficiency they talk politics from the time they meet until they adjourn, and nothing is said about efficiency.

The Senator said that he was glad that I had paid for something. I am sorry I can not return the compliment. I have been in the Senate quite a time, and every time the question has come up as to the franking privilege or the using of the telegraph frank I have noticed that the Senator from Arizona has always taken advantage of his right to frank, and that his right to do so has even been questioned heretofore. I desire, in passing, to call the Senator's attention to the RECORD of July 18, 1913, in which former Senator Bristow of Kansas stated:

> Mr. BRISTOW. I have the floor. I want to say to the Senator from Arizona, who has been so kind as to bring up some of the old political campaign documents that were circulated in Kansas years ago, that since I have been a Member of this body I have not expended a hundred dollars a day of the funds of the United States to carry private telegrams to my State on personal political business.
> Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Kansas has not been in touch with his constituents as much as his duty would require.
> Mr. BRISTOW. Not by carrying on private correspondence by telegraph when it should have been by letter and carried at his own expense.

The Senator from Arizona has never questioned the statement that he had used his telegram frank to that extent. He may represent a new State——

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator from Kansas yield to me right there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield for a question.

Mr. ASHURST. I hardly wish to ask a question, but I wish to have a short statement read.

Mr. CURTIS. I decline to yield to have a statement read. The Senator can put it in in his own time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas declines to yield.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator from Kansas will pardon me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas declines to yield.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Arizona may pay his own expenses, so far as public business is concerned, but I doubt if he can make his constituents in Arizona believe that he was required to send $100 worth of telegrams in one day on official business.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kansas yield to me?

Mr. CURTIS. For a question; yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. What I want to say to the Senator is that I am a member of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and the question of the payment of these bills came before that committee. We examined the communication which the Senator from Arizona had sent forth. It related to the appointment of a judge of the United States court, and he felt that there ought to be an expression upon the part of the people as to who should be recommended to him, as Senator, for the purpose of enabling him to make the proper recommendation to the President of the United States. In my judgment, unquestionably the telegrams were sent on official business.

Mr. CURTIS. I am glad to hear this long-delayed statement of the Senator from Colorado. When the case was pending before the Senate the Senator from Colorado was a Member of this body, and he did not then stand in his place and question the statement that was made by the former Senator from Kansas, Mr. Bristow. Mr. Bristow was then a Member of the Senate, and, as this record shows, he challenged the production of the record. He was also a member of the very committee to which the Senator from Colorado has referred. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] might amend this proposed law further and make it a crime to "doctor" records.

I did not intend to make a speech on this question, and perhaps should not have done so but for the fact that Senators on the other side of the Chamber questioned the sincerity of Senators on this side. It is claimed that you have raised your money for the campaign and you have distributed it. Many of your men now in office, whom we Republicans hope to defeat in November—some 14 Senators in this body—were candidates for renomination without opposition, had no money to spend, or were required to spend but little. Their opponents have made hard campaigns, sometimes there being three and four candidates for the nomination, and they have already expended in some cases more than the bill of the Senator from Oklahoma authorizes. By this measure you give the sitting Member a great advantage.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield for a question.

Mr. OWEN. I ask the Senator from Kansas to make a bill of particulars.

Mr. CURTIS. It would take too long.

Mr. OWEN. Then, take a part of the time to do that, if you please.

Mr. CURTIS. We hope to adjourn to-morrow; but if the Senator wants me to do so I will read some of the contributions to the Democratic Party in the last campaign. The Senator from Wisconsin said the only way we could judge of the future was by the past. That is true. The law now requires that the national committees shall make a report of contributions. Will the Senator kindly tell the Senate, in his time, why John L. De Saulles, of New York, now minister to Uruguay, gave $5,000 to the Democratic campaign committee?

Mr. OWEN. Well, Mr. President, this bill, I think, will meet contingencies of that sort.

Mr. CURTIS. If you want to make it a crime to appoint a man to office who has contributed to your campaign funds, why do you not prepare such a measure?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I should be glad to make some kind of a reduction, at least.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. James W. Gerard, ambassador to Germany, contributed $13,500. They must have come back to him the second time. Mr. Thomas D. Jones contributed $10,000, and then declined an appointment to the Federal Reserve Board. Later he contributed $10,500 more. Does the Senator in charge of this bill question that he made those contributions?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, this bill——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. CURTIS. I only yield for a question. Let the Senator explain in his own time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas declines to yield, except for a question.

Mr. OWEN. I will ask the Senator——

Mr. CURTIS. William F. McCombs, of New York——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield for a question?

Mr. CURTIS. I decline to yield, except for a question.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to ask the Senator whether or not he knows it to be a fact that on January 6, 1915, the statement was made by Mr. A. Mitchell Palmer that $750,000 was spent in Pennsylvania?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not know what Mr. A. Mitchell Palmer said. The reports from the Secretary's office will show. That is another reason——

Mr. OWEN. No; they do not show, unhappily.

Mr. CURTIS. They ought to show.

Mr. OWEN. They do not and ought not under the law, because the law does not provide that any showing shall be made under those circumstances. That is what we are trying to provide for now. We are trying to make these public matters.

Mr. CURTIS. The law now requires a showing to be made by the national committees of every dollar contributed. The law now requires that reports be made by the congressional committees and by individuals who expend money in behalf of a candidate for the Senate or House; the law now requires a showing to be made by every candidate for Congress; the law now requires a showing to be made by every candidate for the United States Senate. That is what the law now requires.

Mr. OWEN. The present law leaves the door wide open for Bill Jones or Tom Smith to spend a million dollars without reporting it.

Mr. CURTIS. If that is the case, it is all spent on your side.

Mr. OWEN. We have not that much on this side.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kansas permit me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CURTIS. I have some more very interesting matter here.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator from Oklahoma has referred to Pennsylvania.

Mr. CURTIS. I will yield to the Senator on that account.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. Palmer was making a partisan statement without any affidavit, and I want to assure the Senator from Oklahoma that I have much more creditable information concerning the expenditure of several hundred thousand dollars in his behalf in his own contest for reelection in the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I will be glad to have the Senator present, or, if he will permit me, I will present for the RECORD the statement of Mr. A. Mitchell Palmer.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I do not know that we should overlook any of these gentlemen who were so liberal. The Senator would have us believe that they do not intend to contribute now or have not already contributed. I find here Charles R. Crane, of Chicago, who was offered the position of ambassador to Russia, but declined, gave the small sum of $40,000. Charles R. Crane contributed another $10,000, making $50,000. That is one-eighth of all that this proposed law would permit to be expended for the election of a President. Mr. Morgenthau, of New York, formerly ambassador to Turkey, contributed $10,000 and a few days later $20,000 more. I understand he is now a member of the Democratic national committee. I do not know how much he put up when he was selected, but probably he was liberal. Mr. Penfield, of Germantown, Pa., by the way, and now ambassador to Austria, contributed $10,000. There must have been a little money spent in Pennsylvania on the other side. Mr. Penfield later contributed $12,000 more. But why go on? Here [exhibiting] is the list.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield for a question.

Mr. OWEN. I ask the Senator to give a bill of particulars. The large expenditures of which he is now speaking are matters of public record and have long been on file. Everybody knows about them; and it is a good thing that these matters are made public; but I should like the Senator, who charges that the Democrats have raised a large amount and have been expending large amounts and says he knows about it—I should like him to state the facts.

Mr. CURTIS. I said, as was stated by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY], that it has already been circulated in the newspapers——

Mr. OWEN. Circulated on the other side of the Chamber, Mr. President.

Mr. CURTIS. And it is current comment that the Democratic administration, through the Secretary of the Treasury and other Cabinet officers, have raised all the money they need for the coming campaign. It has also been stated that in one State $200,000 has been sent by the Democratic organization or committee to help elect two United States Senators.

Mr. OWEN. I ask the Senator for the particulars.

Mr. CURTIS. Well, now, if the Senator desires particulars, I may tell him something about the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. OWEN. That is a very convenient way not to answer.

Mr. CURTIS. Well, if the Senator wants to know it, I question the sincerity of Senators upon the other side of the Chamber. They come here and talk about being opposed to corruption and the use of money in elections; they talk about the violation of the law; and the very men who talk the loudest have been at best near the edge. I remember on one occasion when I was down in the State of the Senator from Oklahoma, in the town of Guthrie, he then being a candidate for Senator, I was told that in the town of Guthrie you could trace the Senator, then a candidate, by the checks he had given out. I do not know whether or not that was true; but I have just as much right to state that and to circulate it, and more right, because it came to me the day after the Senator left Guthrie, than Senators on the other side have a right to charge corruption and the improper use of money upon this side. If the other side wants a corrupt-practices measure passed, withdraw the notice that Congress will adjourn to-morrow.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kansas permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator from Kansas has made a very interesting statement of the close relation between officeholding and campaign contributions. I want to call his attention to the fact the books are being kept well balanced and up to date. Abram I. Elkus contributed $12,500 to the Wilson campaign, and was appointed minister to Turkey on July 18, 1916. His reward was a little belated, but he got it finally, none the less.

Mr. CURTIS. If Senators on the other side desire to pass this measure, call back a quorum in the other House, withdraw the notice that you are going to adjourn to-morrow, and let us take up this measure and perfect it. I will vote for just as stringent a corrupt practices act as any Senator upon the other side of the Chamber. As I said a few moments ago, out in my section of the country we do not care how strong such a law is made. We are asking for no contributions from the national committee; no big slush fund will be used there. We are ready to go as far as the Senator from Oklahoma; but even the Senator, with all of his haste—and he has been here only about a couple of weeks since returning from a visit to a summer resort—in trying to force this measure through now admits that it is very defective and does not apply, he says, to presidential electors, although they elect the President and Vice President of the United States. Now he wants the bill amended so as to include them.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CURTIS. I yield.

Mr. PENROSE. It is very interesting to note, in connection with the remarks of the Senator from Kansas, that Cleveland H. Dodge gave $85,800 to the Wilson campaign fund.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not $85,000, did he?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; $85,800, which amounts to nearly one-fourth of the whole sum authorized to be used under this bill. That was a contribution not for the election but for the prenomination campaign of Woodrow Wilson, and in order, I presume, to stimulate "the uplift."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield for a question.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question while he is on the floor.

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield for that purpose?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield for a question.

Mr. THOMAS. I will ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if he will state the contributions of Ambassadors Herrick and Reid to the Taft campaign in 1908? He must know what they were.

Mr. PENROSE. They did not have enough money in the Taft campaign to pay their printing bills.

Mr. THOMAS. That is about as accurate as many of the statements which the Senator has made upon this floor in the last few days.

Mr. PENROSE. I am quoting an official document, and I say that Cleveland H. Dodge gave over $85,000 to the Wilson prenomination campaign.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, in conclusion I want to say again that, so far as I am personally concerned, I am willing to vote for a corrupt-practices act. You can not make it too strong for me, and I think it ought to include and apply to some of the practices of Senators upon this floor. If the Post Office Department will hold that an article of self-laudation that a Senator sends out for his own campaign purposes and to help him in his effort to secure reelection or renomination is frankable, then the Congress ought to put its stamp of condemnation upon that practice. If it is lawful for the chairman of a committee to have printed at Government expense 50,000 or 100,000 of the committee letterheads and use them in his campaign, then there should be brought in a bill making such acts unlawful. Every candidate for election or reelection should pay the expenses of his campaign and take nothing out of the Treasury of the Government or abuse the rights of a Senator. The Senator from Oklahoma now admits that one provision of his bill is wrong.

Mr. OWEN. Oh, no; Mr. President, I have not admitted anything of the sort.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator has already amended it, and has said——

Mr. OWEN. Oh, no; I simply was willing to accept an amendment in order to conciliate some of the opposition to the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Is the Senator so anxious to get this measure through that he will put any old thing in it?

Mr. OWEN. Well, it was not "any old thing" quite; it was——

Mr. CURTIS. Why does not the Senator stand for his own bill?

Mr. OWEN. The amendment came from one of the Senator's colleagues. He requested it, and I yielded to it in order to make progress.

Mr. CURTIS. Well, the Senator admits it must have been a proper request, or he would not have yielded to it. The Senator knows it is unfair in the middle of a campaign to reduce the amount that a candidate may expend. The Senator must know that, and that is what we are complaining of.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the Senator recognize——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield for a question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That if this bill becomes a law it would not include the expenditures of the past, but would only be operative from the time it was enacted, which would entitle the Republican committee, or any other committee of a national party, to expend $400,000?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, if the other side should be in control of the next Senate, I would dislike to trust a contest if a man expended more than he was allowed under the law, even if it should be enacted in the middle of a campaign, especially if the Senate was close. On this question of raising funds I want to have read in this connection an article which appeared in the Washington Herald of March 31, 1915.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the Secretary will read the article.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Washington Herald, Mar. 31, 1915.]

DEMOCRATS RAISING FUNDS—PALMER SIGNS LETTERS ASKING FOR MONEY FOR COMING CAMPAIGN.

An appeal is being sent out from the Democratic national committee headquarters in Washington signed by A. Mitchell Palmer, recently appointed justice of the United States Court of Claims, asking for funds to promote the work of the committee. Mr. Palmer has signed the letter as chairman of the subcommittee on finance. Each member of the national committee has been urged to collect all the funds possible to start the work, and letters have been sent to men who have contributed to the campaign in the past. Members of Congress have received many of the letters.

A story was afloat yesterday that the letter appealed for a fund of $100,000 to start a movement for the reelection of Wilson, but Mr. Palmer, who was busy at the headquarters signing his name to letters, denied that it was to promote a boom for the President's renomination.

"The President will be renominated," said he. "It will not be necessary to organize for that purpose. That has been settled all along. All this talk about work under the surface in the interest of other candidates is unfounded."

Mr. CURTIS. No; the money was needed for the election. So we behold an appointee of the President of the United States as far back as March, 1915, a man who had been recently appointed to a judicial position, raising campaign funds for the Democratic candidate for the Presidency of the United States. Nay, more, you can bring in——

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield for a question.

Mr. BRYAN. Did Mr. Palmer accept the appointment to the bench?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not know as to that. The article in the paper says he had recently been appointed a justice of the Court of Claims.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator knows that he did not accept the appointment.

Mr. CURTIS. A Senator sitting near me says that Mr. Palmer was nominated but declined the appointment.

Mr. BRYAN. Let us get that straight. Mr. Palmer was not a judge sitting on the bench when he was acting in that capacity.

Mr. CURTIS. He had been nominated at the time the article was printed.

Mr. BRYAN. And had declined.

Mr. PENROSE. No; I do not think so.

Mr. BRYAN. Well, at any rate, he never qualified.

Mr. CURTIS. Oh, well, it does not make any difference.

Mr. BRYAN. It makes a considerable difference.

Mr. CURTIS. He stood so well with the administration that they would appoint him to office and then appoint him to go out and collect funds.

Mr. BRYAN. The point I wanted to make was to get the Senator to admit that he was not a judge upon the bench when acting in that capacity.

Mr. CURTIS. Why, I will admit that; certainly. He was nominated, but declined afterwards.

I will say this further: Go yonder in the Secretary's office, bring in the names of your postmasters that have been appointed in the last two years, and you will find in some States that 90 per cent of them contributed to campaign funds about two years ago. The trouble with some of the Senators on the other side—some of them, not all of them—is that they want to get up here and tell how good they are, when their records hardly sustain their contentions.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I trust the Senator from Kansas will not leave the Chamber——

Mr. CURTIS. I am not going to.

Mr. ASHURST. I shall feel obliged to make some statements that he ought to hear.

It is an easy thing to play the rôle of Pharisee, and point to the width of our phylacteries, assume virtue, but have no character, and therefore assail some one who has. That is a very easy thing to do.

Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas in my absence—and I make no complaint of that; for as I said before, I was called out of the Chamber for half an hour—saw fit to put into the RECORD a letter of mine. He was within his rights in incorporating that letter in the RECORD. I have had read to the Senate and to the country a statement from the Assistant Postmaster General to the effect that the letter was frankable. Of course, I could not exercise the excellent taste in the preparation of the letter that the Senator from Kansas exercises in all departments of life. As to the particular composition of the letter, possibly the Senator might improve on it; but at least it stated the truth. It stated my vote upon various matters presented for action. I am quite content to rest that particular phase of the Senator's harangue upon the statement of the Post Office Department that the letter had a right to be sent through the mail.

The Senator then, with a bitterness that arises only from his desire to see me defeated for reelection if he can—but he will not see it; his malice will be thwarted, because in my State any condemnation which comes to me from the Senator from Kansas will be accepted by the right-thinking people as a letter of commendation—the Senator saw fit then to state that some year or two ago I had telegraphed some newspapers in Arizona, not in cipher code, and he reiterated a charge which his distinguished predecessor from Kansas, Mr. Bristow, at that time made regarding some telegrams which I sent to the public.

Mr. President, soiling another will not make me clean. If the letters were not public business, my action ought to be criticized. But they were public business. The trouble with the Senator from Kansas is that he knows I have been an industrious and an active man, and have been in communication with the people rather than in communication with "special interests." That is what is the trouble with him. I have taken the people into my confidence. He did take special interests into his confidence. That is the difference between the Senator from Kansas and myself.

I ask that the Secretary may read a letter from the Sergeant at Arms with respect to the telegrams of which the Senator complains.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read, in the absence of objection.

Mr. ASHURST. I should like to have the whole matter read, date and all.

The Secretary read as follows:

SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
SERGEANT AT ARMS,
September 29, 1914.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate.

SIR: For your information, will state that the bills of the various telegraph companies for sending official telegrams for the United States Senate, accompanied by the original messages, are always referred to my office, where they are audited and then referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. This committee is composed of Senators WILLIAMS (chairman), SHAFROTH, REED, DILLINGHAM, and Bristow. After the approval of the bills by the said committee and the approval thereof indorsed by the chairman the bills are sent to the Secretary of the Senate for payment by the financial clerk.

The financial clerk informs me that all bills for telegraph messages sent or received to March 31, 1914, have been received by him as approved by the chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and that in no instance was payment for any message disallowed. Therefore, all your telegrams, and especially those telegrams to which Senator Bristow, of Kansas, objected in July, 1913, have been audited and decided by the committee to be official business and not private or personal business.

Very respectfully, yours,

CHARLES P. HIGGINS,
Sergeant at Arms, United States Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I occupied the attitude of one who was charged by a fellow Senator with having committed an impropriety. My fellow Senator who made the charge was a member of the committee, and it became his duty later to act as a judge in that case; but he was at least honest enough, when the facts were presented to him, to join with his fellow Senators and say, "This is public business."

So the charge of the Senator from Kansas in the exuberance of his zeal falls harmless at my feet. The letters I have sent are public business. The Post Office Department say I had a right to send them, and they said so before I sent them. They said it was one of the few, if not the only one, which had in it nothing but official business.

The charge of the Senator's former colleague, the Senator's predecessor, that the telegrams were not public business has been exploded, the bill has been audited and passed upon by the committee of the Senate chosen for that particular purpose, and they were found to be not "part" public business but "all" public business. I am very content to let the record respecting myself on this particular point rest just there, and say that if my services in the Senate and my services to the country are so poor and so weak that my defeat could be caused by such a politician as the Senator from Kansas I ought to be retired from public life. If he has it in his power to destroy a servant of the people, if he, with many lines in times past running to the various interests, connecting him and the interests, can destroy a man who has earnestly tried to serve the people, I welcome the issue, and I do not shrink from it.

Now, let us see about this Pharisee from Kansas, who points to the width of his phylacteries, and in the exuberance of his zeal says that some Senators have telegraphed too much. I will read the Senator a telegram. I do not say that that telegram should not have been sent. It is a matter of taste. Was it good taste when I wired the newspapers of my State asking their opinion as to a Federal judge? The country must say whether that was good taste or not. The telegrams were sent to newspapers. I sent a copy of my letter to all the people of my State, and I expect to continue to send letters to the people of my State.

When Mr. Root was Secretary of War some years ago the junior Senator from Kansas was not a Member of this body. He was a Member of the other House. The records are available to him now, if he wishes to peruse them. Mr. Taft was Secretary of War. The few telegrams that I sent in trying to select a good Federal judge—and we did select a most excellent Federal judge to serve the public—I presume cost three or four hundred dollars. We spent that amount in getting a good Federal judge. That is a frightful thing to the Senator from Kansas, to spend three or four hundred dollars to assist the people in selecting an excellent Federal judge. It is a frightful thing here to the Senator from Kansas that a Senator should see fit to communicate with his constituents.

But about this communication which took place between Secretary Root and Gov. Taft, Governor of the Philippine Islands: Mr. Taft on April 15, 1903, sent a telegram as follows from the Philippine Islands, at 52 cents a word:

APRIL 15, 1903.

SECWAR, Washington:

Stood trip well, rode horseback 25 miles to 5,000 feet altitude. Hope amebic dysentery cured. Great Province this, only 150 miles from Manila, with air as bracing as Adirondacks or Murray Bay—

Fifty-two cents a word! The Senator from Kansas is silent about that. He objects, now, when the people get a chance to choose a good judge—

Only pines and grass lands. Temperature this hottest month in the Philippines in my cottage porch at 3 in the afternoon 68. Fires are necessary night and morning.

TAFT.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. No; I do not yield at this time. I do not wish to have my remarks broken into. I will yield later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. ASHURST. Then the commentator makes this statement:

As quick as the wires could bring it, he received the following reply:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 16, 1903.

TAFT, Manila:

Referring to telegram from your office of 15th instant, how is horse?

ROOT.

[Laughter.]

Fifty-two cents a word, inquiring "How is the horse?" But when a Senator who is not dominated by "special interests" comes here and tells the people about his votes this Pharisee from Kansas is shocked!

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. No; I do not yield now. That did not shock the Senator. Now, just another word:

"How is the horse?"—52 cents a word! The Senator from Kansas is as silent as the tomb about such a telegram, but he makes much about a telegram that I sent to the newspapers of Arizona asking what in their opinion would be a very excellent way of securing the advice of the people as to whom I might recommend for Federal judge. Oh, that is an improper use of my frank!

In 1913 a corrupt lobby was driven from this city. The President of the United States announced that an insidious lobby was trying to influence legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Before the Senator from Arizona takes up that question, I want to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that Secretary Root, the Secretary of State, and Gov. Taft at that time had personal franks for the purpose of telegraphing on questions of personal business?

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, yes; at 52 cents a word.

Mr. SMOOT. No; not at any number of cents a word.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; at 52 cents a word. I went to the telegraph office and asked about it.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to ask the Senator whether those two men did not have franks, not only from the Western Union Telegraph Co. but from the Cable Co. as well?

Mr. ASHURST. All I know is that the Cable Co. tells me that they charged the Government 52 cents a word for those messages. That is all I know.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to inquire if there was any return message about the condition of the horse? [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. No, Mr. President. No other telegram is disclosed as to the condition of the horse.

When this lobby, which was driven from the city by this Congress and by Woodrow Wilson, was trying to influence legislation, there was some more franking done. There was a man who testified—to wit, Col. Martin M. Mulhall, I believe—that "Sugar at a glance" was prepared under or by his direction. It was sent out under the frank of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and the cost to the public for sending out that document in behalf of special interests was $28,000!

I am corrected with the statement that the cost was $57,000; and a suit is now pending, brought by the Government of the United States, to recover that sum of money. The Senator from Kansas is silent about that. It was very appropriate, from his viewpoint, to send out under frank fifty-odd thousand dollars' worth of material in behalf of the special interests, but a very inappropriate thing, from his narrow viewpoint, to send out a letter to one's own constituency.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; a question only. The Senator says that "an insidious lobby" was driven from the Capitol. I remember that I was called to testify in that famous case, and I have been looking for a report from the committee. Has the Senator any reason to suppose that one will be made?

Mr. ASHURST. I have three or four volumes here on my desk.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the testimony.

Mr. ASHURST. That is the testimony?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes. I never have seen a report. Does the Senator know whether there is a report?

Mr. ASHURST. I am unable to say. I think, though, that in view of the disclosures that were made, whether a report has been made or not it is unnecessary. The lobby absconded. The lobby fled, and is now required to make legitimate and proper arguments before committees, instead of arguments that are of an inappropriate and unseemly character.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have never before known an investigating committee that did not make a report. I ask the question in good faith, because I have been looking for it.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not know whether a report was made or not.

Mr. GALLINGER. But the Senator does not really think any great good was done so far as the lobby was concerned, does he?

Mr. ASHURST. Why, certainly. Under the old Taft and Roosevelt régimes the special interests secured from Congress just about what they wanted, and Senators on that side helped them to do it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I do not yield now. When the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] came to the Senate he was an outcast and an Ishmaelite among you because he stood for honest government when you did not.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well——

Mr. ASHURST. He stood for equal rights to all and special privileges to none, and you stood for the opposite; therefore he was an outcast.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is the Senator making that personal to me?

Mr. ASHURST. I make no personal statement. I refer to Senators PENROSE and GALLINGER, and LODGE and CURTIS, and men of that kind. If that is personal—why, yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has no right to make that statement. In the first place, he is violating the rule of the Senate in referring to Senators by their names.

Mr. ASHURST. I will say, "the senior Senator from New Hampshire," then.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; that would be in better taste.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is a judge of good taste.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; I am, sometimes. Now, I have seen lobbyists in the galleries looking down approvingly on the Senator from Arizona, and I noticed the other day that there was a copper lobby here. Did the Senator see any of those men?

Mr. ASHURST. A copper lobby?

Mr. GALLINGER. A copper lobby.

Mr. ASHURST. If there was one here I know nothing of it. Some very legitimate and proper arguments were made to me; some telegrams and letters were sent to me. I did not put them in the RECORD, but they were in behalf of or against a certain provision in the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. They counted on the Senator very confidently.

Mr. ASHURST. I am glad to see the ponderous form of my obese friend from Pennsylvania rise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will please address the Chair before interrupting.

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania. I yield to that shining exemplar of morals and purity in politics, the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, as long as the Senator is talking about lobbies, he might as well refer to the most recent lobby. The copper lobby very confidently counted on the Senator from Arizona, and his colleagues gave him the distinguished honor of offering the amendment which struck out of the revenue bill the tax on the component parts of munitions, doubtless to endear him still further to the copper lobby in Arizona and other Western States.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the Senator from Pennsylvania should say that a lobby influenced my vote in that particular, I would say, of course, that the Senator lied. I would say that. That may be——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will admonish Senators to observe the rules of decorum.

Mr. ASHURST. I will use a few moments now in regard to the copper tax.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator would better withdraw the remark he has just made.

Mr. ASHURST. No; I say, if the Senator asserts that any copper or other lobby influenced me—if he says that. Does he say it?

Mr. PENROSE. I do not know. The Senator exhibited very suspicious zeal.

Mr. ASHURST. Well, then, if he withdraws his statement, I withdraw mine.

Mr. PENROSE. Of course, appearances are often deceiving, I will say to the Senator from Arizona that I am a little near-sighted, and maybe I did not——

Mr. JAMES. Oh, Mr. President, a remark of the character that the Senator from Pennsylvania has just made is as much out of order as the remark of the Senator from Arizona.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must ask Senators to observe the rules of decorum in debate.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senator says certain things deceive. I leave it to the judgment of the American people as to whose appearance, the Senator's or mine, would be the more liable to deceive.

I have no desire to engage in a bitter personal controversy. The Senators on that side started this. You made the assault on me, and now you ought not to complain when I reply. You make an assault, and then when a reply is made you say it is personal and improper.

I want now to say just a few words on the copper question. The House of Representatives passed a bill which laid a direct tax on copper. It did not appeal to me because I thought it was unjust, and certainly I have never been the apologist for any of the larger copper-mining companies, if they need an apologist. So far as their political activities in my State are concerned, I have received but very scant support or comfort from them. It has gone to the other side, to my opponents, as a rule. But because an unjust thing is about to be attempted that fact does not preclude me from trying to correct that injustice. Whether a man be a supporter of mine or whether an institution be a supporter of mine or not does not weigh in the balance with me when I come to consider its legal and just demands and claims. A tax upon copper was unjust unless you should levy it also on steel, iron, coal, wood, zinc, and all other materials.

Now, Mr. President, I am going to conclude my remarks.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, just a word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona has the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. I simply want to say that I think the Senator should be fair enough to state that I never heard of the cablegrams which he claims were sent between Gov. Taft and Secretary Root until they were read here this afternoon. I would condemn a Cabinet officer just as quickly as I would a Senator for violating the franking privilege.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am very glad the Senate has taken up this bill. A short time ago, as I understand, an amendment was offered which, if adopted, would provide that this act shall take effect on January 1, 1917. I trust that amendment may not be incorporated in the law. It seems to me that now is the accepted time for legislation of this character. Of course I should infinitely prefer that a law be adopted which would take effect January 1, 1917, rather than to have no legislation upon the subject. I think it is unfortunate that this has been so long delayed. I would not say that any one Senator is more responsible for it than another, or that one side of the Chamber is more responsible for it than another. We all know that this has been a very busy session, and many important things remain upon the calendar to be disposed of.

Mr. President, Senators have referred to contributions which have been made to campaign funds in the past, and particularly to contributions which have been made to the campaign of our present Chief Executive, and to the fact that certain appointments have been parceled out to certain gentlemen who were friendly enough to contribute toward the expenses of that campaign. I do not think the Senator who referred to this was quite fair. He spoke of it as though it were something unusual. I have before me the record of the investigations of the campaign-fund investigating committee; and in the testimony of Mr. Sheldon I find as contributors the names of such men as these, who were beneficiaries at the hands of the Taft administration:

Larz Anderson, $25,000.
Whitelaw Reid, $10,000.
Robert Bacon, $5,000.
Myron T. Herrick, chairman, $50,000.

And we, perhaps, could go on and name others.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the Senator state to what positions those men were appointed?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. Herrick was an ambassador, Mr. Robert Bacon was an ambassador, Mr. Whitelaw Reid was an ambassador, and Mr. Larz Anderson was an ambassador or minister.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Appointed by whom?

Mr. POMERENE. By President Taft. I could refer to others.

I have also before me the hearings before the campaign-fund investigating committee, and there was a peculiarly illuminating exhibit furnished before that campaign committee by Mr. Elmer Dover, who for a time was chairman of the Republican national committee. It gives the names of the contributors to the Republican campaign fund, and it is interesting to note the great financial interests represented by them. I am going to ask that this list be printed as an exhibit to my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. POMERENE. Hundreds of thousands of dollars and millions of dollars were contributed during that campaign, and there were contributions of like character on both sides. I want to be perfectly fair about this. I refer to it, first, because of the reference which was made on the other side of the Chamber, and, secondly, because the facts are such that they ought to be an object lesson for us to-day when we have under consideration this legislation. That is the portion of this information which gives to it a very important character and a very important bearing upon this subject. We should not lose our temper in discussing this matter. I assume that we are all actuated by a higher purpose than that.

Mr. President, a corrupt-practices act can not be made too drastic for me. No one who has kept touch with the political campaigns of the last generation, if he is honest with himself, will hesitate to admit that the lavish use of money in elections has been most baneful in its influence upon the public mind. I will not consume the time of the Senate in trying to define why this is so or how it is so. Fair-minded men everywhere take it for granted. I think I should have perhaps contented myself with casting my vote in favor of taking up this measure, and then voting for its passage with such amendments as further discussion might suggest, if it were not for the fact that my failure to express my views might be misconstrued.

I have been honored by my party with the renomination as a candidate for the seat I now have the privilege to occupy. I come from a State which is generally regarded as a Republican State. We have carried it in four out of the five last campaigns for governor. I am confident we shall win in the coming election. Everyone who is familiar with Ohio politics believes that in a number of elections to the United States Senate in the State of Ohio the seat was bought and paid for. The men who participated in these corruptions have for the most part gone to their reward, and I would be glad to draw the veil over the past except for present conditions in my State and in the country. Not that I have a desire to tear open old sores or to point the finger of scorn toward acts which have been heretofore committed, but because I hope hereby to challenge the attention of our State and of the country to these conditions of the past in order that we may ascertain what is our duty now and what shall be our duty in the future.

Under the corrupt-practices act of the State of Ohio (sec. 5175–2) every candidate voted for at any election or primary election held in the State, and every person, committee, or association of persons, incorporated or unincorporated, who have contributed, promised, received, or expended, directly or indirectly, any money or thing of value in connection with the election or primary is required within 10 days thereafter to file an itemized statement showing in detail—

All the moneys or things of value so contributed, promised, received, or expended, and all the liabilities directly or indirectly incurred in connection with such elections.

Under this statute, Mr. Herrick, the successful Republican nominee at the recent primary, filed his statement with the secretary of state at Columbus, showing that he had personally spent or contracted to spend in his primary campaign the sum of $22,175, and the so-called Herrick Voter's League filed their statement with the secretary of state, showing their expenditures in this same behalf aggregating $29,000, or a total of $51,175. I am advised that there are other organizations throughout the different counties in the State which likewise spent considerable sums of money in Mr. Herrick's behalf. The newspapers in Ohio, I am informed, have estimated the expenditures in this campaign at $150,000 to $200,000, and they report Republican politicians as having stated so. Now, I want to be perfectly fair. I am not here to say that any of this money was corruptly expended. I do not know whether it was or not, and, so far as this statement is concerned, I am willing to assume that it was not corruptly expended, but I am here to say that the expenditure of this sum of money, or anything similar to it, is altogether vicious in its influence upon the public.

I am here to say that when any man has rendered such great service, whether in a public or private capacity, which should so appeal to the public electorate that he should be further honored by his fellow citizens with a seat in the United States Senate, it is not necessary that he spend this vast sum of money in order to show his popularity or the merits of his great service. Think of it! The American people in their wisdom, through the Congress, have said, in their judgment, that a salary of $7,500 per year, or $45,000 for a term of six years, is a reasonable compensation for services that a Senator is supposed to render to his constituency; and yet we have an example in my home State of the spending of more than $50,000—more than the entire salary of an entire term—in order to secure the nomination for this exalted position to which he has been so spontaneously called by the suffrage of his fellow citizens! And if he is willing to approve the expenditure of this amount of money in order to be successful at a primary election, how much more will he expend in order that he may obtain the coveted honor in the election?

Senators, I had supposed that the day was past in my own State when any man by the aid of money would seek to secure for himself a seat in this body. If nominations are to be secured, and thereafter an election, by this lavish expenditure of money, what encouragement will there be for any man of modest means, no matter what his talents or what his merits may be, to aspire to a seat in this body? As for myself, I covet the honor of retiring from this Senate rather than to be elected by the extravagant and lavish use of money. I would not pay $20,000 for a nomination and election to the United States Senate if I could, and I could not if I would. If I am obliged to combat an avalanche of dollars from a big bank account, the people of my own State will know it, if to tell them is the last thing on earth that I shall do. I have no objection to any man being a millionaire, and I have no objection to his multiplying his millions many times by honorable means, but I do object to these dollars being the stepping-stone into the legislative body which plays so great a part in the governmental operations of this great country of ours.

Among the contributors to the Herrick Voters' League fund are many citizens of prominence in Cleveland who rank among her richest men. They are living witnesses to the truth of David Harum's philosophy as embodied in the sentence, "Them that's got gits," and some of these contributors, I suspect, are willing to "git" by legislation. It is no compliment to any man to secure a nomination or an election to a high office by the lavish expenditure of money. It is no compliment to the people of a great State to know that a nomination or an election has thus been attained. It is neither complimentary to the ability nor the standing of any man who thus asserts that he and his friends find it necessary to spend large sums of money to make the people appreciate and understand his ability or position in society, and it is not complimentary to the people to say to them that this money should be spent in order to enlighten the electorate as to its duties. And, more, it is not fair to competitors of equal character and ability to compel them to meet propaganda which only money without limit can spread throughout the State.

To my very great disappointment, no limitation is placed on the amount which may be expended in the State of Ohio for either a nomination or election, or both, to the Senate, unless it is embraced in the provision of the statute limiting the expenses of a Member of Congress to $2,000, and this I doubt. The only limitation to be found anywhere is that contained in the Federal statute which has been so vaguely drawn that it is a question as to whether or not it will afford any protection against the vicious practices which have grown up throughout the country. And it may be that if one hundred thousand or a million dollars are turned loose in the Ohio senatorial campaign this year, there is no legal way to prevent it. I went into this matter most thoroughly several years ago when the Stephenson case was up for consideration. To my very great regret, this investigation showed that there was no law, common or statutory, State or National, placing a limitation upon the amount that could be expended at that time in the nomination and election of candidates to the United States Senate. The present Federal corrupt-practices act was passed and approved August 19, 1911, three years after the Stephenson election. Whatever may have been thought of its effectiveness at the time it was passed, it is very clear, judging from what has transpired in Ohio, that it places no limitation upon the amount that can be expended in behalf of any candidate, though under the statute itself he can not spend exceeding $10,000, but this does not include any "assessment fee or charge made or levied upon a candidate by the laws of the State in which he resides or for his necessary personal expense incurred for himself alone for traveling and subsistence, stationery and postage, writing and printing (other than in newspapers), and distributing letters, circulars, and postals, and for telegraph and telephone service."

The practice of expending large sums of money in elections is and ought to be condemned by every law-abiding citizen. No man who seeks to win his seat in this Senate or any legislative body, or to enter other public office by the extravagant use of money will ever have my support, whether he is on my ticket or not.

Do Senators on either side of the Chamber believe that large campaign expenditures should be permitted? I am sure they do not. Do Senators believe that $50,000 ought to be used in any one State to secure a nomination for election to this place? Does not this vast expenditure for the primary indicate a willingness to expend larger sums by those interested in securing the election of their candidate? It is not too late to prevent it, and I want to appeal to Senators who believe in honest elections—and I assume we all do—to record the will of the people now, and while it is not too late, and to stay here long enough to place upon the statute books a law which will be sufficient to reduce to a minimum the vicious practices which will occur if we fail to act. Our duty is plain. The people of every State, irrespective of party, with few and rare exceptions, will applaud our efforts if we remain here until this corrupt-practices bill, or something akin to it, shall be placed on the statute books.

I want to add that if it is feared that the bill or any provisions of it are retroactive, of course an amendment can be added to the bill which would very readily prevent that, if such an amendment were necessary.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Oklahoma if he will not consent to lay aside the bill for a short time that we may have an executive session, and after that we can resume its consideration.

Mr. OWEN. I am willing to have the bill temporarily laid aside subject to the executive session, with the understanding that after the executive session is disposed of we shall then proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. STONE. The Senator agrees to lay it aside for the present?

Mr. OWEN. For the present for that purpose.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Oklahoma does not want to exact a promise that a motion to take up——

Mr. OWEN. I make no exaction of a promise. I am simply willing to lay it aside with that understanding.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator would not exclude any other Senator from moving to take up another bill if he saw proper to do so?

Mr. OWEN. I do not think I would have the power if I wanted to do it.

Mr. STONE. I merely paid the ordinary courtesy due in making a request of a Senator in charge of a bill when I asked the Senator from Oklahoma if he was willing that it might be laid aside temporarily.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. KITCHIN, Mr. RAINEY, Mr. DIXON, Mr. HULL of Tennessee, Mr. FORDNEY, Mr. GARDNER, and Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 455) to define the rights and privileges of the trustees of municipally owned interstate railways, and construing the acts to regulate commerce with reference thereto, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 455. An act to define the rights and privileges of the trustees of municipally owned interstate railways and construing the acts to regulate commerce with reference thereto was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours and ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress approved July 17, 1914 (38 Stats, ch. 152, p. 513), increasing the limit of cost for the immigration station at Baltimore, Md., from $280,000 to $550,000 be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to make said amount also available for such counters, booths, screens, railings, seats, bunks, kitchen and laundry equipment, etc., as may be deemed necessary in connection with said station.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. On August 21 the bill (S. 5886) extending the time for the completion of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn., and so forth, together with the amendments of the House, was referred to the Committee on Commerce. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, September 6, 1916.

The House met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee for the energy and perseverance which characterizes the work of the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress, about to pass into history. For the skill, and uniform courtesy extended to all by the Speaker of this House and displayed by its Members, a wonderful school of discipline, which teaches the art of self-control and urbanity. Grant that the work which has been arduous and long continued, may be to the good of the people here represented and an object lesson in the efficiency of popular government. Let Thy blessing follow the Members and their respective families, the officers and employees to keep them in health and vigor, in body and mind until they shall again assemble to finish the tasks which wait on them, and all praise be Thine in the name of Him who taught us Fatherhood, brotherhood. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6748) providing that Indian schools may be maintained without restriction as to annual rate of expenditure per pupil.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 237. Joint resolution authorizing the Postmaster General to provide the postmaster of Gulfport, Miss., with a special canceling die for the Mississippi Centennial Exposition celebration.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3646) to amend the act of February 11, 1915 (38 Stat. L., p. 807), providing for the opening of the Fort Assiniboine Military Reservation.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes, had requested a conference on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. PENROSE, Mr. MCCUMBER, and Mr. SMOOT as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on September 5, 1916, that they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 15158. An act to amend the Judicial Code, to fix the time when the annual term of the Supreme Court shall commence, and further to define the jurisdiction of that court; and

H. R. 17235. An act granting the consent of Congress to W. H. Crosby, W. H. Andrews, E. G. Connette, Daniel Good, Henry May, Robert C. Gaupp, Edward Kener, jr., William F. MacGlashan, Eugene L. Falk, John W. Robinson, John M. Willys, Oliver Cabana, jr., Conrad E. Wettlaufer, H. A. Hurt, George J. Meyer, Miron S. Hall, John Lord O'Brian, Frank S. McGraw, and William A. Morgan to construct a bridge across Niagara River within or near the city limits of Buffalo, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 15316. An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 14391. An act authorizing the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Madison, Wis., and for other purposes.

REVENUE.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and move to disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the revenue bill, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we have not been able yet to see the amendments of the Senate. I think it is fair that the Members of the House should have an opportunity to see the amendments of the Senate, so that they may at least be informed of them before the bill goes to conference. It is my impression that the Senate ordered the bill printed with the Senate amendments.

Mr. LLOYD. Yes; it has been printed.

Mr. MANN. I was not able to get it at the document room when I went there this morning.

The SPEAKER. It is already printed.

Mr. MANN. Of course, it is of no value to me until I see it.

Mr. KITCHIN. I suggest, then, that I make the request at a later time in the day.

Mr. MANN. Yes; I suggest that the gentleman make his request later.

Mr. KITCHIN. Say at 12 o'clock?

Mr. MANN. I imagine that it will take more than two hours to look at the amendments, and I do not suppose it will delay the matter any.

Mr. KITCHIN. How long would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. MANN. I can not say until I read the amendments. I want to go over them. It has been impossible to follow the Senate amendments in the RECORD, as that body has the habit of amending a thing and then 40 pages over amending it again.

Mr. KITCHIN. I withdraw the request for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina withdraws his request.

ARTHUR LUCAS.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 366.

Resolved, etc., That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House $90 to Arthur Lucas for special janitor services rendered during the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this resolution provides for pay for additional janitor service rendered by Arthur Lucas. In addition to his duties as janitor he has had charge of the office room of ex-Speaker CANNON. He has performed that janitor service during the whole of the year, and he asks only $10 a month for this additional service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

SEPTEMBER PAY OF EMPLOYEES.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution 173, authorizing the payment of September salaries to officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives on the day of adjournment of the present session.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and instructed to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including the Capitol police and pages, borne upon the annual and session rolls, their respective salaries and per diem for the month of September, 1916, on the day of adjournment; and the Clerk of the House is authorized to pay on said day to Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners their allowances for clerk hire for said month of September: Provided, That the session employees of the Senate and House of Representatives shall be paid hereunder for the entire month of September, and a sufficient sum is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for that purpose.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there an amendment pending?

Mr. LLOYD. No; I did not present the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is this?

Mr. LLOYD. It is a resolution similar to the one the gentleman had passed two years ago.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Identical in every respect?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MUNICIPALLY OWNED INTERSTATE RAILWAYS.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 455) to define the rights and privileges of the trustees of municipally owned interstate railways, and construing the act to regulate commerce with reference thereto.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 455. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have not my copy of the bill and report with me, but as I recall the report on this measure the trustees at the present time, under the ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission, have the right to be taken by special car on a tour of inspection of these railroads whenever they see fit.

Mr. ALLEN. Once a quarter; that is, four times a year. This is for a general inspection tour. These trustees, for instance, can not have their engineer along when it is necessary to ascertain what is to be done about the raising or lowering of a bridge or the changing of a grade or location of a right of way.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman mean to say that when the trustees make their official trip they are not permitted to take their engineer with them on the tour of inspection?

Mr. ALLEN. Not without paying his transportation. That is what the bill is for—to remedy that situation and to properly perform their duties.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not read the report that way, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. ALLEN. Well, that is the fact in the case. They have always had, under their contract with the lessee company, the right to passes for their officers and employees, such as their secretary, engineers, and attorney. Under the ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission they are not permitted to have these passes, nor were the trustees permitted to have passes at any other time that it became necessary for them to go over the road to perform the duties which the law has placed upon them, save as to themselves when using the private car at stated intervals, for inspection.

Mr. STAFFORD. This would permit the trustees to grant passes to any person whomsoever they saw fit?

Mr. ALLEN. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why not?

Mr. ALLEN. Only their own officers and agents. It is very important that they should have such employees accompany them in the performance of their duties. It is a unanimous report of the committee. I will say to the gentleman. Hearings were had upon the bill and it was carefully gone into.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, if the facts are as stated by the gentleman from Ohio—and I have no question but what he is more conversant with the facts than are disclosed in the report—under present arrangement the trustees are not privileged to take their engineers or other officials of the road with them on these tours of inspections, and its purpose is merely to grant transportation to these officers and employees, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the trustees of any interstate line of railway owned by a municipality and leased to and operated by a common carrier company, said trustees being vested with the power of eminent domain for the purpose of said railway under the laws of the respective States and charged with the care, supervision, and inspection of said line of railway and of its operation, shall, for the purpose of the act to regulate commerce and the acts amendatory thereof, be held and considered to be entitled to all the rights and privileges of officials of said operating company under said act as to transportation. And the terms of this act shall be held to apply to the officers and agents of said trustees.

SEC. 2. That nothing in said act to regulate commerce and the acts amendatory thereof shall be so construed as to abrogate any of the terms and conditions of any lease of such railway or to prevent a strict compliance therewith by either of the parties thereto or relieve either of them from the obligations thereof.

SEC. 3. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, down to and including line 12, on page 2, and insert the following:

"That nothing contained in the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, or the acts amendatory thereof, shall be so construed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, or by the courts, as to prevent the lessee of the Cincinnati Southern Railway from complying with its obligation assumed in leasing said railway to furnish free transportation to the trustees of said Cincinnati Southern Railway, their officers and agents."

The question was taken, and the amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word, or will the gentleman from Ohio yield me some time?

Mr. ALLEN. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I did not object to the consideration of this bill at this time, although I did once before. When we provided by law against the issuance of passes we interfered with a great many contracts between the railroads and other parties which provided for the granting of passes. Many of them were perfectly legitimate contracts. We have refused to vary the antipass law except in the case of charity or some of the old soldiers. There have been many, many requests urged with a great deal of strength and sometimes considerable logic in favor of varying the provisions of the antipass law so as to allow passes to be granted. Here is a company, the trustees of which claim, undoubtedly true, that they have certain supervisory work to carry on on a road which they have leased. They want the leased road to have the right to give them passes, and undoubtedly they will issue passes to a great many people in their employ, or be asked to at least, who have nothing to do with the real work of supervision. If we start in to yield to the demands to vary the antipass law so as to allow the issuance of passes, it will come a little at a time until it is very largely destroyed in its effect. Under the circumstances I have not felt at liberty to object to the consideration of the bill, although I very much doubt the propriety of it, but I hope at least that it will not be construed by the others who are clamoring for the same privilege as a precedent upon which they have the right to base a claim that they, too, shall be taken care of as well as these people.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the language in lines 19 and 20, page 2, which proposes to furnish free transportation to the trustees of the Cincinnati Southern Railway and "their officers and agents." Who are the "officers" of the trustees?

Mr. ALLEN. The reference is to the attorney, the civil engineer, and——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. They are officers of the company, not officers of the trustees. It says here, "their officers and agents."

Mr. ALLEN. Well, I can say to the gentleman the language used follows the language in the lease. They really have no officers, in the ordinary sense, perhaps. There are five trustees appointed by the superior court of Cincinnati under the act of the legislature authorizing——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that I was interested to know what that language meant. This is supposed to give free transportation to the trustees "and their officers."

Mr. ALLEN. Well, the president of the board of trustees and their secretary——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Who else?

Mr. ALLEN. Those are the only two officers of the board of trustees I can think of just now.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What of the company?

Mr. ALLEN. Their engineer, their attorney, and there may be an assistant engineer or two.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And everything enumerated here as "their officers" means only those two?

Mr. ALLEN. The secretary is not a trustee. He is employed at an annual salary, but is not a trustee.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How many men would this include?

Mr. ALLEN. It is very limited, I would say, to five or six, but I could not say what number definitely.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is the limit set or is it in the trustees' discretion?

Mr. ALLEN. No; it is not. They have never had occasion to have more than that, except, possibly, in construction or in condemnation proceedings.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It leaves it to their discretion to appoint anybody their agent for any purpose whatever?

Mr. ALLEN. They do not do that. For instance, their salaries are limited to about $2,000 a year. It has been a matter of a great deal of civic pride in Cincinnati in the character of men selected for these trusteeships and in operating this railroad and maintaining it. It is a line between Cincinnati and Chattanooga, Tenn., and the trust has been conducted at a minimum cost, and the gentlemen who are appointed trustees by the court have always been very high-class gentlemen who have a great pride in the economical administration of the trust.

They are men to whom the salary is only a nominal stipend. In fact, they pay it nearly all out in incidental expenses.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The reason I have made these inquiries is because of the very vivid recollection I have of the abuses, the gross abuses, under the old system of indiscriminate granting of passes by railroads. They were many times granted for purposes entirely legitimate, but they were often granted also for the deliberate purpose of bribery. There is no doubt about that. And they were sometimes put into the hands of people who were powerful in molding public opinion and even in molding it the wrong way. All of the people own the franchises which enable the railroads to exist, and all of the people ought to be treated impartially in the matter of transportation over the railways. Passes ought not to be granted except when absolutely necessary for the proper administration of the affairs of the railroad. We ought to be exceedingly careful about legislation of this sort.

Mr. ALLEN. I will say to the gentleman that I agree with him fully on that proposition. This is a case that is entirely different from any other one existing. It is a municipally owned steam railroad, under lease to an operating company, and there are very few except the trustees connected with the management on the part of the city of Cincinnati. There is no other similar case in the United States. And it is in order to permit them to perform their duties and to enable the lessees to carry out their contract of lease that this relief is sought, and I can say to the gentleman that this right will be limited strictly to the legitimate agents and employees of the trustees.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ALLEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CIVIL WAR VOLUNTEER OFFICERS' RETIRED LIST.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BRUMBAUGH] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I obtained permission two weeks ago to make this talk, and I have been waiting patiently ever since. I am glad the opportunity has arrived to make it now. I shall not claim the time of the House, in these closing hours of Congress, to enter upon the discussion of any political theme. I have a higher and nobler theme.

I come to present the claims and to plead the cause of men of deathless fame and deathless deeds of patriotic service to the Nation.

I come to ask for generous recognition, simple justice, and the long-deferred fulfillment of the Nation's sacred pledge of honor. A pledge made to boys of 50 years ago who, in the day of the Nation's crisis, were ready to stake all and give all; yea, who did stake all and give all that the Nation might live and the flag float over a never-to-be-divided Nation of freedom. [Applause.]

AN APPEAL FOR PASSAGE OF THE BILL.

Mr. Speaker, my whole heart and soul beats with anxious desire to see this Congress pass, before we shall adjourn, the Civil War volunteer officers' retired list bill.

Ever since I have been a Member of Congress, before the Military Committee I have sought the passage of this measure with the deepest interest. The justice of it, the duty of it, the wisdom of it has appealed to me, and now, when after long effort we have obtained from the Military Committee favorable action and the bill is now before Congress with a favorable report of the committee recommending its passage, I appeal for its passage with the deepest solicitude.

LET US ACT NOW BEFORE IT IS FOREVER TOO LATE.

Gentlemen, this is a solemn hour to every man who has in his heart a just appreciation of the services of these old veterans. The volunteer officers of the Civil War who have honorable discharge from the Army and Navy of the United States make, as they believe, this their last appeal for justice.

The decrepitude of old age and the increasing number of the death list render it improbable that the remaining and impoverished few ever again will have strength of heart or hope to make much further effort to obtain that which the solemn pledge of Congress declared they should have, and which, although the law of this magnificent Republic now in full force has been ignored, overlooked, forgotten, and broken for full 50 years.

Soon the last of these heroic men will be gone. Only a few of them are left among us.

They live in our midst, a few here and a few there, living teachers of patriotism and good citizenship and living monuments of honor.

They should have our tenderest solicitude.

They and the men they led crowned American manhood with the highest tests of human bravery and patriotism.

They knew no fear, they should want for no affectionate regard.

The fame of these men and of the common soldier whom they led fills the earth and their glory walks the pathway of the stars.

Soon it will be too late to do this simple act of justice.

Why not do it now, before it shall be forever too late?

Two years ago there appeared before the Military Committee Col. Charles R. E. Koch, of Chicago, and 11 veteran comrades. To-day not a member of that band is alive. Col. Koch recently addressed the Military Committee. He has since answered the last call.

For these old veterans, whether they wore the blue or the gray, I have this wish: God circle and shelter them with his tenderest love. [Applause.]

Soon, in the words of the poet Holmes, we can say of the old veteran and the friends of his youth:

The mossy marbles rest
On the lips that he has pressed
In his bloom;
And the names he loved to hear
Have been carved for many a year
On the tomb.

Soon the last heroic figure will be gone, and all that will be left of them will be: The deathless memory of men of deeds of deathless fame.

Now, while we can, let us do this act that shall honor us in honoring them.

Let us prove to them that like God Himself the Nation is just.

Now, let us do this act of simple justice that will cheer every veteran's heart and fan his aged brow with joy like a breeze from paradise itself.

I agree with the beautiful sentiment expressed by Col. W. W. Smith, of Topeka, Kans., in a communication to me, in which he says:

The high duty rests on this Nation to keep its promise with its defenders as much as it would be to vigorously uphold its conventions and treaties with the nations of the world.

The few decrepid officers of the volunteer force now living absolutely depend and bank on the fulfillment of what Congress has pledged to them.

They have no persistency in urging what particular measure shall be passed, nor the schedule or amount to be paid, but it would be a flame in their hearts to know that Congress, in its own way, had performed its pledge while their canes still clicked on the pavement.

BRIEF REVIEW AND ARGUMENT IN SUPPORT OF THE BILL.

Mr. Speaker, the passage of this bill will fulfill the pledge that Lincoln made to these men more than a half a century ago. It will be a well-merited and long-deferred act of justice. The justice of this bill appeals to me, and my whole heart is in it. I have remained here in constant attendance in Congress when my personal interests called loudly elsewhere, seeking to find the open door of opportunity to push the bill to passage by unanimous consent before Congress adjourns. To do this I have not been absent a single day, even to look after my own interests in my campaign for renomination. I desire briefly to present some facts in support of this bill.

It will be seen that this bill would fulfill an unfulfilled pledge made to the Nation's defenders more than a half a century ago.

As reasons to justify the passage of this bill the following statement of facts are presented:

[Act of May 25, 1861; act of July 22, 1861; approved July 22, 1861.]

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the officers, noncommissioned officers, and privates, organized as above set forth, shall in all respects be placed on the footing, as to pay and allowances, of similar corps of the Regular Army.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That any volunteer who may be received into the service of the United States under this act, and who may be wounded or otherwise disabled in the service, shall be entitled to the benefits which have been or may be conferred on persons disabled in the regular service. * * *

Approved, July 22, 1861

This act places Volunteers and Regulars, as to pay and allowances, in all respects on equal footing. On those and other Government promises the Union forces were enlisted and mustered, served the cause, and were retired by discharge for wounds or disability or close of term of service or end of war, 1866, and that promised equality should now be fulfilled in whole or part as proposed in this act, H. R. 386.

The following facts are submitted as showing the justness of these claims:

1. Full retired pay was granted for life to all survivors of the Revolutionary, 1812, and Indian Wars, in accordance with rank. (U. S. Stat. L., vol. 4, pp. 269, 270, 529, 530.)

2. The present extra grade and extra pay granted to all Regulars with Civil War volunteer service, regardless of term of such service or its nature.

3. The acts of Congress March 3, 1905, nearly 40 years after the close of the Civil War, giving retirement and retired pay to Gen. Hawley and Gen. Osterhaus as brigadier generals for Civil War service as Volunteers. The granting of more than enlisted men's pay to all such surviving Volunteers by pension act of May 11, 1912.

The legislatures of States representing 50,000,000 of people and all Loyal Legion commanderies have approved the volunteer retired-list measures.

Without commissioned officers to guide, direct, and care for the more than 2,000,000 men of the Army and Navy in 1861 to 1866, the preservation of the Union could not have been accomplished.

Justice delayed for 50 years calls for this legislation. There are not over 6,000 survivors, average age 78, and their numbers are rapidly growing less.

Ninety-five per cent of the officers of the Union forces were volunteers from civil life and promoted from the ranks, but have received no recognition as officers by any general legislation, and 90 per cent of these preservers of the Nation have died without the honor and benefit to which they were entitled by acts of Congress.

All nations of the world have given especial honors to their warrior officers, always recognizing by pay and distinction their claims to consideration.

The Nation is again calling for defenders of the flag, and its vital necessity to-day is officers with ability and courage to command them. No greater inducement could be used to influence patriotic men to make sacrifices for the country at this hour than to show by congressional action that we do not forget such services after they have been rendered. All nations have shown their appreciation of such devotion upon the part of the leaders of their soldiers in battle. Surely we can afford to show a determination to render just reward to our warrior officers who may have been spared to us 50 years after having rendered their great service to the country. They are the survivors of a long roll of honor. They are in the sear and yellow leaf of life. They are the only heroes we have left to us who have actually led men into the red line of battle.

We retire our Regular Army officers at the age of 64 years. Few of these officers ever saw any battle service. There is never any question raised as to cost. Here is a body of men whose average age is about 80 years, every one of whom has seen service in war. We ought to recognize merit and service.

A bill very similar to this, entitled "A bill for the relief of the surviving officers of the Revolution," was before the Senate and debated on the 25th of April, 1828, which passed and became a law. Daniel Webster, then a Senator from Massachusetts, spoke in favor of that bill:

> This bill is intended for those who, being in the Army in October, 1780, then received a solemn promise of half pay for life, on condition that they would continue to serve through the war. Their ground of merit, in that whensoever they joined the Army, being thus solicited by their country to remain in it, they at once went for the whole war; they fastened their fortunes to the standards which they bore, and resolved to continue their military service until it should terminate either in their country's success or in their own death. This is their merit and the ground of their claim.
> The militia who fought at Concord, Lexington, at Bunker Hill, have been alluded to in the course of this debate in terms of well-deserved praise. Be assured, sir, there could with difficulty be found a man who drew his sword or carried his musket at Concord or Lexington or Bunker Hill who would wish you to reject this bill. They might ask you to do more, but never to refrain from doing this. Would to God they were assembled here and had the fate of the bill in their own hands! Would to God the question of its passage were to be put to them! They would affirm it with a unity of acclamation that would rend the roof of the Capitol.
> The objects, then, sir, of the proposed bounty are most worthy and deserving objects. The services which they rendered were in the highest degree useful and important. The country to which they rendered them is great and prosperous. They have lived to see it glorious; let them not live to see it unkind. For me, I can give them but my vote and my prayers, and I give them both with my whole heart.

Senator H. M. Teller, of Colorado, on June 13, 1906, presented a memorial favoring this legislation, as follows:

> In considering the claims of the petitioners to the considerate action of Congress, the value of their services must be judged of by the magnitude and importance of the issues involved in the Civil War and the results accomplished.
>
> In respect to the interests of the whole race of mankind, the preservation of the Union was the most important political event in the tide of time.
> The victory of the Union Army kept in the political firmament of the world, as a beacon light, the republican principle of self-government.
> Not only the repose, the progress, and the prosperity, but the very existence of the United States as a nation was involved in the tremendous struggle.
> The people of the United States owe their present marvelous prosperity, their peace at home, and their influence abroad to the fact that the Union was preserved by the patriotism, valor, and fortitude of the Volunteers.
> It is a well-established historical fact that officers of the Volunteers commanding troops in the field performed their duties with equal ability, zeal, and courage, and encountered the same hazards as did officers of similar rank of the Regular Army. Upon an examination of the records of these surviving generals it will be found that they all had long service, and that the great majority of them entered the service in 1861 and remained therein until the close of the war in 1865.

In view of all of these facts it seems clear that justice and fair dealing require that in respect to services in said war the rights of volunteer officers to honors and emoluments should have been equal to those of the Regular Army. This was not done. The appeal of these veteran volunteer officers is not a call for charity. They simply point to the record and request the Government to render equity to men who believed they have earned and thus far failed to receive equality.

The present request for the proposed legislation is based on this fivefold sanction:

(1) The general merits of the case, including the magnitude, results, and value of the service rendered, national expediency, and patriotic gratitude.

(2) The pledges given by Congress and President Lincoln at the opening of the Civil War to the several States and to the volunteers furnished by them.

(3) The action and policy of the Government since the war in extending to practically all surviving officers of the Regular Army and Navy special rewards exclusively for Civil War service, which, contrary to the pledges referred to, have thus far been withheld from surviving volunteer officers.

(4) The commanding precedent furnished by the United States Government in 1828 and 1832 in granting to the aged surviving officers of the Revolutionary Army full pay, limited to that of a captain, during the remainder of life.

(5) Present public sentiment in the Nation, as shown, among other proofs, by the unanimous action of the legislatures of 13 States, speaking for nearly 50,000,000 of our people, recommending the enactment of such a measure.

LEST WE FORGET.

Gentlemen, I want to appeal to all for support of this bill, not merely to confer honor and compensation upon these men but as a measure to keep the plighted solemn faith of a Nation to them and to show our appreciation of their patriotic services to our common country.

I appeal to men from all sections of our common country, and I want to pay a tribute to the fine chivalrous spirit so often displayed by the southern Member of Congress in these matters, and I want to testify that I have seldom ever appealed to a Confederate veteran or the son of a Confederate veteran and gone empty handed away.

Their services and sacrifices were for us all, and I long to see the day when there will be more general recognition and more tender solicitude felt for the veterans on both sides, by whose sacrifices alone we passed through the crucible that made us the Nation undivided and indivisible that we are to-day. Their blood it was that cemented the divided parts of our common country into one glorious indissoluble Union.

WE HONOR OURSELVES IN HONORING THEM.

For myself I consider it an honor as well as a pleasure to support this measure without reserve and with all my heart. I do this willingly and cheerfully, because I believe that these veterans who preserved for us and our common country the comforts and blessings which we enjoy as a result of their labor and sacrifices are entitled to and should cheerfully receive our deepest appreciation, sympathy, and best efforts in their behalf. [Applause.]

THEIR FAME IS IMMORTAL.

We can not add to their fame, but we can be grateful.

This generation can do little at most to reward or confer honor upon these old veterans.

Their sacrifices and deeds of valor have written their names in letters of unfading light upon the pages of history which time can not dim nor grow old.

They have conferred honor and glory upon our Nation and our generation far beyond our ability to compensate or reward.

Their valor is the Nation's priceless heritage.

They placed a new glory on the brow of freedom.

They gave a sweeter meaning to liberty.

They gave the Nation new life and hope, and they bathed our flag in immortal glory, so that all men from all parts of our common country to-day can unite in one grand song together till its music fills every heart and rolls along the bending sky above us—The song of the flag—the song of a common country and a common flag:

Your flag and my flag,
And how it waves to-day
O'er your land and my land,
And half the world away;
Rose red and blood red,
Its stripes forever gleam;
Snow white and soul white,
The good forefather's dream;
Sky-blue and true blue,
Its stars that shine aright,
A glorious guidon of the day,
A shelter through the night.

Your flag and my flag,
And, oh, how much it holds
Of your heart and my heart,
Secure within its folds;
Your heart and my heart
Beat quicker at its sight,
Sun kissed and wind tossed,
The red and blue and white,
The one flag, the great flag,
The flag for me and you,
Glorified all else beside,
The red and white and blue.

[Applause.]

WILLIAM HAROLD KEHOE.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6279) for the relief of William Harold Kehoe.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint William Harold Kehoe, a cadet at the Military Academy at West Point, upon the graduation of the class of 1917, of which he was a member, to the position of second lieutenant of Infantry of the Army, and to place him upon the retired list with the pay of a retired second lieutenant of Infantry.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT. Let it be again reported, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] objects. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG] is recognized for 30 minutes.

SHIPMENT OF MUNITIONS INTO MEXICO.

THE POLITICAL CAMPAIGN.

Mr. RODENBERG. Mr. Speaker, on August 4, 1916, I addressed the House at considerable length, and in the course of my remarks, while discussing the Mexican situation, I employed the following language:

The trouble at Parral occurred as late as April 10 of this year. The attack on our soldiers at that place was made by the soldiers of Carranza. Four days after the attack, and after the administration had full knowledge of Carranza's treachery, Secretary Lansing issued an order permitting Carranza to import 1,000,000 rounds of small-arms ammunition. The day before the order was issued Mr. Cleveland H. Dodge, vice president of the Phelps-Dodge Co., was in the city of Washington and, according to the newspapers, visited the Secretary of State.

The Phelps-Dodge Co. is engaged in the manufacture and sale of munitions of war, and is the same company that was indicted in the Federal courts for violating the embargo on the shipment of munitions to Mexico in the last year of the Taft administration, and escaped conviction on the technicality that the munitions had not actually reached the Republic of Mexico, but had been stopped at Bisbee, Ariz. Mr. Cleveland H. Dodge, vice president of the Phelps-Dodge Co., is a most interesting gentleman. The records show that he was the heaviest individual contributor to the Democratic national campaign fund in 1912, his first contribution being $30,000. I am not making any charge against the integrity of the Secretary of State, nor do I know positively that the Phelps-Dodge Co. sold Carranza this 1,000,000 rounds of ammunition, but I can not help wondering if there is any connection between the call of Mr. Dodge on Mr. Lansing and the issuance of the order. The ammunition which was imported by Carranza under that order was used in the attack on our soldiers at Carrizal, in which 19 of the Nation's defenders, including 2 officers, lost their lives. If there should be any connection between the visit of Mr. Dodge and the issuance of the order, and if the ammunition that was shipped to Mexico was shipped by the Phelps-Dodge Co., then may God have mercy on an administration that permits a campaign contributor to recoup himself at the expense of the lives of our gallant soldier boys.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

This statement of mine has called forth two denials, one by Mr. Cleveland H. Dodge, which appears in the form of a telegram published in the New York Times on August 6, 1916, and the other by Mr. Robert Lansing, Secretary of State, which appears in the very able address of the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], delivered in the House August 8, 1916.

I shall first address myself to the denial of Mr. Cleveland H. Dodge. It is dated Newport, R. I., August 5, 1916, and reads as follows:

Please deny for me the insinuation and statements of Representative RODENBERG. They are absolutely false. Neither Phelps, Dodge & Co. nor I personally have any interest in manufacture of munitions of war.

CLEVELAND H. DODGE.

In wording his denial as he did Mr. Dodge proves conclusively that, after all, there is something in a name. [Laughter on the Republican side.] It is very apparent that he is trying to "dodge" the charge that I made against him and the corporation with which he is connected. I distinctly stated in my speech that the Phelps-Dodge Co. is engaged in the "manufacture and sale of munitions of war," and in support of that charge I desire to submit the following proof: In volume 209, Federal Reporter, year 1913, beginning at page 910, will be found an account of the indictment of the Phelps-Dodge Mercantile Co., in 1913, for shipping munitions into Mexico in violation of the neutrality resolution of March 14, 1912. The trial judge was Hon. William H. Sawtelle, and the record reads as follows:

UNITED STATES v. PHELPS-DODGE MERCANTILE CO. ET AL.

The Phelps-Dodge Mercantile Co., a corporation, and the Douglas Hardware Co., a corporation, and certain others were indicted for violating neutrality resolution, March 14, 1912, No. 10 (37 Stat., 630), in that they participated in a shipment of munitions of war intended for use in the Mexican revolution. On demurrer to the indictment. Sustained.

Joseph E. Morrison, United States attorney, of Bisbee, Ariz., Doan & Doan, of Douglas, Ariz., for Douglas Hardware Co.; Ellinwood & Ross, of Bisbee, Ariz., and Reese M. Llug, of Phoenix, Ariz., for Phelps-Dodge Mercantile Co., W. H. Brophy, and F. E. Coles.

Sawtelle, district judge: The indictment in this case contains two counts. The charging part of the first count thereof is as follows:

"That Phelps-Dodge Mercantile Co. and Douglas Hardware Co., reputed corporations, and W. H. Brophy, F. E. Coles, and W. F. Fisher, on or about the 15th day of May, A. D. 1913, in the said district and within the jurisdiction of this court, did unlawfully, knowingly, willfully, and feloniously, and with intent to export the munitions of war hereinafter described from the United States of America to and into the United States of Mexico, make and caused to be made a certain shipment of munitions of war, to wit, 50,000 cartridges of the caliber commonly known and designated as 7-M-M; that is to say, did make and caused to be made a shipment of said munitions of war from the city of Douglas, in the county of Cochise, State and district of Arizona, and with the State of Sonora, in the United States of Mexico, as the ultimate destination of said shipment, by them, at the city of Douglas, in the county of Cochise, State and district of Arizona, transporting and causing the said munitions of war to be transported, by means of horses and wagons and by express and railroad transportation in and over the railroad lines of the railroad commonly known and designated as the El Paso & Southwestern Railroad, from the store buildings of the said Douglas Hardware Co., in said city of Douglas, county of Cochise, State and district of Arizona, to the store buildings of the said Phelps-Dodge Mercantile Co., at the city of Bisbee, county of Cochise, State and district of Arizona."

The second count is identical with the first, except that it charges a shipment of 90,000 cartridges of the calibers commonly known and designated as 7-M-M and 30-30 from the store building of the Phelps-Dodge Mercantile Co., at Bisbee, county of Cochise, State and district of Arizona, and with the State of Sonora, in the United States of Mexico, as the ultimate destination of said shipment, by transporting said munitions of war by means of horses and wagon from the store building and warehouse of the Phelps-Dodge Mercantile Co., at Bisbee, to a point in the village of Bakersville, near the Bakersville Hotel, in the said county of Cochise, State and district of Arizona.

The indictment was designed to charge the defendants, and each of them, with a violation of the provisions of the joint resolution of March 14, 1912 (No. 10, 37 Stat. L., p. 630), which is as follows:

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the joint resolution to prohibit the export of coal or other material used in war from any seaport of the United States, approved April 22, 1898, be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"That whenever the President shall find that in any American country conditions of domestic violence exist which are promoted by the use of arms or munitions of war procured from the United States, and shall make proclamation thereof, it shall be unlawful to export except under such limitations and exceptions as the President shall prescribe any arms or munitions of war from any place in the United States to such country until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress.

"SEC. 2. That any shipment of material hereby declared unlawful after such a proclamation shall be punishable by fine not exceeding $10,000, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, or both."

A demurrer has been interposed to each count of the indictment upon the grounds that neither count of said indictment states facts sufficient to constitute a public offense on the part of the defendants, or any of them, under the laws of the United States of America.

(1) It will be observed that the pleader has attempted to follow the form of indictment approved by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the United States v. Chavez, reported in 228 U. S., 525 et seq., 33 Sup. Ct., 595, 57 L. Ed., 950; but, in my opinion, the indictment in this case does not measure up to the indictment in the Chavez case, and it is my opinion that the demurrer to the indictment in this case should be sustained, because when the indictment is carefully considered it is made manifest that the defendants are charged with the mere intent to ship the munitions of war in question into the forbidden territory and nothing more, and because the indictment is fatally defective in that it does not name a place of destination of the shipment of the said munitions of war within the forbidden territory.

As I have stated in the case of United States v. Steinfeld & Co. (No. C. 705, 209 Fed. 904), decided at this term, and in which case demurrer was sustained to the indictment, I do not consider the mere shipping of munitions of war from one point in the United States of America to another point in the United States of America an offense under the joint resolution of Congress above referred to, and I do not consider the mere intent to ship goods from a point within the United States of America into the United States of Mexico an offense, unless that intent is coupled with an actual shipment made from a definite point in the United States of America to a definite point in the United States of Mexico.

In the case of United States v. Chavez, above referred to, the offense charged was an actual shipment started from El Paso, Tex., to the city of Juarez, Mexico, and the defendant was carrying the munitions of war on his person and was arrested in the city of El Paso, after having started and while he was on his way to the city of Juarez. That case is not a parallel one to the case at bar, because in the case at bar the actual shipment charged was a shipment made from one point in the United States of America, and in the State of Arizona, to another point in the State of Arizona, and a careful study of the indictment reveals no actual shipment made from a point in Arizona to a point within the forbidden territory, and the mere intent to make a shipment of munitions of war can not, in my judgment, be held to be an offense under the joint resolution of Congress in question, because that resolution nowhere makes it an offense, either directly or by necessary implication; and the Chavez case, above referred to, as I construe it, does not so hold, because in the Chavez case the intent which appears in the indictment was coupled with the actual shipment made from El Paso to the city of Juarez, while in the case at bar the intent stands alone and is coupled with no actual shipment save the shipment which was already made and previously ended.

(2) Furthermore, this indictment is bad in law, because it fails to specify a definite point of destination within the forbidden territory to which the shipment of munitions of war is alleged to have been made, or to charge that the point of destination in the State of Sonora, United States of Mexico, was to the grand jury unknown.

In the case of Almy v. State of California (24 How. (65 U. S.), 174; 16 L. Ed., 644), to which I have already referred in my opinion in the case of United States v. Steinfeld & Co., the Supreme Court of the United States has made it very clear, if the opinion of any court on the point were necessary, that the course of business is that, when a shipment of goods is made from one country to another, a bill of lading is made out and the goods are shipped and consigned to some definite consignee at some definite point of destination.

It is not conceivable that the defendants in this case should have shipped the munitions of war in question into the forbidden territory without having shipped them to some definite consignee at some definite destination, and, if this had been done, the point of destination could and should have been alleged in the indictment, so as to give the defendants notice of the precise offense charged against them, and so that a conviction or acquittal under this indictment could be pleaded in bar to a subsequent indictment for the same offense charged in the same way.

During the argument of this demurrer the United States attorney avowed that, in drawing the indictment in this and other similar cases, he took the indictment in the case of United States v. Chavez, supra, as his model. Since the indictment in the Chavez case charges of shipment of munitions of war made to the city of Juarez, Mexico, a definite place of destination within the forbidden territory, and the indictment in the case at bar merely charges a shipment of munitions of war made, with the State of Sonora, a large country and not a place, as its ultimate destination, it appears that the pleader did not follow his model in this particular in this indictment, and it becomes pertinent to inquire why he did not do so. Under these circumstances it seems reasonable to asume that if the pleader did not charge the place of ultimate destination in the State of Sonora, he did not do so because he could not, and he could not do it because he did not know what the destination was; and if he did not know what it was, and still did not charge that the place of destination was to the grand jury unknown, he must have done so because no shipment had actually been put on its final transit toward and into the forbidden territory, and there was, in fact, no shipment made, and hence no place of ultimate destination within the State of Sonora.

In this connection it should be observed that the indictment charges that the ultimate destination was the State of Sonora, and that the word "ultimate" was interlined in the original indictment, thus showing that the pleader of necessity had it in mind that the shipment made from the city of Douglas to the city of Bisbee, or the shipment from the city of Bisbee to the village of Bakersville, was not in either case the final shipment, and that the munitions of war were to be afterwards reshipped, from Bisbee or Bakersville or some other point across the border into the State of Sonora, and therefore that the respective shipments charged in the indictment were merely from one place in the United States of America to another place in the United States of America, and not in the State of Sonora, as the indictment apparently charges, and consequently that the indictment in fact charges no overt act of illegal shipment done in connection with the mere naked intent charged.

It should also be observed that in holding that a definite destination for each shipment should have been named in the indictment, or else that the indictment should have been charged that such destination was to the grand jury unknown, this court intends to go no further than the United States Supreme Court tacitly went in upholding the indictment in the Chavez case on this point, and does not intend to hold or even to intimate that allegations charging the giving of a bill of lading and the naming of a consignee are necessary ingredients of an indictment of the kind under consideration here; but what has been said and quoted above regarding a consignee and a bill of lading has been used merely for the purpose of showing the necessity of having a definite place of destination of a shipment of munitions of war or goods of any other kind in commercial transaction of every sort, where a shipment is alleged.

The demurrer will be sustained to each count, and the indictment will be quashed and dismissed, and judgment accordingly will be entered.

The Phelps-Dodge Mercantile Co. is a subsidiary of the Phelps-Dodge Co., as is clearly shown by "Moody's Manual of Railronds and Corporation Securities" for the year 1915. On page 3127 of this manual this subsidiary corporation is described as follows:

Phelps-Dodge Mercantile Co. (controlled by stock ownership): Incorporated December 14, 1911, and acquired the store business and stocks of merchandise of the Copper Queen Consolidated Mining Co., Detroit Copper Mining Co. of Arizona, Montezuma Copper Co., Southwestern Mercantile Co., and Burro Mountain Copper Co. The total gross sales and transfers for the year 1914 were $5,920,223, on which a net profit of 8.38 per cent was made.

Capital stock: Authorized, $4,000,000; issued, $2,000,000; par, $100. No bonded debt. All owned by Phelps, Dodge & Co. A dividend of 15 per cent was paid in 1912, 25 per cent in 1913, and 20 per cent in 1914.

Income account, year ended December 31, 1914: Net earnings, $460,656; depreciation, etc., $36,791; dividends paid, $400,000; surplus for year, $23,865.

Officers: James McLean, president; A. C. James, C. H. Dodge, vice presidents; George Notman, secretary and treasurer; F. T. Bulmer, assistant secretary; C. W. Parsons, assistant treasurer, New York; W. H. Brophy, general manager, Bisbee, Ariz.

Directors: Not reported.

It will be noted that Mr. Cleveland H. Dodge is one of the vice presidents of the Phelps-Dodge Mercantile Co., and the manual also shows that he is one of the vice presidents of Phelps, Dodge & Co. It may be true that Phelps, Dodge & Co. are not directly engaged in the "manufacture" of munitions of war, but in the face of this record it can not be denied by any man who has the slightest regard for the truth that Phelps, Dodge & Co., of which corporation Cleveland H. Dodge is vice president, are interested in the sale of munitions of war. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I shall not attempt to analyze the opinion rendered by Judge Sawtelle, as it speaks for itself. The neutrality resolution, adopted by Congress on March 14, 1912, reads, in part, as follows:

It shall be unlawful to export, except under such limitations and exceptions as the President shall prescribe, any arms or munitions of war from any place in the United States to such country until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress.

The indictment as drawn by the United States district attorney stated explicitly that the defendant company "did make and caused to be made a shipment of said munitions of war from the city of Douglas, in the county of Cochise, State and district of Arizona, and with the State of Sonora, in the United States of Mexico, as the ultimate destination of said shipment." The mere fact that the indictment did not specify a definite point of destination within the State of Sonora caused the learned judge to hold that the indictment was fatally defective, and on this flimsy technicality the demurrer was sustained and the indictment was quashed and dismissed.

The Hon. William H. Sawtelle was appointed Federal judge for Arizona on August 18, 1913, by President Wilson. His principal backer and the man who was primarily responsible for his appointment was Mr. Everett E. Ellinwood, general attorney for the Phelps, Dodge & Co. interests in Arizona, and who appears as attorney for the defendants in this case. I have no doubt that Mr. Cleveland H. Dodge joined in the recommendation of his general attorney. [Applause on the Republican side.]

At the time this indictment was returned the Hon Joseph E. Morrison, of Bisbee, Ariz., was the United States district attorney. Mr. Morrison, who is a highly reputable gentleman, states that he received specific instructions from the Department of Justice in Washington to prevent the indictment at the same time of the Winchester Arms Co., in which Marcellus Dodge, a relative of Cleveland H. Dodge, is heavily interested, and which concern was also involved in the shipment of munitions to Mexico in violation of the neutrality resolution. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Later on Mr. Morrison received a request from A. B. Bielaski, Chief of the Division of Investigation, asking him to suppress the instructions issued by the Department of Justice and under no circumstances to permit them to be made public. [Applause on the Republican side.] Mr. Morrison is no longer United States district attorney, having been supplanted by a "deserving Democrat."

In order to get at the facts with regard to the shipment of munitions of war from the United States to Mexico I introduced the following concurrent resolution on August 7, 1916:

House concurrent resolution 53.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That a select committee of five Senators and five Representatives be appointed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, respectively, and be empowered and instructed to investigate the shipment of munitions of war from the United States to Mexico, and to any Government, belligerent faction, outlaw band, or private individual in Mexico, from the date of the embargo proclamation of President Taft to and including the days when the investigation shall be in progress; and

Resolved further, That said select committee shall particularly investigate and report whether any one particular firm, company, or corporation, or several particular firms, companies, or corporations has or have been identified with the business of shipping munitions to Mexico and whether any such company, firm, or corporation has, in its corporate capacity or through any of its officers, directors, trustees, or large stockholders, been prominently identified with any officer of this Government or any political party, or has contributed largely to the campaign funds of any party or candidate.

This resolution was properly referred by the Speaker to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. On August 10, 1916, I addressed the following letter to the Hon. HENRY D. FLOOD, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

AUGUST 10, 1916.

Hon. HENRY D. FLOOD,
Chairman Committee on Foreign Affairs,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. FLOOD: On August 7 I introduced House concurrent resolution No. 53, providing for the appointment of a select committee of five Senators and five Representatives to investigate the shipment of munitions of war from the United States into Mexico. I would greatly appreciate it if the committee, of which you are chairman, would grant me a hearing on this resolution.

If it is not your purpose to grant hearings, I urgently request that the committee take some action on my resolution. I regard it of the greatest importance that all the facts relating to the shipment of munitions to Mexico should be made public, especially as the ammunition which has been imported into Mexico from the United States has been used by the adherents of Carranza in the destruction of American life and property.

Very respectfully, W. A. RODENBERG.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there to an interruption?

Mr. RODENBERG. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I am a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and this is the first time I knew that a resolution of that kind was before the committee.

Mr. RODENBERG. That is not surprising. The distinguished chairman has up to this time failed to reply to my letter, and I confess that I am beginning to despair of ever hearing from him. If the shipment of munitions to Mexico will bear the light of that "pitiless publicity," of which we heard so much in the early days of the present administration, then why should the Democratic majority in this House hesitate to pass my resolution, which provides for a full investigation by a select committee in which Democrats will predominate? [Applause on the Republican side.]

In crediting Mr. Cleveland H. Dodge with a contribution of only $30,000 to the Democratic campaign fund of 1912 I unintentionally did that gentleman a gross injustice, as he is fairly entitled to credit for a much larger amount. There is nothing cheap about Mr. Dodge. In the testimony of Mr. William F. McCombs, chairman of the Democratic national committee of 1912, given before a subcommittee on Privileges and Elections of the United States Senate pursuant to Senate resolution 79, volume 1, page 875, Mr. McCombs states that in the prenomination contest Mr. Cleveland H. Dodge contributed $51,300 to the fund that was raised to insure the nomination of Woodrow Wilson.

In the sworn statement of receipts and expenditures of the national Democratic committee for the 1912 campaign two additional contributions are credited to Mr. Cleveland H. Dodge. According to this statement on August 30, 1912, Mr. Dodge donated $5,000 and on November 9, 1912, Mr. Dodge again contributed $30,000. The three contributions of which we have been able to find a record total the enormous sum of $86,300.

I submit these facts for what they are worth, and the public can draw its own conclusions as to whether or not Mr. Cleveland H. Dodge is able to exercise any "sinister" influence with the present administration. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, as to the denial of Mr. Lansing: In his speech on August 8 the eloquent gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. HARRISON, incorporated a telegram from Mr. Lansing to Mr. Polk, Acting Secretary of State, and in which Mr. Lansing says:

> Have never met Cleveland H. Dodge in my life. Have had no communications with him of any kind. Rodenberg charge utterly false.

In the speech of the gentleman from Mississippi, discussing the date of the shipment of munitions into Mexico, he further says:

> And the records show that on the 3d day of April Mr. Arredondo, accredited agent of Carranza, requested and got permission to ship these goods from Douglas, Ariz., into Mexico. They had been in Mexico for a week before the killing at Parral.

I have no desire to misrepresent the facts or to place Secretary Lansing in a false light before the country. I based my statement that the State Department had permitted 1,000,000 rounds of ammunition to be shipped into Mexico after the fight at Parral on the following press dispatch, which appeared on the first page of the Washington Post on April 15, 1916, and which reads as follows:

> STATE DEPARTMENT TO LET 1,000,000 ROUNDS OF AMMUNITION CROSS LINE.
> DOUGLAS, ARIZ., April 14.
> The State Department has issued a permit to the de facto government of Mexico to pass 1,000,000 rounds of small-arm ammunition from Douglas across the lines of Agua Prieta during the next few days. The ammunition is now en route to the border.

Just about this time Mr. Cleveland H. Dodge visited the city of Washington, and I was informed that he had called at the White House and on several Cabinet officers, among them Mr. Lansing. The statement of the Secretary of State that he has never met Cleveland H. Dodge is accepted by me as the truth, because I have no hesitancy in saying that I have much greater respect for Mr. Lansing's veracity than I have for his ability. There are so many things that he does not know that I am quite willing to believe that he is not even acquainted with the "good angel" of the Democratic Party. However, the fact that this particular shipment of 1,000,000 rounds of ammunition was authorized to be made before and not after the trouble at Parral is not in any way material, in view of the very damaging admission made by Secretary Lansing in his note to Carranza on June 26, 1916. In that note Mr. Lansing employs this direct and unequivocal language:

> It would be tedious to recount instance after instance, outrage after outrage, atrocity after atrocity to illustrate the true nature and extent of the widespread conditions of lawlessness and violence which have prevailed. During the past nine months in particular the frontier of the United States along the lower Rio Grande has been thrown into a state of constant apprehension and turmoil because of frequent and sudden incursions into American territory and depredations and murders on American soil by Mexican bandits, who have taken the lives and destroyed the property of American citizens, sometimes carrying American citizens across the international boundary with the booty seized. American garrisons have been attacked at night, American soldiers killed and their equipment and horses stolen; American ranches have been raided, property stolen and destroyed, and American trains wrecked and plundered. The attacks on Brownsville, Red House Ferry, Progreso Post Office, and Las Peladas, all occurring during September last, are typical. In these attacks on American territory, Carranzista adherents, and even Carranzista soldiers, took part in the looting, burning, and killing. Not only were these murders characterized by ruthless brutality, but uncivilized acts of mutilation were perpetrated.

By Mr. Lansing's own admission the State Department stands convicted of criminal inefficiency. The Secretary distinctly states that "the attack on Brownsville, Red House Ferry, Progreso Post Office, and Las Peladas, all occurring during September last," in the year 1915, and yet as late as April 3, 1916, or seven months after these attacks by the soldiers of Carranza, according to the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], based on the proof furnished by the Secretary of State, Mr. Arredondo secured permission to import 1,000,000 rounds of ammunition into Mexico.

No apologist for the administration will attempt to deny that this ammunition was used in the fight at Carrizal, which occurred on June 21 of this year, and in which 19 of our brave troopers were ambushed and foully murdered by the adherents of Carranza. The point that I make and that I wish to impress upon the country is that the State Department has permitted ammunition to be imported into Mexico from the United States to be subsequently used in an attack upon our soldiers, and that, too, after the department had ample notice of the treachery of Carranza and his followers. This fact is fully established by the admission of the Secretary of State himself and by the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi. It is one of the very strongest counts in the indictment of the present administration, and on this count the people will render a verdict of guilty on the 7th day of November.

Democracy's feast of folly is drawing to a close. The days are numbered. The handwriting appears upon the wall: "Mene, mene, tekel, Upharsin"—"Thou art weighed in the balances and art found wanting." [Applause on the Republican side.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 13046. An act to consolidate certain forest lands in the Oregon National Forest in the State of Oregon.

LINCOLN MEMORIAL.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the addresses delivered at the Lincoln memorial services day before yesterday at Hodgenville, Ky., may be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Did not the gentleman secure permission to print the President's speech in the RECORD?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I secured that leave, Mr. Speaker, for the President, but speeches were made there by Mr. Robert J. Collier, Gov. Joseph W. Folk, Senator WILLIAMS, Monsignor Shahan, the Secretary of War, and Rev. Dr. William A. Ganfield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the speeches delivered at Hodgenville touching the Lincoln memorial last Monday. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE POLITICAL CAMPAIGN.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks made by my friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG], in explanation of the insinuations and intimations which he sought to make against the State Department in a speech delivered some weeks ago. The gentleman always speaks with great force and splendid eloquence, but he is only another illustration of the fact that those who have been speaking during this Republican campaign have been unable to raise any direct issue before the American people except by insinuation and intimation, for which they always have to apologize or explain when confronted with the facts, which in this particular case were so clearly set forth in the able speech of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is always easy to criticize. The gentleman himself, with all of the eloquence that he possesses, has shown that to be a fact. But it is more difficult to present something constructive, or to show what those criticizing would have done if placed in a similar situation. The man who owns a house will not permit another to tear it down unless he is guaranteed that the one tearing it down has the ability and the intention to put up a better structure in its place. So the people of the United States will not permit the Republican Party to destroy the wise legislation enacted by a Democratic Congress and approved by a Democratic President, to absolutely overturn the performances of a Democratic administration, unless they can guarantee to the country that they are in a position to enact better legislation and to do something better for the people of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This they have failed to do. Even the eloquence of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG] has failed to show to the country anything that he could have done to improve upon what the Democratic Congress has done. Even the presidential candidate of the Republican Party, in the great number of speeches he has made upon his western and southern tour, has been unable to give to the people any evidence that if placed in that position of great responsibility he could have done any better, that he could have accomplished any more than a Democratic President and a Democratic Congress have accomplished.

I was very much impressed with the press reports of a speech Mr. Hughes delivered in my home city of Nashville, Tenn., a few days ago, in the course of which he undertook to evade the positive and emphatic statement he made in his speech of acceptance and in other speeches that if he had been President of the United States he would have recognized Huerta, the man who won the confidence of Madero, and, having won that confidence, was placed at the head of the Mexican Army, and then used the power conferred upon him to betray his benefactor, to throw him into prison, and finally to assassinate him with the soldiers who were under his command. When the Republican candidate was asked in the course of his criticism of the President's Mexican policy what he would have done, all Mr. Hughes was able to say was that he would have protected American rights, but he did not explain how he would have done so. He was not able to offer any specific plan of improvement over the Democratic policy.

Mr. Speaker, the people will not forget that Woodrow Wilson has kept this Nation out of war. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

They will not forget that he has preferred to save the lives of thousands of the young men of this country rather than to plunge us into a needless and unnecessary war in Mexico at the behest and instance of a few men who have great property interests in that country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No, not now. I will do so later, if I have the time. The people of this country will not forget that during this administration this country has enjoyed a prosperity almost unparalleled. And I wish to say to the gentleman from Illinois that the Democratic Party, the Democrats in Congress, the Democrats in the country look with absolute confidence upon the verdict of the people which will be rendered upon November 7. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But, Mr. Speaker, I arose to discuss the serious situation which confronts the people whom I have the honor to represent and hundreds of thousands of people in other States.

I wish to speak a few moments on an amendment adopted by the Senate to the revenue bill which is now in conference between the two Houses, and which will be shortly presented to this House for its consideration, and I trust its approval. That amendment reads as follows:

That whenever during the existence of a war in which the United States is not engaged the President shall be satisfied that there is reasonable ground to believe that under the laws, regulations, or practices of any country, colony, or dependency contrary to the law and practice of nations, the importation into their own or any other country, dependency, or colony of any article the product of the soil or industry of the United States and not injurious to health or morals is prevented or restricted the President is authorized and empowered, within his discretion, to prohibit or restrict during the period such prohibition or restriction is in force, the importation into the United States of similar or other articles, products of such country, dependency, or colony as in his opinion the public interest may require; and in such case he shall make proclamation stating the article or articles which are prohibited from importation into the United States; and any person or persons who shall import, or attempt or conspire to import, or be concerned in importing, such article or articles into the United States contrary to the prohibition in such proclamation, shall be liable to a fine of not less than $2,000 nor more than $50,000, or to imprisonment not to exceed two years, or both, in the discretion of the court. The President may change, modify, revoke, or renew such proclamation in his discretion.

The only objection I have to this amendment is that it does not go far enough. Personally, if the restrictions on the importation of tobacco into neutral countries are not removed I would be glad to see an amendment adopted which would place an embargo upon some of the supplies which Great Britain is receiving from this country, or at least impose a tax upon her securities which have been disposed of in such great quantities in this country in order to secure funds with which to carry on the war in which she is engaged.

The enactment of the amendment which I have quoted is necessary in order to prevent discrimination against the products of our soil and factories, by giving the President of the United States the authority to resort to retaliatory measures, if necessary, in order to maintain a free and fair field for the products of American labor in neutral countries during the European war. It is of tremendous importance, particularly to the growers of tobacco, whose product is being discriminated against and denied a free and unrestricted market in neutral countries by reason of the unlawful and arbitrary action of Great Britain.

It was suggested and prepared as the result of a largely attended conference of tobacco growers from Tennessee, Kentucky, Virginia, and Maryland recently held in the city of Washington and which was attended by a number of Senators and Representatives from those States for the purpose of securing relief from the unreasonable and unjust restrictions imposed upon tobacco shipments by the British Government.

At the request of the conference it was submitted before introduction in the Senate to the State Department and has its approval. The Secretary of State, Mr. Lansing, and our foreign trade adviser, Mr. Marion Letcher, have been for some time making insistent efforts to secure relief through negotiations, but those efforts have up to this time apparently failed, and the conference felt that the exigencies of the situation demanded that the power should be put in the hands of the President to use retaliatory measures in order to preserve a free and fair field for our tobacco in the markets of the world, provided Great Britain continues to persist in what appears to be a deliberate determination to deprive this product of a neutral market.

Although introduced primarily in the interest of tobacco, the amendment applies to all products of the farm and factory. It should be promptly enacted into law, and the power conferred upon the President should be promptly exercised if Great Britain refuses to change her policy with respect to our foreign trade.

We are not responsible for the European war, and certainly during its continuance the products of American labor should not be permitted to suffer merely to serve the selfish purposes of any one of the belligerent powers. We hear a good deal in this day and time about Americanism and the proud privilege of being an American. It is indeed a high privilege, and the American citizen who does not unreservedly stand for America first, last, and all the time is unworthy of being an American citizen. [Applause.]

But, Mr. Speaker, the Government also owes a duty to its citizens. America owes a duty to Americans, and that is to protect them and their products from the unjust exactions and practices of every other nation in the world. [Applause.]

If this amendment is enacted into law, it will give to the President the power to protect our citizens in their just rights in a peaceable but none the less effective manner.

Permit me to briefly recount to you the situation which now confronts the tobacco growers in the district I have the honor to represent and in the States of Kentucky and Virginia, where dark tobacco is grown. This tobacco is almost entirely exported. The quantity absorbed in this country is negligible. By British orders in council of March, 1915, restrictions and conditions were imposed on the shipment of tobacco into markets in neutral countries which resulted in practically prohibiting its export to Holland and Scandinavia because ships refused to carry it in the face of these restrictions. As a consequence, the 1915 crop, which was in the field and which was harvested and made ready for the market in the fall, was reduced in price in the hands of the grower to a point below the cost of production. In response to continuous demands of our Government Great Britain, on November 15, 1915, agreed to no longer interfere with tobacco shipments to Holland and Denmark, or to impose any restrictions or conditions whatever on shipments to any neutral country.

Tobacco then began to move, and the price in the markets rapidly advanced owing to the increased demand. But, Mr. Speaker, the rise in price came entirely too late to benefit the majority of tobacco growers, because at the time the agreement was made, in many instances, the tobacco had passed out of the hands of the men who produced it into the hands of the buyer. However, the growers, knowing there would be necessarily a greater demand for the 1916 tobacco crop if the war continued, and having no reason to believe that the British Government was not acting in good faith in making the agreement, were induced to put out a greater crop than for many years. Possibly 25 per cent more tobacco was raised this year than was raised last year.

And just at this time, just when the tobacco grower is making ready to put his tobacco on the market, the British Government, without warning, suddenly withdraws from its agreement, restores former conditions by reimposing the restrictions which were placed on tobacco shipments prior to November 15, 1915. More than that, it is even denying the right of shipment of that portion of the 1915 crop which is lying in the ports of this country not yet exported. A few weeks ago it agreed to modify that agreement by saying that if the 1915 crop had been purchased in good faith prior to August 4 and was shipped before August 31, it might go through without restrictions; but I happen to know that there are hundreds of hogsheads of tobacco now lying in the ports of New Orleans and Baltimore which can not secure ships to transport them across the ocean because of the fact that these ships fear that they will be detained when they get into European waters. I happen to know of the case of one great shipping line which had agreed to take more than 1,600 hogsheads of tobacco to Holland and Denmark, but later on withdrew from that agreement, notifying the proposed shippers that it could not lift the tobacco unless they first secured a cable from the London foreign office to the headquarters of the line giving assurances that the ships carrying the tobacco would not be held or detained when they reached the other side of the ocean; and despite the fact that our department has been attempting since that time to secure such assurance from the London foreign office, up to this time it has not been given.

Mr. Speaker, these facts show bad faith, of which no Government in this world should be guilty, and which this Government ought not in the interest of our producers to permit. [Applause on the Democratic side.] When all of the facts are considered, one can not fail to be impressed with the idea that it was part of a deliberate scheme to depress the price of this great American product in the hands of the man who has toiled to produce it. It is a blow at 3,000,000 of citizens of this country who are dependent upon this product not only for the comforts but for the actual necessities of life. What is the reason for this action? Why do I say that it is a part of a scheme to depress the price of tobacco in the hands of the growers? Tobacco has been expressly declared to be a noncontraband. It can neither be used for food nor clothing nor munitions. It can afford no aid to the enemy in the carrying on of the war. Then why should Great Britain, just at the opening of the market, withdraw from her previous agreement and reimpose the restrictions which effectually prevented the entrance of our tobacco into Holland?

The reason is made plain by the results which will unquestionably follow. Germany and Austria have always been heavy buyers of our tobacco. These markets furnish possibly 60 per cent of the competition in buying. France and Italy have likewise bought a great deal of our tobacco, but in those countries the Governments exercise a monopoly in the purchase of tobacco. The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce states that if the war continues, France and Italy will possibly need twice their normal supply during the coming year. In addition to this, there were imported into Great Britain in 1915 more than 124,000,000 pounds of tobacco. It is true that the same report states that on April 30 of this year there were in bond in England over 251,000,000 pounds, but it is also stated by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce that Great Britain has granted a concession to the British & American Tobacco Co. to import during the year beginning June 1, four times, plus 10 per cent, the amount imported into England during the quarter ending March 31 of this year; but the power to buy on the part of this great English company is not limited by the number of pounds they can import into Great Britain. The Imperial Tobacco Co. controls possibly 80 per cent of the tobacco trade of England. It is a rich and powerful company. It has the resources to enable it to come to this country and to go into our tobacco fields, buy our tobacco from the tobacco growers at a low price, then, if necessary, put that tobacco into warehouses and hold it on this side of the ocean until either the war ceases or prices advance. It is to the interest of these buyers, it is to the interest of the countries named, to purchase their tobacco as cheaply as possible, and the cutting off of the competition which will be had if tobacco is permitted to go unrestricted into neutral countries will bring about the result evidently sought to be accomplished. If shipments of tobacco are not restricted, there is going to be an unprecedented advance in prices, for France and all European countries are bound to buy very largely. The British Government does not seem to be concerned over the fact that by reason of its agreement the tobacco growers of this country put in a big crop rather than turn their attention to other crops, and now, after the crop has been produced and is about ready for the market they find the agreement abrogated, and they are left to the mercy of the big speculator who can afford to buy the product and hold it for better prices. It is not concerned over the fact that these restrictions mean a low price for tobacco to the hundreds of thousands whose toil has produced it, who will be compelled to sell their tobacco because they are not financially able to hold it for better prices. It will mean a loss of $50,000,000 to the tobacco growers of this country, and of more than five and possibly ten millions of dollars to the people of the immediate section from which I come. It works an equal hardship on the small buyer, because he is not financially able to buy the tobacco and hold it for better prices.

This condition of affairs should not be tolerated. Our Government has exercised, properly and consistently, a strict neutrality during this European war.

RECIPROCITY.—But it is a fact, nevertheless, that Great Britain has enjoyed wonderful advantages in the way of purchasing supplies and munitions and the immense volume of credit extended. She should stand in a more reciprocal attitude toward this country. She should understand that she can not expect to continue to enjoy all these advantages and at the same time impose restrictions and unjustly hamper and embarrass our foreign trade to the detriment of our law-abiding citizens. [Applause.] Our President should be given authority to retaliate against any nation which unjustly seeks to lay its hand on the product of American labor. No one denies the right of any belligerent country to prohibit the importation of any article of commerce into its own territory or to prevent the shipment of contraband into the territory of its enemy. But, Mr. Speaker, we do deny the right of any belligerent country to interfere with the shipment of our noncontraband products to neutral ports or to seek to impose any restrictions whatsoever upon a product so clearly noncontraband as tobacco. I speak in behalf of thousands of honest, hard-working, patriotic, and law-abiding citizens whose year's labor is tied up in tobacco, and who will be denied the just fruits of their labor if these restrictions are not removed and the right of transportation guaranteed. I appeal in their behalf to Congress to enact this legislation, and when enacted I shall earnestly appeal to the President to use the power so conferred to exact justice for these good citizens and the respect of all belligerents for the right of this great agricultural product to freely move to the neutral countries of the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In conclusion I may be pardoned for referring to the fact that during this stupendous conflict there have been evidences of a strong leaning among various groups and even leaders of public thought in this country toward either one or the other of the contending forces. This action is not in accordance with the spirit of neutrality which is enjoined upon us as a great neutral nation and a distinct variance from the warning expressed by Washington to steer clear of all entangling alliances and affiliations. I am happy to state, Mr. Speaker, that this is a charge which can not be laid at the door of the constituency which I have the honor to represent and which most undeservedly is the victim of an unfair abridgement of their rights and plain privileges. [Applause.]

Of all the sections of this country, it stands out as one not participating in the prosperity attending the furnishing of munitions and other war supplies. Owing to the unjust and wrongful interference with the sale of its noncontraband product, it has been made to suffer while other sections have basked in prosperity. This section, without in any sense expressing either criticism or envy at the good fortune which has come to others, however, feels that this all the more emphasizes its claim to protection and justice at the hands of this Government. [Applause.] Permit me to say, Mr. Speaker, that there is a deep-seated resentment in the minds of the 3,000,000 citizens thus affected, which is strongly reflected in the press, and with which this body must reckon, and which those people have a right to feel will be respected. [Applause.]

Among the many expressions which have appeared in the press I take the liberty of referring particularly to editorials which have appeared in the Nashville Banner, of Nashville, Tenn., one of the most widely circulated and influential papers in the entire South. This paper has repeatedly and urgently demanded for an insistence of those rights which are but the common due of the American tobacco growers and on which their hope of a fair recompense for their labor—aye, their hope of acquiring those necessities on which their welfare and very subsistence depends. Conscious of the correctness of its stand, the Nashville Banner has, I repeat, taken up the just cause of the tobacco grower, and with an insight into the situation at once clear, and the broadest comprehension. Because of the breadth of understanding and for the further enlightenment of this House as to the true insight and the dire need which this proposed restriction will bring to thousands of the best type of American citizenship, I am taking the liberty of quoting one of the Banner editorials which has just appeared on this subject. The editorial reads as follows:

THE TOBACCO EMBARGO.

The arbitrary action of Great Britain revoking the November agreement, which permitted the entrance of American tobacco to neutral ports without restriction, has aroused an indignant determination among tobacco growers in Tennessee, Kentucky, and Virginia to protest against this action taking effect. A delegation of growers from these States has gone to Washington to consult with their representatives in Congress about the matter.

This is a most vital question for this section. Tennessee has a yield of about 70,000,000 pounds of tobacco, and most of it is grown in the region proximate to Nashville. The prices are now high and if this embargo can be broken the prices will likely be record breaking. Experts expect an increase from 50 to 60 per cent over the present prices.

The embargo was to have gone into effect on August 1, but a protest, chiefly through the activity of Representative BYRNS, caused a postponement to September 1. This will help the grower indirectly and in a small measure, because considerable tobacco in the warehouses was in this way cleared.

There appears to be three agencies working against the grower:

First. Great Britain and her allies, because a restriction of sale to the central powers through neutral sources will cheapen the stock which must be bought for their armies in the field.

Second. Because the American Tobacco Co. is endeavoring to get the price of tobacco cheapened by curtailing the foreign demand.

Third. Holland grows tobacco extensively in Java and also in Sumatra and according to our commercial reports the price of Dutch tobacco (which was exempted from restrictions of any kind) rose enormously in price until 16 days after the November agreement removing the embargo had been reached, when competition with American tobacco caused a considerable fall in the Dutch product, as naturally its monopoly of trade with the central powers was broken.

These three factors, and particularly the first, will emphasize the difficulties which confront us.

If our tobacco is shut out for a considerable period, what is to hinder the Dutch trader from getting a hold on the German trade, which will be hard to break even at the close of the war?

The Bulgar is now fighting his way into Grecian Macedonia, which, east of Cavalla, has immense possibilities for tobacco cultivation and which grows the higher grades of Turkish tobacco. He may not stick there, but if he does, or if an agreement with Greece is reached, it will furnish a new tobacco supply for the central powers. If the Germans are deprived of our product for a considerable length of time they will get used to the Dutch or Greek tobacco, and this will have an effect on the sale of our product even in time of peace.

The hope had been set high that record prices would be paid for Tennessee tobacco this year, which would not only help the producers, but would be felt in all the trade channels in the district. Now, this selfish and unreasonable act of Great Britain, if not stopped, will blight these anticipations. Owing to the increased demand occasioned by the supply needed for the armies it is likely that tobacco may maintain a fair price even if the German market is denied to American exports, but this is a matter of pure conjecture. If, however, we are permitted to ship to neutral markets and thus indirectly supply the central powers the producers will profit greatly. There is no sane argument that can justify England's action. It is arbitrary, unfriendly, and selfish.

This is a matter for diplomatic treatment and should be dealt with vigorously. It should be in the President's power to prevent Great Britain's arbitrary action. She in many ways depends on this country and can be brought to time in matters of this kind by acts of reprisals if they are not stopped.

EMBARGO ON TOBACCO.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time in defense of the people of my district and of other districts against the injustice and unreasonableness of the embargo placed by Great Britain and other belligerent nations of Europe upon the shipment of tobacco from the United States to the markets of Europe.

During the existence of the present European war Great Britain has twice placed these unjust restrictions upon the shipments of tobacco from our country to the neutral markets of Europe. In March, 1915, the British Government issued an order in council by which restrictions and conditions were imposed upon the shipment of tobacco into the markets of neutral countries, which practically prohibited its export to Holland and Scandinavia, because shippers refused to accept tobacco on account of the restrictions imposed by the British Government. On account of these conditions buyers of tobacco who desired to ship this product to Germany and Austria were unable to export tobacco into Germany and Austria or into Holland and Scandinavia. As a considerable portion of the dark tobacco raised in Kentucky and Tennessee is exported to these countries, this restriction and hindrance resulted in a reduction in the price to the grower of tobacco to such an extent that in many cases the farmers were compelled to sell their product at less than the cost of production. Strong protests were made by the State Department of this Government against the action of Great Britain in imposing these restrictions, and in November, 1915, the British Government removed this embargo and permitted tobacco to be shipped into Holland, Scandinavia, and thence into Germany and Austria.

But this relief came too late to be of benefit to a large number of farmers who were unable to hold their tobacco in the face of the uncertainties that then existed concerning the tobacco market. But after this embargo was lifted tobacco began to increase in price, and those who were able to hold their crops until the effect of this relief was felt realized a reasonable price for their tobacco.

Relying upon the belief that Great Britain would not again impose these unjust restrictions upon the shipment of tobacco to neutral countries, the farmers increased their acreage and there has been raised during the year 1916 one of the largest and best crops of tobacco that has been raised in recent years in Kentucky, Tennessee, and other States.

It is well known that France, Italy, and Spain will be in the market for increased quantities of tobacco during the coming season. It is also known that Great Britain has issued a license to the British-American Tobacco Co., permitting that company to import into England quantities of dark tobacco to an amount four times as large as the shipments for the quarter ending March 31 last. On account of this increased demand upon the part of Great Britain and her allies and the central empires for the tobacco raised in our country, we need an unrestricted market in all tobacco-consuming countries of Europe in order that the growers of tobacco in Kentucky and other States may be able to realize a fair and reasonable price for the product of their toil. But it is a strange circumstance, and one which is calculated to create suspicion, that just at this time, when this large crop of tobacco is being raised and will soon be placed upon the market, Great Britain and other nations see fit to renew this embargo and thus cut off a large part of the market in Europe for the type of tobacco which our people produce.

It is believed in many quarters that this action has been taken in collusion with the Governments of Italy, France, and possibly Spain, all of which exercise a Government monopoly in the purchase and sale of tobacco, in order to reduce the price which those countries will have to pay to the American farmer for this product. If this be the intention of Great Britain and her allies, then it is not only a breach of good faith but it is so unjustifiable as to call for the strongest protest and most radical action possible on the part of our own Government to protect our people from this injustice. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It is recognized by all nations that under the practices of international law tobacco is not a contraband of war. It can not be used for food nor clothing, nor can it be manufactured into munitions of war. Its use would not in any way affect the military operations of any country now at war, nor would its use affect the efficiency of any soldier that now is or may be hereafter in the trenches. Germany does not exercise a Government monopoly in the purchase and sale of tobacco, but, on the contrary, in normal times, affords a free and open market to the type of tobacco which we raise. And it is easy to understand that to cut off entirely this large section of the foreign market for our tobacco is calculated to work a great injury and loss to the farmers and business men of every section of the country engaged in the growing of dark tobacco.

During the existence of the embargo put upon tobacco in March, 1915, the State Department exercised all of its power and made a most urgent protest until the embargo was raised in November, 1915. Since the latest embargo has been placed upon tobacco by the British Government the State Department has again made strong representations to Great Britain and her allies, and has pointed out to them the injustice and the unreasonableness of the restrictions now in force, urging that these restrictions be removed before they are permitted to affect the market and the prices for the tobacco which is now being raised, housed, and matured. But up to the present time the State Department has been unable to secure the desired relief, and we are now seeking to obtain from Congress the enactment of legislation which will empower the President of the United States to retaliate against any nation that unjustly discriminates against our neutral commerce either with that nation or with other nations. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

During the consideration of the revenue bill in the Senate two amendments were added to that bill which are designed to give the President the power to retaliate against any nation that unjustly discriminates against our products and our commerce by prohibiting the importation of similar or other products from that nation so long as it discriminates against us. The amendments to which I refer are as follows:

SEC. 102. That whenever during the existence of a war in which the United States is not engaged the President shall be satisfied that there is reasonable ground to believe that under the laws, regulations, or practices of any country, colony, or dependency contrary to the law and practice of nations, the importation into their own or any other country, dependency, or colony of any article the product of the soil or industry of the United States and not injurious to health or morals is prevented or restricted the President is authorized and empowered, within his discretion, to prohibit or restrict during the period such prohibition or restriction is in force, the importation into the United States of similar or other articles, products of such country, dependency, or colony as in his opinion the public interest may require; and in such case he shall make proclamation stating the article or articles which are prohibited from importation into the United States; and any person or persons who shall import, or attempt or conspire to import, or be concerned in importing, such article or articles into the United States contrary to the prohibition in such proclamation, shall be liable to a fine of not less than $2,000 nor more than $50,000, or to imprisonment not to exceed two years, or both, in the discretion of the court. The President may change, modify, revoke, or renew such proclamation in his discretion.

SEC. 103. That whenever, during the existence of a war in which the United States is not engaged, the President shall be satisfied that there is reasonable ground to believe that any vessel, American or foreign, is, on account of the laws, regulations, or practices of a belligerent Government, making or giving any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage in any respect whatsoever to any particular person, company, firm, or corporation, or any particular description of traffic in the United States or its possessions, or to any citizens of the United States residing in neutral countries abroad, or is subjecting any particular person, company, firm, or corporation or any particular description of traffic in the United States or its possessions, or any citizens of the United States residing in neutral countries abroad to any undue or unreasonable prejudice, disadvantage, injury, or discrimination in regard to accepting, receiving, transporting, or delivering, or refusing to accept, receive, transfer, or deliver any cargo, freight, or passengers, or in any other respect whatsoever, he is hereby authorized and empowered, in his discretion, to direct the detention of such vessels by withholding clearance or by formal notice forbidding departure, and to revoke, modify, or renew any such direction as in his opinion the public interest may require.

That whenever, during the existence of a war in which the United States is not engaged, the President shall be satisfied that there is reasonable ground to believe that, under the laws, regulations, or practices of any belligerent country or Government, American ships or American citizens are not accorded any of the facilities of commerce which the vessels or citizens of that belligerent country enjoy in the United States or its possessions, or are not accorded by such belligerent equal privileges or facilities of trade with vessels or citizens of any nationality other than that of such belligerent, the President is hereby authorized and empowered, in his discretion, to withhold clearance from one or more vessels of such belligerent country until such belligerent shall restore to such American vessels and American citizens reciprocal liberty of commerce and equal facilities of trade; or the President may, in his discretion, direct that similar privileges and facilities, if any, enjoyed by vessels or citizens of such belligerent in the United States or its possessions be refused to vessels or citizens of such belligerent; and in such case he shall make proclamation of his direction, stating the facilities and privileges which shall be refused, and the belligerent to whose vessels or citizens they are to be refused, and thereafter the furnishing of such prohibited privileges and facilities to any vessel or citizen of the belligerent named in such proclamation shall be unlawful; and he may change, modify, revoke, or renew such proclamation as in his opinion the public good may require; and any person or persons who shall furnish or attempt or conspire to furnish or be concerned in furnishing or in the concealment of furnishing facilities or privileges to ships or persons contrary to the prohibition in such proclamation shall be liable to a fine of not less than $2,000 nor more than $50,000, or to imprisonment not to exceed two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

In case any vessel which is detained by virtue of this act shall depart or attempt to depart from the jurisdiction of the United States without clearance or other lawful authority, the owner or master or person or persons having charge or command of such vessel shall be severally liable to a fine of not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000 or to imprisonment not to exceed two years, or both, and, in addition, such vessel shall be forfeited to the United States.

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to employ such part of the land or naval forces of the United States as shall be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

It will be seen that if these amendments are adopted the President will have power to exercise retaliatory measures against any nation that unjustly discriminates against our products by cutting off importations from the offending country. I would be glad if the amendments went still further and authorized the President to prohibit the exportation of certain necessary supplies from the United States to those countries so as to give him still more power in his attempts to bring to time any nation that without reason or justice seeks to discriminate against products of American toil and bring down the price of American products below the cost of production. But on account of the parliamentary situation all we can obtain at this time is the amendments to which I have referred authorizing the President to retaliate by preventing the importation from the country that offends against neutral commerce of the United States. I sincerely hope that the House will adopt these amendments. I appeal to the sense of fairness of the Members of this House to concur in these amendments, so that if Great Britain or France or any other country seeks to take advantage of an unfortunate war to curtail our neutral trade and to bring loss and damage and want to a great portion of our people, the President may have a weapon with which to strike back and compel fair treatment of our people on the part of any such nation. [Applause.]

Tobacco is a crop that requires the constant attention of the farmer in its production. It is a common adage in our country that it takes 13 months out of a year to raise a crop of tobacco. In the late winter and early spring the farmer sows his plant bed, then later in the spring, when the season is suitable, he transplants this tobacco into the field where he has prepared the soil for its cultivation. From then on he is compelled to give it his constant attention, and so necessary is it that this crop be cultivated almost entirely by hand that no one man can produce a large number of acres of tobacco, like he can with other crops upon the farm. There has been no machinery yet invented, and in all likelihood none will soon be invented, that will enable the farmer to produce a crop of tobacco except by hand. He sows the bed by hand, draws the plans by hand, replants the tobacco into the field by hand, cultivates by hand, he primes and tops and cares for it by hand, he must cut it and put it into the barn by hand, and then he must cure it and strip it and prepare it for the market almost entirely by the use of his hands; so that when the farmer's tobacco crop is finally delivered to the market, it represents constant effort upon the part of himself and his family in its cultivation and production. If the price of tobacco is reasonable, the farmer can at least obtain a reasonable reward for his toil; if the price of tobacco is low, the farmer necessarily must suffer the brunt of these unfortunate conditions, and he is the first to suffer from a reduction in the price of his crop.

Some years ago the tobacco farmers of this country were compelled to engage in a struggle with the American Tobacco Trust in order to obtain for their tobacco a reasonable compensation. After undergoing severe hardships and loss almost beyond computation, they were enabled to force this monopoly to pay a fair price for the product of their toil. But it is peculiarly unjust and unfortunate at this time that any foreign nation, while admitting tobacco not to be a contraband of war and not capable either of hindering or helping any warring nation in Europe, should deliberately and for what would seem to me to be an ulterior purpose place this embargo on tobacco and undertake to restrict the market for this American product, and thus deprive the tobacco farmer of a just reward for his irksome toil. Under these circumstances I conceive it to be the duty of this Government and of this Congress to enact such legislation as will enable the President to enforce our just demands upon any foreign nation, whether it be England, France, Germany, or any other country, which attempts to discriminate against and cripple our commerce with the neutral nations of the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

From 85 to 90 per cent of the dark tobacco grown in Kentucky and Tennessee is exported to foreign markets. Italy, Spain, France, England, Holland, Germany, and Austria have been large purchasers of our type of tobacco. More than 3,000,000 people are dependent upon the tobacco crop for not only the necessaries of life but for the success and prosperity of all branches of business. The people of the United States have been strictly neutral as between the warring nations of Europe. We have no part in that conflict. All we ask is that these mad nations shall not infringe upon our rights nor attempt unjustly to destroy the commerce or the lives of our people.

It is fortunate, indeed, that under Providence and under the guidance of wise statesmanship our Nation has been able to keep its hands out of this turmoil which is now drenching the fields of Europe with the blood of its soldiers. And for this reason, as well as many others, it is incumbent upon these nations to recognize the justice of the demand that a neutral and noncontraband product of the American farm and factory shall not be unjustly discriminated against in the markets of the world. We have appealed through the channels of diplomacy. But the weapon of diplomacy is reason and persuasion. When this weapon fails, other more drastic, though peaceful, remedies must be administered. The provisions of this bill, in which I ask the House to concur, provide more drastic remedies to be called into commission when diplomacy and negotiations have failed of their purpose. I sincerely hope that the conference committee of the two Houses in considering these provisions will recommend their adoption, and that the House will adopt them in order to give the President a remedy with which to bring about the relief which is so necessary to the people of the State which I in part represent, as well as to the other tobacco-growing States of this country. [Applause.] If these conditions are suffered to continue until the tobacco crop of 1916 has been sold by the farmers, many of whom are financially unable to hold their crops until a larger price can be obtained, it will mean the loss of between fifty and one hundred millions of dollars to the farmers and business men of the United States, and I fear it will result in the loss of hundreds of thousands, or perhaps millions, of dollars to the people of the district which I represent. I desire that this Government shall be empowered to take every step necessary to safeguard our people against this financial loss. They are entitled and expect their Government to protect them against injustice and the encroachment of other nations. They appreciate what the Government already has done in their behalf; but this will give the Government an additional weapon which can be put to effective use in bringing to time those nations which, either through selfishness or injustice, seek to hamper and cripple the neutral commerce of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Which does the gentleman think is the most important, to have our mails, which have been interrupted and intercepted by Great Britain these many months, by the central allies, or some article of commerce?

Mr. BARKLEY. Well, I think, when it comes to a question of bread and meat for hundreds of thousands, if there is to be any difference at all, it is more important that they should receive a fair price for their crop than that a letter should be received on time. [Applause.] But, so far as I am concerned, I desire that the injustice imposed upon the mails from the United States shall be removed. One of the amendments which has been adopted by the Senate will give the President more power in demanding that interference with our mails should also be stopped. I desire that every unjust restriction upon American commerce shall be removed, no matter whether that restriction is placed upon one article of commerce or another, or upon the mails from the United States to foreign countries. I will vote for any reasonable provision that will give to our Government more strength and more authority in asserting its just demands.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am glad the embargo is impinging on the toes of other Members of the House.

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin enjoys gloating over the misfortunes of others. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to trust the President of the United States to exercise the powers given to him in behalf of the people of this country, a thing which the gentleman from Wisconsin, himself, was not willing to do some months ago. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. STAFFORD. The President for many moons has had that authority, but he has not attempted to exercise it.

Mr. BARKLEY. The President has exercised all the authority which he possessed, and what we are attempting to do now is to give him some more authority. The State of Wisconsin, which is represented in part by the gentleman himself, raises tobacco. I hope he is not deaf to the conditions which might exist in that region on account of this tobacco embargo.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, if the gentleman will permit, I am not concerned in just merely one article. I want to see the outlawry that Great Britain has been pursuing from the very beginning of this war checked.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin in that statement, but I differ from him in this particular, that I want the outlawry of all nations against our rights checked, whereas he only desires the outlawry of certain nations to be checked. We are a neutral nation, and I want to treat them all alike. And this is what this administration has done, and this is what it will continue to do, demanding that our just rights shall be respected by all the nations of the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The provisions of the bill which I ask the House to adopt will give more authority to the President to exercise retaliatory measures against any nation that unjustly discriminates against our people.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman give us any assurance that if we give the President further authority to assert our neutral rights he will use it?

Mr. BARKLEY. I realize that my hide-bound Republican friend from Wisconsin takes pleasure in insinuating that the President may not exercise his authority in protecting the rights of American citizens, but I have absolute confidence in the President not only by reason of what he has already done but by reason of my faith in his character and his patriotic Americanism. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And I believe that he will take such steps as may be necessary to assert the rights of the American people against the intrusion of any other nation, whether it be England, France, Germany, or any other country in the world. Germany has issued an order prohibiting the importation of tobacco, except from Turkey. That is a discrimination against our farmers also.

Mr. BENNET. I recall that a few days ago, when the shipping bill was under consideration in the House, the gentleman from Kentucky voted for the Sutherland amendment to that bill, which directed the Secretary of the Treasury to refuse clearance papers to any ship in an American port which discriminated against American products.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I voted for that amendment because I believed it was a just and fair amendment and would make it possible to protect our commerce from unjust restrictions of shipowners acting under orders from other nations.

Mr. BENNET. I desire to say that the gentleman voted in the interests of his constituents when he voted for that amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am always glad to vote for any just and fair measure that is in the interest of the American people, no matter who may introduce it.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman vote to concur in the Senate amendments?

Mr. BARKLEY. I certainly will, with great enthusiasm. I would not be speaking in behalf of them if I did not intend to vote for them. Will the gentleman from Illinois vote to concur in them?

Mr. MANN. In the main they strike me with considerable favor.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER. Did not the President say he would hold Germany to strict accountability in the Lusitania case, or would demand that Germany disavow the sinking of the Lusitania? Has he done so?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not care to inject a discussion concerning the Lusitania case in my remarks upon the tobacco situation, but I will answer the gentleman by saying that the President has held Germany to strict account on account of the sinking of the Lusitania, and he obtained from Germany recognition of our rights under international law without mustering in a single soldier and without spilling a drop of blood. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And I will predict for the benefit of the gentleman from Massachusetts that on the 7th day of November the people of the United States will show their approval of his conduct by his overwhelming reelection as President. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GARDNER. He would have kept his country out of war if he had been King of the Belgians. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Well, we have no kings in this country. Ours is a Government of the people, where the rulers consult the wishes of the people, and the gentleman from Massachusetts will find that the President of the United States during this administration has properly interpreted the wishes of the American people in his efforts not only to maintain the rights of our Nation at home and abroad, but in keeping our people from the vortex of the senseless war that is now being waged in Europe. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I desire to urge most earnestly and with as much force as I can command that the House concur in these amendments of the Senate and give the President more power in his efforts to protect the humble people of this Nation from the injustice that is calculated to be brought upon them by the arbitrary action of the nations now at war. It will be an act not only of justice but of righteousness on the part of this Congress to give to the President and the Secretary of State the moral support which the adoption of these amendments will indicate. I hope that when the offending nations stop long enough in their present madness to recognize the justice of our claims they will be prompt to recognize them, so that it will not be necessary to bring into operation and make use of the weapon which we are seeking to place in the hands of the President by the adoption of these provisions. We know that we have justice and equity on our side. I believe that this House realizes that this is true, and I look confidently forward to the overwhelming adoption of these provisions in behalf of millions of American citizens, asking for nothing except the just and righteous privilege of pursuing their honest enterprises with success and freedom. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MORRISON] is recognized for 20 minutes.

TEMPERANCE LEGISLATION.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, I have craved permission to speak a few words in defense of a friend of mine who is much misjudged by certain Members of this House. I refer to the editor in chief of the new national organ of the Flying Squadron

Foundation. You will all recognize at once that the organization to which I have just referred is perhaps the newest, and certainly the truest and best of the long list of noble institutions dedicated to the task of doing the people's thinking for them, informing their minds, arousing their consciences, telling them how to vote, and otherwise hastening the dawn of a higher and better civilization. To permit a man engaged in such an heroic enterprise, with its attendant self-sacrifice and personal financial loss, to be misunderstood by men who are themselves fairly good citizens, but not accustomed to deeds of moral heroism and knightly valor, is unfair to the man and to the sacred cause he represents.

An entirely insignificant incident has led to this inexcusable tendency on the part of some Members of this House to indulge in adverse criticism of my friend. Were it not that friendship for me has led them to put me in the false light of being the unhappy occasion of their harsh and unjust words, I would be silent and in a cowardly fashion permit my friend to bear his grievous burden alone.

In the Sixty-third Congress I introduced House joint resolution 389, in these words:

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein) That the following be proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States, as provided by the Constitution.

"ARTICLE —.

"SECTION 1. The importation of any spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors into any State of the United States, or into the District of Columbia, or into the Territory of Alaska, from any other State, District, Territory, country, place, or region, domestic or foreign, is forever prohibited.

"SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the Congress from time to time to enact appropriate legislation for the effective enforcement of the provisions of this article."

On December 22, 1914, I offered it as a substitute for one of the 57 varieties of Hobson resolution then pending, and voted for my own motion, along with 40 other Members of this House who were total abstainers, and who had a right, therefore, to vote for a real temperance measure. The vote was comparatively small, but the proportion of men who are total abstainers is small. In an address delivered at Tomlinson Hall at Indianapolis, Ind., on December 10, 1915, former Representative Capt. Richmond Pearson Hobson estimated that "only 20 per cent of our people are total abstainers." The statisticians employed by the brewers and distillers estimate that but 18 per cent of the people are total abstainers. Assuming the accuracy of this estimate made by acknowledged experts, and assuming that representative government really represents the people, the 41 votes cast in favor of my motion on December 22, 1914, were fairly representative of what might be reasonably expected to be the attitude of the then Members of this House toward a proposed reform which seriously threatened to interfere with the so-called "personal liberties" of men—a process more euphoniously referred to by Capt. Hobson as that of "invading the sanctity of the home."

The Hobson resolution promised practically free whisky. At least it would have made straight, unadulterated whisky cost less to the producer, gallon for gallon, than the current market price of fresh, home-churned buttermilk in a country town. [Laughter.] You can see at once that professional reformers would swarm around the Hobson resolution like school boys around an empty sugar hogshead. [Laughter.]

Possibly some of the new Members of this House may not be acquainted with the genus "professional reformer." He is a comparatively new creature in the animal kingdom. He disproves completely the doctrine of evolution and the accepted theory of the origin of species. He was not evolved by slow and tedious processes, but burst into life full-grown and full-fledged, claiming for himself universal expertness and 56 other varieties of pertness, and up to date he has been able to get away with it.

His is the most altruistic of lives. He is engaged in the quasi-moral, pseudo-religious, and altogether sacrificial enterprise of reforming the lives of other men at so many hundred dollars per hour. He is a myriad-minded man. At least I find him accurately described in the writings of the myriad-minded Shakespeare. As a rule and on the average the professional reformer, "as some ungracious pastors do," shows to other men "the steep and thorny way to heaven, whilst, like a puff'd and reckless libertine, himself the primrose path of dalliance treads and recks not his own road."

Immediately after December 22, 1914, I prepared a bill embodying the principle of House joint resolution 389. It is in these words:

A bill to prohibit the importation of intoxicating liquors into any State of the United States, or into the District of Columbia, or into the Territory of Alaska.

Be it enacted, etc., That the importation of any spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors into any State of the United States, or into the District of Columbia, or into the Territory of Alaska from any other State, District, Territory, country, place, or region, domestic or foreign, is hereby prohibited.

SEC. 2. That if any such intoxicating liquors shall at any time be imported into any State of the United States, or into the District of Columbia, or into the Territory of Alaska, from any other State, District, Territory, country, place, or region, domestic or foreign, all right, title, interest, or claim of the importer thereof shall then and there and thereby become at once forfeited, shall wholly terminate, and be null and void as against the importer thereof and as against all persons claiming of, by, from, through, or under such importer, directly or indirectly, immediately or remotely.

SEC. 3. That the word "importer," as used in this act, shall be construed and deemed to include all persons who shall so import intoxicating liquors into any State of the United States, or into the District of Columbia, or into the Territory of Alaska, or cause the same to be so imported, or shall aid in the importation thereof, or shall abet any person or persons in the importation thereof.

SEC. 4. That the word "person," as used in this act, shall be construed and deemed to include individuals, firms, copartnerships, joint-stock companies, corporations, and all other persons, natural or artificial.

The congressional lobby in charge of the Hobson resolution had issued a circular letter, asserting that Congress has the present power by a mere statute to accomplish the purpose of House joint resolution 389. They suggested that I introduce it as a bill for a statute. While I did not feel entirely secure either as to the constitutional warrant for the proposed statute, or as to the advisability of resting so great a reform on a mere statute, I decided to follow their suggestion. I sent copies of my resolution and bill to the temperance workers of the country during the summer of 1915, with the statement that I would introduce them into the House on December 6, 1915. On that day, when the House was organized, the bill and resolution were in the basket on the Speaker's table, and are now known on the official records of this House as House joint resolution 20 and House bill 394 of the Sixty-fourth Congress.

The official organ of the flying squadron foundation is the National Enquirer. I subscribed for it before its first issue, and I read every line of every issue. I was assured that it would be fair, fearless, able, truthful, and interesting. At any rate, I was sure it would be interesting, and it is. In its issue of the 22d day of December, 1915, it undertook to give to its readers a résumé of "dry" bills then pending in the National House of Representatives. On page 9, which was page 1 of part 2 of that issue, in the fourth column of the page, this article is found. The headline reads as follows: "Six Congressmen offer 'dry' bills." The body of the article gives the names of five Members of the House and the subject matter of the several bills and resolutions they had introduced. The name of the sixth Member and the subject matter of his bill and resolution do not appear. The article does not include the name of the Representative of the ninth Indiana district, nor does it refer to House joint resolution 20 or House bill 394.

In its issue of January 27, 1916, the National Enquirer reproduced an article, credited to another paper, purporting to give a résumé of temperance legislation pending in the Congress. This article was doubtless based upon the article above referred to. It likewise omitted all reference to the Representative of the ninth Indiana district and did not mention House joint resolution 20 or House bill 394.

In its issue of August 24, 1916, the National Enquirer carried an article in the nature of an editorial discussion of the Congress and the temperance bills now pending before it. It gives again what purports to be a list of pending measures, and it refrains again from the slightest reference to the fact and the pendency of House joint resolution No. 20 or House bill 394. Thus again the professional reformers have, by necessary implication, assured the temperance workers of the country that the Representative of the ninth Indiana district has failed to keep his promise to introduce House joint resolution No. 20 and House bill 394 into the Sixty-fourth Congress, and that his oft-repeated statement that he did introduce them is false.

The omission from each of the articles above referred to in the National Enquirer of all reference to the Representative of the ninth Indiana district or the resolution and bill introduced by him is equivalent to the republication of an affirmative assertion that the promises made by him have not been kept and that the statements being made by him as to the pendency of his resolution and bill are untrue.

A newspaper friend of mine resented what he conceived to be an injustice to me, the more unjust in his opinion because the editor in chief gives much space to the pleasant pastime of denouncing the Representative of the ninth Indiana district as an enemy to the cause of temperance. Some of my friends hold this against the editor in chief. I do not. I know that he does not mean it. Besides, he was speaking in general terms.

He made no specific statement. He never tells his readers what measures I introduce or support. He just scolds. I know that he hates to do it, but it is, from his standpoint as a professional reformer, a military necessity. He would be fair, if it were safe, and truthful, if he dared. I personally accept the will for the deed, and keep his name on the list of my good friends, but I have good friends who do not.

My newspaper friend investigated the entire case and gave it as his opinion that the man in charge of the get-up of the news elements of the issue of the National Enquirer on the 22d day of December, 1915, wrote the figure "6" in the headline to match the body of the article; that the body of the article contained a sixth name, the name of MARTIN A. MORRISON, of Indiana, and the subjects referred to in House joint resolution 20 and House bill 394; that the editor in chief saw this name in the list just at the last moment and ordered it to be dropped out, but forgot to change the figure "6" in the headline to the figure "5." My newspaper friend says that the editor in chief did not think it consistent with his high Christian character to condemn a man in the editorial columns and vindicate him completely in the news columns of the same issue of the same paper; and that he, therefore, refused to permit his readers to learn the truth about the man whom he believed it to be to his advantage, in his editorial and reformatory capacity, to misrepresent, malign, and traduce.

I do not join in this opinion. It is more charitable to infer that the lines containing the omitted name and subject matter dropped out by some mere accident. It does seem too bad, however, that the same accident did not drop the figure "6" out of the headline and drop the figure "5" into its place.

My newspaper friend complains because the editor in chief did not correct this serious mistake and atone as far as possible for the injustice his paper had done when the error was called to his attention. I do not criticize him for that. I can myself almost invent a complete justification of his attitude and action. All self-called, self-selected, self-made, self-certified, self-praised, self-centered, self-seeking professional uplifters claim infallibility. They must. Otherwise they would be expected to submit arguments to sustain their contentions. It is against the ethics of the profession ever to make an argument or answer one. They must rely entirely upon their assumed and self-confessed infallibility. It is not morally possible, therefore, for them ever to correct an error, for the very correction would be an admission that would be fatal to their entire policy and practice. [Laughter.]

I can see where my reformatory friend is right, and I still insist that he is one of my good friends, subject, however, to certain mental reservations and self-evasions.

My newspaper friend also complains that the editor in chief denounces me like a pickpocket for refusing to support the Hobson resolution as voted for in this House on December 22, 1914, while it is known to all newspaper men that the editor in chief does not believe that the Hobson resolution is a genuine temperance measure.

Again I vindicate the action of the editor in chief. It is true that his opinion of the Hobson resolution is the same as my own. I certainly approve of that. We both attended the conference of the temperance workers held in the Calvary Baptist Church at Washington, D. C., on July 10, 1915. On that day the editor in chief and I were both of the opinion that the Hobson resolution was, as a temperance proposition, a fake and a fraud, a delusion and a snare. So we had much in common, but that opinion was shared by every student of the temperance question who attended that conference and who was not dependent upon the pay roll of the congressional lobby for his daily bread. When the conference drove out the newspaper reporters and began the process of binding the consciences of all delegates to pretend to believe what they knew to be false, I went out with the newspaper reporters. [Laughter.] The editor in chief remained, made a manly fight, and lost. Being a man of honor, he is now in honor bound to pretend to believe what he knows to be untrue, and to denounce me for believing now what he himself believed on July 10, 1915. He is in honor bound to advocate the exact proposition that on July 10, 1915, he knew to be a fake and a fraud, a delusion and a snare. And the editor in chief is an honorable man. "So are they all, all honorable men." [Laughter.]

Not only is he thus in honor bound, but he is impelled by a certain semireligious sense of a certain almost sacred duty that rests on him alone. The theory that sacrifice for its own sake is a virtue has long since been exploded. To be virtuous, the result attained must be at least equal to the loss sustained. By that token I justify the attitude and action of my friend. The Flying Squadron Foundation, of which my friend is president, is a truly tremendous power for civic righteousness in America and throughout the world. It is to the bogus Flying Squadron, organized by the congressional lobby, as truth is to falsehood, or as the light of the sun is to a starless midnight. If my friend were to tell the truth about House joint resolution 20, and House bill 394, and the attitude and action of their author, or if he were to speak his honest opinion of the Hobson resolution, the congressional lobby would discredit and destroy him. It would cut off the financial resources of the Flying Squadron and its official organ and drive them into bankruptcy. I can conceive of no greater disaster to the cause of political, moral, and religious progress and reform in America. I would not ask my friend to sacrifice so much for the mere sake of speaking and doing the truth. I am sometimes tempted to look with a degree of allowance upon his manifest conviction that the life of a great moral reform ought not to be sacrificed, or even to be put in jeopardy, for the sake of a mere sentiment or the maintenance of a mere ideal of personal righteousness. It is true, as asserted by my newspaper friend, that my reformatory friend does not dare to mention in his paper the bill and resolution which I introduced. Much less does he dare to publish their texts in full. But, as I have shown, that is not to his discredit.

These remarks were prepared a considerable time ago, but have been withheld in the vain hope that the editor in chief might some day correct his own error and right the wrong he has done.

After these remarks were prepared, and as though the editor in chief had been informed of their very language, the editor in chief wrote a signed editorial stating the entire situation more clearly and strongly than I have done. The editorial is in no sense controversial. It is an explicit, general, and special plea of guilty to more than I have dared to intimate.

It appeared in the third column of the fourth page of the issue of February 24, 1916. The editorial is, in part, as follows:

EDITING THE EDITORS.

Great editors have almost ceased to be. The day of the old-time journalist who owned his paper, wrote his convictions, and spoke to a personal constituency is past. Few, if any, of the great daily newspapers, East or West, are edited by their editors, except in the most formal nominal sense. They are edited by their publishers, not by their editors—edited in the countingroom, and not in the editorial office. * * * Allen L. Benson, in the March number of Pearson's Magazine, writing on this subject, puts it well:

"The publishers edit the editor. The publisher lays down to his editor the newspaper's 'policy.' A 'policy' is both a dead line and a program. It is a list of things to do and a list of things not to do.

"The publisher is not a publicist—he is a business man. Like other business men, he is making money, owing money, and looking for money. * * * As business men they are all in the same boat. * * *

"If the publisher's commodity were soap instead of what purports to be disinterested advice to the public, his position would be ethically unassailable. A soap manufacturer is nothing but a soap manufacturer. He does not pretend to be saving the country—except from dirt. The publisher pretends to be saving the country. Day in and day out he is telling his part of the public what to do for their own good. In his news columns he pretends to print the news. The truth is that when great public questions are before the country he usually takes an editorial position that is dictated by the selfish interests of a small class of which he is a part and 'prints the news' in such a manner as to fortify his editorial position."

Because of this fact the editorial page of the daily press has lost much of its influence and power.

I shall italicize portions of this quotation for the RECORD so as to call attention to the language which specifically admits all I have said and much more.

It is said that "an open confession is good for the soul." This confession is not quite open. The editor in chief limits his assertions to the papers whose proprietors have editorial writers. The complaint he makes is that the editorial rooms are too closely connected with the countingroom. He fears the subservience of the editor to the publisher. The reason for the editor in chief's condemnation falls more heavily on his own case than on the ones against which he pretends to direct it. In his case he is both publisher and editor. He takes no chances on the thoughtlessness of a hired writer, who is only indirectly connected with the money drawer of the proprietor and publisher, and incidentally he saves the salary of an editorial writer. The editorial room and the countingroom are one. Which one? I fancy that the proprietor and publisher gives first place to himself as proprietor and publisher and sets apart to himself in his editorial capacity desk room in some remote corner of his spacious and prosperous-looking countingroom.

In that way he can himself keep a watchful eye upon himself so that he may so "pretend to print the news" as not to interfere with his ruling passion of "looking for money and the easiest way to get it." No other status and relationship could so certainly insure the complete subserviency of the editor to the publisher, of the reformer to the financier, of the uplifter to the cross-lifter.

I trust that no one will construe this quotation or these remarks as an adverse criticism of my reformatory friend. They are not so intended. I started out to justify his every word and deed on strictly high moral grounds, and I shall do it at all hazards and at any cost.

Outward appearances to the contrary notwithstanding, the entire policy of the editor in chief is justifiable by the very necessities of the new profession of which he is in part the founder and in which he is a bright and shining light.

Besides, there is not a great religious newspaper in the country that dares to publish the truth which the editor in chief has suppressed. The congressional lobby would discredit such a paper and drive it into bankruptcy.

There are but few ministers of the gospel in America—I know of but two—who dare to read them from their pulpits.

I do not criticize the ministers of the gospel. They are simply the victims of misplaced confidence. I dare not suggest that they are easy marks, for I myself believed in this same leadership until I learned the true inwardness of their plan of campaign and had watched their game at close range. The truth of this situation is so at variance with men's accepted presumptions in the case that one can come to believe the truth only by slow degrees even after he has come into its full knowledge. When I realize how completely the ministers of the gospel are deceived and are duped into deceiving the men, women, and children of their congregations, I am moved to indignation against their deceivers, but utter no word of adverse criticism of those who are deceived. When an irresponsible aggregation of political preachers and discredited politicans discover a growing public sentiment in favor of a great moral reform, capture it, capitalize it, and reduce it into a strictly private asset, they are able to deceive the very elect.

Here and there a young and wide-awake minister has already caught a passing vision of truth. He is hesitating as to his duty in the premises. It is with him a question of advisability, not of mere courage. Some day one of these young ministers will take counsel of his courage, throw discretion to the winds, enter his pulpit, confess his own mistakes, and tell his people the whole truth.

That will be a critical hour for the cause of temperance. I hope that he shall survive the first furious onslaught of the lobby. If the beast shall fail to tear him to shreds at its first bound, its game will be lost forever. Other ministers, inspired by a righteous example, will make the same manly and courageous confession and open disavowal. A general ministerial revolt will sweep over the land and the long reign of terror that the congressional lobby has maintained over the preachers of America will come to a sudden and inglorious end.

In the meantime I would not ask a friend of mine to take the hazard. Finding in myself none of the heroic stuff of which martyrs are made, I do not find it in my heart to urge my preacher friends to suffer the awful punishment the beast has decreed against the first minister of the gospel who shall dare to learn and speak and do the truth. The congressional lobby would misrepresent, malign, and traduce him; would seek to discredit him before his own people and drive him from his pulpit, if not from his sacred calling itself.

It has been said that everything depends upon the point of view. The Hobson resolution is a superb illustration of this truth.

Whether or not a man favors the Hobson resolution depends almost exclusively on his point of view or his refusal to make use of any point of view.

Hundreds of men favor the Hobson resolution, thousands think they do, hundreds of thousands think that they think that they do. [Laughter.]

Those who favor it may be broadly divided into those who are in private life and those who are in public life. By those who are in private life I mean only those who are not in public office and are not hoping to break into public office. I have talked to hundreds of such men who think that they favor the Hobson resolution. I have never talked to one who had read the Hobson resolution or had the slightest knowledge of its provisions. Among men in strictly private life it is safe to affirm that no one who is for the Hobson resolution has read it, and that not one who had read the Hobson resolution is for it.

By men in public life I mean only men in public office who are overanxious to remain in public office, also men out of public office who are scheming to get in, and also men who are on the pay roll of some unholy alliance of shysters and mountebanks who are enriching themselves by levying blackmail upon men in public life and who find it a good "safety-first" proposition to "steal the livery of heaven to serve the devil in."

To the general classification I have just made I expressly make one notable exception. I do not include Representatives and Senators in the Sixty-third or Sixty-fourth Congress of the United States. As to them I have rather definite and fixed opinions and as to many I have much definite, direct, and personal knowledge, but as to them all my opinion and knowledge are, and shall remain, a profound, incommunicable secret. [Laughter.]

In preparing these remarks I do not admit that I had any of them remotely in mind. On the contrary I boldly allege that nothing I have said or shall say to-day refers in any way or degree to anyone who is or has in recent years been a Member of either branch of the American Congress.

Among men in public life I have known many who really and conscientiously believe that they believe that the Hobson resolution is a genuine temperance measure. They are great-souled, broad-minded, honest men, who are serving their country well, and feel the impelling and compelling force of a patriotic duty to continue in the public service. I speak the words of truth and soberness when I say that I have for them the highest respect, and in them unlimited confidence. They have but one besetting sin—ambition, "that last frailty of noble minds"—and it has made their mental processes hopelessly unreliable on this single proposition. "By that sin fell the angels. How can man, then, the image of his Maker, hope to win by it?"

Every unbiased student of the temperance question knows that the Hobson resolution is not in any true sense a temperance measure. You ask me what these men see in the Hobson resolution that makes it attractive to them? I have studied the psychology of this situation and understand these most estimable gentlemen better than they understand themselves. All unconsciously to himself, and without fault upon his part, such a man fails to recognize the vast difference between the general public benefit that will certainly come from the enactment of a genuine temperance measure and the more limited, special, and problematical public benefit that is said to be likely to result from committing the temperance forces of America unitedly and enthusiastically to a plan of campaign that is a betrayal of the cause of temperance. I do not hesitate to affirm that the former proposition will result in a larger public benefaction than the latter, even though the latter plan be guaranteed to become to a large number of the perfectly elegant gentleman in their candidatorial capacity, an effective personal political life preserver.

Bearing in mind the enforced subserviency of all workers in the broad field of human uplift and social regeneration to the congressional lobby in charge of the Hobson resolution in Washington, I find no just ground for adverse criticism of the conduct of my good friends who are working along those lines, and who appear to have become entirely conversant with, if not entirely reconciled to, the supreme alternative rules of the game laid down by the congressional lobby for their guidance—first, live and lie; or, second, tell the truth and die.

I have hesitated to make public statement of this deplorable lack of brotherly love among the leaders of the great moral movement. Perhaps it is best that the people should know. I at least am willing to trust them with a knowledge of the truth as to this vital situation, seeing that their recognized leaders never trust them with so much as to the slightest degree of the truth.

These various groups of leaders hold each other in mutual contempt and hate. I respect, honor, trust, and love them all. It is my Christian duty to do that. The congressional lobby hates my reformatory friend, the editor in chief, and is impatient for a chance to destroy him. The editor in chief hates and despises the congressional lobby, but also fears its power. He dares not call his soul his own. I do not share in the low estimate in which they mutually hold each other, although I can not fail to recognize the fact that each of them probably knows the other better than I know any of them.

And yet I must be true to all my friends. Their present unhappy lot is more their misfortune than their fault. They are more sinned against than sinning. I do not criticize them, much less do I hate them. I pity them, and would gladly rescue them if I could, but that seems now impossible. In the circumstances I can only reaffirm my unfaltering faith in them all and solemnly declare each of them to be what all of us know that he is not.

THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an editorial which appeared in the New York Sun on Sunday, September 3.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an editorial. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The editorial is as follows:

SHADOW SHAPES AT SHADOW LAWN.

With that fine and now well-known air of personal detachment from all common and base and vulgar things, and with the also familiar staccato utterance denoting careful consideration in the choice of words, and great sense of responsibility for the thoughts behind them, the candidate said, at half past 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, gazing over the heads of those assembled on the lawn:

"I have no disposition to boast of what the Democratic Party has accomplished. It has merely done its duty. It has merely fulfilled its explicit promises."

After a few minutes devoted to the enunciation of elegant periods previously fabricated, the candidate at quarter before 5 o'clock returned to the subject of promises honorably redeemed:

"I have not spoken explicitly, gentlemen, of the platform adopted at St. Louis; but it has been implicit in all I have said. The people of the United States do not need to be assured now that that platform is a definite pledge, a practical program. We have proved to them that our promises are made to be kept."

Made to be kept!

At this point there was a disturbance on the lawn. An angry shadow pushed his way to the front and shook his fist directly beneath the Hon. Woodrow Wilson's smugly smiling countenance.

"I am Baltimore promise No. 1!" shouted the angry shadow. "I am the single-term promise made in your behalf and by you accepted and utilized to your profit to the extent of election for four years at a salary of $75,000 and emoluments. I demand to know if I was 'kept.' I demand to be told, not in weasel words, but in straightforward English, why, when there was a feeble attempt in Congress to start an amendment to the Constitution making the President of the United States ineligible for reelection, you privately and personally interposed your political influence to block it."

But before Tumulty could call the detectives another shadow was menacing the candidate's nose. "I am Baltimore promise No. 2!" he roared. "I am the promise to return to the simplicity and economy which befits a Democratic Government. I want to know if I have been 'kept.' I want to know what this wielder of words has to say to the unprecedented total of lavish appropriations by Congress during his administration, the profligate waste of money wrung from the people by taxation, the utter abandonment of even a pretence of fulfilling the Baltimore pledge."

And the shadows of the broken promises made at Baltimore came crowding up to the speaker's stand, tumbling over one another's heels in their eagerness to give the lie to the candidate's impudent declaration that he and his party had proved that their pledges were "made to be kept."

The shadow of the promise to reduce the high cost of living; the shadow of the promise of a tariff for revenue only; the shadow of the promise to maintain the integrity of the coordinate branches of the Federal Government and not to allow the Executive to encroach on the just powers of the others; the shadow of the promise to restore the merchant marine without bounties or subsidies; the shadow of the promise to exempt from tolls at the Panama Canal American ships engaged in the coastwise trade; the shadow of the promise to enforce honestly and rigidly the civil-service standards of merit and ability rather than political service rendered the party—in angry procession the shadows of the broken promises of Baltimore surged into the presence of the candidate in a demonstration amounting almost to a riot.

The last of all came the youngest and blackest of the gathering shadows, the shadow of the Baltimore promise of a "return to the rule of the people"; protection "from the misuse of delegated power and the usurpation of governmental instrumentalities by special interests."

"You dare to say you have kept your promises?" shrieked this shadow, "and you dare to say it at the very moment when you are forcing a reluctant Congress to misuse its delegated powers at your selfish dictation, to permit the usurpation of governmental instrumentalities by a special interest represented by the four brotherhoods?"

"The highwayman," continued the excited shadow, "sometimes obtains that which he demands at the pistol's point. Sometimes, later, he gets hanged along with any aiding and abetting criminal, whether in policeman's uniform or not. If my supernatural vision does not deceive me, public opinion in America is already preparing the gallows platform upon which another sort of a notification speech will be addressed to you, Mr. Woodrow Wilson!"

Thus it hapened that the notification ceremony, notwithstanding the high expectations of the person chiefly concerned, was not much of a success.

"This is what comes," remarked the eldest and wisest of the mutinous shadows on Shadow Lawn, "of intrusting political power to intelligence without character."

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS—JOHN W. CONNORS.

Mr. CURRY, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of John W. Connors (H. R. 7783), first session Sixty-third Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

REVENUE.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request for unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the revenue bill (H. R. 16763), and to move to disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the revenue bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman in reference to amendments 265, 266, 267, 268, and I think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] may want to make an inquiry about 269.

In reference to these other amendments, if they should not be agreed to in conference, either in their present form or possibly modified, would there probably be an opportunity for the House to express its opinion on them?

Mr. KITCHIN. If they are not agreed to. I will say to the gentleman that while I have had time to go over them only hurriedly, I regard them with a great deal of favor.

Mr. MANN. I will repeat the gentleman's language. I will not say that as to amendment 269, because I am not familiar with that.

Mr. KITCHIN. I did not refer to amendment 269. I refer to what is known as the retaliatory provisions.

Mr. GARDNER. Reserving the right to object, I will say that I regard them with great disfavor, but everybody does not agree with me.

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not know what the conferees will do. I do not think amendment No. 269 should be in here at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman from North Carolina give any idea as to whether these amendments will be agreed to in conference.

Mr. KITCHIN. Of course I can not tell, but we are going to talk them over. As I said, they strike me with some favor.

Mr. BARKLEY. If they are not agreed to, is it understood that we shall have a separate vote on the amendments?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; if they are not agreed to, in substance, we will have a vote on them.

Mr. RAKER. Reserving the right to object, will there be an opportunity for a separate vote on amendments 165 to 199, covering the wine subject?

Mr. KITCHIN. If the conferees do not agree, there will be an opportunity for a separate vote. That will be one of the bones of contention. I am very much in favor of the House provision.

Mr. RAKER. I want to call the gentleman's attention particularly to amendment 199. That is an amendment dropped down at the bottom of the bill after the rest is all disposed of, permitting alcohol to be made out of grain and then call it wine. In other words, it is making whisky and calling it wine on a wine bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. The conferees will no doubt give that very careful consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. I want to ask the gentleman from North Carolina whether or not the conference committee would have the authority to go any further than these amendments providing any matter of retaliation against any country that discriminates against our commerce? The House having taken no action, and the amendment being put on in the Senate, is the conference committee limited to only minor changes in the phraseology of the Senate, or can it go further?

Mr. MANN. I would suggest that the Speaker ought not to be compelled to answer that question now.

Mr. KITCHIN. As far as I am concerned, I am willing that the Speaker should answer for both of us. It is a difficult question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, on page 84 there is a provision appropriating $100,000. The House struck out the permanent appropriation for the Tariff Commission by a vote of over 3 to 1, and provided that the appropriation should be made annually, as appropriations for all expenses of the Government are.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say to the gentleman that I have a great deal of confidence in the House vote, and I take it almost as an instruction.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will drop out the word "almost," it will be satisfactory.

Mr. KITCHIN. I can only say that the House conferees will do the best they can.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That will not satisfy me on this item. I am unwilling that the bill shall go to conference unless there shall be some assurance that the managers on the part of the House will not agree unless the House has an opportunity to pass on it. I do not propose to spend 15 years of my life repealing permanent appropriations to have them created in this way.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say that I think the House conferees will stand with the House on this proposition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If they do not, you had better have a quorum here.

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not think it will be necessary for the gentleman from New York to exercise that power.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from North Carolina give the House an opportunity to vote on the wine-tax schedule?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not know. I am very much opposed to some of the provisions that the Senate has put in, and I am under the impression that it is right for the House to vote on it before any real radical change is made. I am in hopes that we can get together satisfactorily on it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a few minutes before the conferees are appointed.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, on page 136 of the revenue bill, amendment 235, is a Senate amendment in reference to print paper. We all know in a general way what the situation is in regard to print paper. There has been a very unusual and abnormal rise in the price of print paper, especially as purchased by the smaller consumers, who did not have annual contracts, and the probabilities are that when the annual contracts, which most of the large newspapers have, expire in November or December, which is the usual, although not always, date for the expiration of the contract, there will be some increase in their contracts.

We passed in the Underwood tariff law a provision putting print paper on the free list costing less than 2½ cents a pound, or $2.50 a hundred. The price of print paper at that time on contract and otherwise ran from possibly a little over $2 to $2.25 or $2.30, or somewhere along there. That provision of the Underwood tariff law, which was in connection with previous provisions in the Payne tariff law, as far as the language is concerned, was prepared by me, in conjunction with Mr. John Norris, who was representing the Newspaper Publishers' Association. I do not mean to say that I helped draw the bill, but at Mr. Underwood's request on this matter I gave some help, because I had been giving study to the print-paper question.

Mr. Norris and I both agreed that we ought to put a tariff duty on print paper coming from Canada which cost over $2.50 a hundred, and the purpose of that is perfectly patent. It was in order to prevent a combination between paper manufacturers in the United States and Canada, which would enable them to put the price of print paper up a little over $2.50 a hundred, because the moment it got over $2.50 a hundred they would have to pay—I am not sure of the amount—12 cents a hundred, I think, as tariff duties, and during all of this present excitement in reference to paper, while some of our people have been paying as high as $3 and $4, I think in some cases as high as $5, a hundred for news-print paper, the Canadians, so far as they have been selling paper to us—and nearly all of their manufacture comes to the United States—have in no case sold paper for over $2.50 a hundred. The moment they sell for over $2.50 a hundred they have to pay a tariff duty.

The Senate has increased the limit to 5 cents a pound. You might just as well say that we entirely remove the tariff on print paper, and thereby transfer the industry absolutely to Canada. We have tried in recent years to secure to the American manufacturers of print paper the raw material from which to make it, much of which has to come from Canada—that is, the pulp wood, mostly spruce, and some ground wood pulp, together with a little sulphite pulp. Print paper is made in the main by a process of grinding up spruce wood, although they use some other kinds of wood, but not to any very great extent. It is a very cheap process. The ground wood is not quite strong enough to hang together during the process of manufacture, so they put in with the ground wood a little of what they call sulphite pulp, which is a chemical pulp which has a longer fiber, using about 25 to 30 per cent of the sulphite pulp, and that makes a fiber strong enough while it is wet, running through the mill, to hang together. We are dependent upon Canada to a large extent for the pulp wood from which print paper will be made, although every once in a while you will hear of some one who proposes to make news-print paper out of some other material—corn stalks, cotton stalks, or something else. The truth is that the cost of producing print paper made from spruce wood by the present process is probably less than the cost of assembling the material out of which it may be proposed to make it from some other product. So that we will not see the day when news-print paper is made from anything else than this ground wood.

If we take off the tariff entirely I think the result is more likely to be to increase the present price of paper than it is to reduce it. The Canadians at present can not charge $2.60 a hundred for paper selling to the United States. That is impossible, because if they charge over $2.50 a hundred they have to pay 12 cents a hundred duty. Of course, if print paper gets up to $3 a hundred it is absolutely immaterial whether there is a tariff upon it or not; but if we transfer the industry to Canada, and that is the tendency at present, I think it will be a sorrowful day for the men who print and read newspapers, because why should Canada, when they have absorbed the business, furnish paper to the United States any cheaper than they want to? Most of the Canadian wood is owned by the Canadian Government or by the Provinces of Canada and is to be found on Crown lands. They do not own it all, but they own the major portion of it, and for the same reason that Brazil makes us pay for her coffee the Canadian people, if they have any sense, if they ever acquire the industry, will say, when they have the controlling interest in the business, "Our pulp wood is worth more than we have been charging, and you will have to pay for it."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. WINGO. Do they not do that already?

Mr. MANN. Oh, they do it already, surely.

Mr. WINGO. The Canadian Government prohibits the sending out of the country of the wood pulp now. A gentleman who recently appeared before the Trade Commission, who is either the president or the managing official of a concern that manufactures two-thirds of the print paper in this country, said they were locating their new mills in Canada, because the Canadian Government prohibited the sending out of the pulp wood; and it is not the tariff that makes him go there, but the regulation of the Government, which absolutely prohibits the sending out of wood pulp from Canada.

Mr. MANN. It is both, I will say to the gentleman. The tariff, of course, does not have any effect now, or has not in the past, upon the price of paper, so that it has no effect directly, but it has affected the establishment of new manufacturing plants in the United States.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. In just a moment. We tried to put into the law—we wrote it into the Payne law—a provision forbidding importation from any Province of any Government if that Province forbade the importation into the United States of pulp wood. I did not intend to go into that, however. I wrote that provision, I should think, a dozen times in different forms and submitted it to a great many different people, and they all said it meant the same thing; but when the Treasury Department came to construe it it construed it to mean directly the opposite of what we had intended to write. I do not know which construction was the correct one. We wrote another provision later, which President Taft told me in advance he had examined, and which we had the right to do, which was intended to operate in the same way against Canadians if they discriminated against us; but instead of construing the law in that way, when it was written they held it up and let the customs court construe it, and that court construed it that we had to treat everyone alike all over the world, and practically destroyed that bill.

But I think it is a mistake to put this provision in the bill. I do not think it will reduce the price of paper one cent. It will have a tendency to raise the price of paper and, what is more serious, will have the tendency to move over to Canada all of the print-paper manufacture. We have not increased our mills, but we have a large number of mills making paper now; not so many now as there were several years ago, one reason of that being—and that is one reason for the shortage of print paper—that some of the people engaged in the manufacture of print paper are now making wall paper. The same mills that make print paper can make wall paper, and there has been a greater increase, I think, in the price of wall paper, if I am told correctly, than there has been in print paper. If our country legislates—and this is really what I rose to say—so that the future mills are established in Canada and the present mills in the United States are closed, with the timber over there belonging practically in the main to the Government, it is inevitable that those governments will increase the charge they make for cutting timber on the Crown lands, and our people will have to pay for it. You can not expect them to act altruistically. It will be their duty in Canada, where they will have statesmen as well as we, if they control the situation, to get a higher price for their product, and the only way we can protect ourselves in the United States is by preventing the removal of the business into Canada. I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BENNET. Is it not a fact that since 1910 the importation of print paper from Canada increased something like 1,000 per cent?

Mr. MANN. I do not remember; I should hardly think so, but it may be true.

Mr. BENNET. From something like 34,000 tons to 340,000 tons?

Mr. MANN. That may be, but I hardly suppose it increased so much. I have the figures downstairs, but I have not got them here.

Mr. BENNET. They are in the RECORD; I was looking for them, but I can not find them at the moment.

Mr. GLASS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GLASS. If it be a fact, as the gentleman says—and if he says it is I have no doubt of it—that the importation from Canada to this country is at a rate not in excess of 2½ cents, why is it that newspaper publishers have to pay 5 cents for it?

Mr. MANN. There is no difficulty about that. Nearly all of the mills have contracts for nearly all their surplus. The newspapers that are paying 5 cents for paper now probably are, in the main, buying paper from brokers. Whether there is collusion between the broker and the manufacturer who supplies the broker I do not know, but many brokers have contracts, and I have no doubt that in many cases the brokers have taken advantage. The Canadian manufacturers, in the main, have their supply sold at lower rates, but they can not take advantage of the situation over here and sell paper at over 2½ cents unless they are willing to pay duty on it. Of course, if they have a large supply of paper, a surplus in Canada, the price could not go up, just as if they had a large surplus anywhere the price could not go up.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. WINGO. Is it not a fact that the greater part of the importations of paper coming into the United States from Canada are importations by American manufacturers who are now saying to the newspaper publishers, whose contracts are expiring, "We can not supply you with an ironclad contract; we will have to do the best we can," and these same publishers are approached later on by brokers who sell that same manufacturer's paper at exorbitant prices? One instance I have in mind is where the price was four ninety, where the price under the expired contract had been one ninety. Is it not true that the American manufacturers are themselves, in the main, bringing in the paper from Canada?

Mr. MANN. I think not; because when we made the investigation before, if my memory serves me rightly, the Canadian mills had contracts for the major portion of their paper.

Mr. WINGO. That was a few years ago.

Mr. MANN. I think that is more true now than it was then.

Mr. WINGO. I think the gentleman will find, if he will take investigations recently made, that conditions have changed very materially.

Mr. MANN. I have been making some investigation of my own recently. I have not seen anybody's else, but this is my opinion, and whether it is correct or not I will not undertake to say. I introduced a resolution asking for an investigation by a committee of the House, and I thought the wise thing to do would be to have an investigation where the information was made public from day to day. The Federal Trade Commission was, and I suppose is, making an investigation. They had hearings. Those hearings were of some value; but the Federal Trade Commission, I suppose, necessarily makes most of its investigations through its experts and not through public hearings. The main value of an investigation which the committee of which I was chairman made some years ago, I think, was in the fact that there was published from day to day what took place before the committee, and there is no doubt whatever that that investigation kept down the price of print paper, because there was a panic in reference to the price then as there is a panic in reference to the price now. Our investigation showed that there was no just cause for a panic and the panic subsided.

I think if you had an investigation now it would show that there is no just cause for the panic which is putting print paper away up so high. A newspaper publisher to-day whose contract for paper has expired and who tries to get paper has hard work to do so. In preference to closing his plant he has to buy at an increased price, and where two or three are bidding through the same broker, the broker, having a limited supply, naturally puts up the price. That is human nature.

Mr. KREIDER. The gentleman just stated he introduced a resolution asking for an investigation. Does the gentleman know what has become of it? Has any action been taken on it?

Mr. MANN. I have not pressed it. That resolution went to the Committee on Rules, I suppose. I never asked the committee to take action upon it. I wanted the resolution passed, but I could not suppose that the Committee on Rules would probably provide for an investigation by a committee of the House to do a thing which the Federal Trade Commission had taken up and was endeavoring to do. There is nobody to blame for that, I think. [Applause.]

CONFEREES ON REVENUE BILL.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees: Mr. KITCHIN, Mr. RAINEY, Mr. DIXON, Mr. HULL of Tennessee, Mr. FORDNEY, Mr. GARDNER, and Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Mexican situation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the Mexican situation. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a newspaper editorial.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a newspaper editorial. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, are we going to print all the editorials?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I am not.

Mr. MANN. I suppose this is a political editorial.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It is an editorial on the railroad-strike situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, from what paper is it? Not that it makes any difference.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It is from the New York World.

Mr. MANN. I think somebody put it in the other day.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I would not want to put it in twice.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] placed in the RECORD an article from the New York World the other day.

The SPEAKER. The title of the article which the gentleman from Tennessee printed in the RECORD was "Rule or ruin."

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The title of this editorial is "The appeal to Cæsar."

Mr. MANN. I do not think I will object, but I can see no earthly reason for reproducing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in the same week printed editorials appearing in the New York World.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the address of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] I may address the House for not exceeding 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that following the address of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] he have permission to address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the speech of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE] I may be allowed to address the House for half a minute, or to do so now.

The SPEAKER. For how long?

Mr. GARDNER. Half a minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] asks unanimous consent at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE]——

Mr. MANN. Make it now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to address the House for half a minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, the other day while the debate was in progress on the President's bill to settle the railroad strike I sat by the side of a new Member of Congress who is just beginning to get a sturdy footing in the House. He and I, like so many of our fellow Members, longed to make a certainty of our reelection by yielding to the wishes of the powerful railroad brotherhoods, and yet we were unconvinced of the righteousness of legislation under duress.

The eloquent gentleman from Alabama, THOMAS HEFLIN, was speaking in support of the President's bill. Suddenly he paused, shook his finger at the Republican side of the House, and accused us of at heart desiring a strike regardless of the welfare of the Nation. The new Member at my side flushed to the roots of his hair. He leaned over to me and said: "Every dollar I have in the world, and more, too, I have invested in a dairy plant from which I ship highly perishable products to the markets of the city of Portland, Oreg. If there is a strike, even for a few days, my loss will be heavy to bear. If the strike is prolonged, I am utterly ruined. If I regard my own fortunes, I am against a strike, no matter what the cost."

The time at last came for voting. The long roll call progressed. I listened to hear that new Member speak. With a cynicism which I regret but can not help I said to myself, "Well, I suppose that he has convinced himself that the eternal verities are on the same side as his political and personal interests."

I had mistaken my man. When the test came C. N. MCARTHUR, of Oregon, voted "no," and then turned quietly to his task to repair as best he might the damage to his political fortunes which his conscience had required him to make.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject on which I spoke a little while ago.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject on which he addressed the House a few moments ago. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD on a bill that I introduced providing for old-age pensions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hear none.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the revenue bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the revenue bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

HOMESTEADS IN ALASKA.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to obtain unanimous consent to have the Speaker lay before the House the bill S. 1064, in regard to the disposition of homesteads in Alaska. It is a question of whether or not under the rules it is not privileged and entitled to be considered, anyhow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 1064——

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland demands the regular order, and the regular order is the gentleman from from Maryland [Mr. MUDD], who is recognized for 10 minutes.

ANNAPOLIS AND INDIANHEAD HIGHWAYS.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, during the present session of Congress I have submitted to the House for its consideration proposed legislation embracing the construction of important military roads and highways leading from the National Capital to Annapolis and the Naval Academy, situated on the Chesapeake Bay, where our naval officers are educated and trained for the country's service, and to the naval proving grounds, on the Potomac River, at Indianhead, Md., where smokeless powder is manufactured by the Government, and where all of the guns used in the Navy are tested before their acceptance for use on naval vessels.

From the beginning of this, my first term in Congress, I have devoted considerable time to the work of securing adequate and vitally needed appropriations for these worthy purposes, and shall continue so to do until Congress, I hope, will realize their importance from the standpoint of strategy, of preparedness, and of public utility in time of peace, as well as in time of war. For the present the larger questions of military and naval preparedness, increases of the Army and of the Navy, have absorbed both the interest and the time of Congress.

The Naval Academy and the proving grounds are two of the most important and prominent naval stations in the country, and each is situated at a distance of about 30 miles from the city of Washington. At both places millions of dollars have been spent by the Government and millions more will be spent in the years to come, but Congress has unwittingly delayed affording a direct means of communication and proper facilities for travel and transportation between the Capital of the Nation and these two institutions.

Magnificent boulevards have been constructed by American and European cities leading to their suburbs, to other cities, and to varied places of amusement. Shall it be said that this country shall be lacking in the serious and important undertaking of constructing proper arteries for national protection, when less important connections are made in countless numbers? New England and other sections of this growing and powerful country are linked as with rods of steel by spacious roads constructed with care and attention, on the best and firmest foundations; but while this meritorious work goes on as it should, it should be strongly linked and go hand and hand with the even more important work of a comprehensive system having for its view and goal the safety and protection of our very hearthstones. Every loyal American citizen will view with pride such enterprises and will cheerfully sustain his part of the cost.

The State of Maryland has done her part and duty in road work, having spent upward of $20,000,000 in building a magnificent system of turnpike roads covering her main thoroughfares. At the last session of her State legislature the State of Maryland appropriated the sum of $125,000 for a national defense highway between Washington and Annapolis, to become available when the Government shall have appropriated a like or larger amount.

The Maryland roads constitute magnificent arteries of interstate as well as of intrastate commerce, affording also a system of post roads unexcelled in this country. And I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the obligation for their construction rests not alone upon the State of Maryland, but should be borne, in part at least, by the Federal Government. They are not strictly State roads by their very nature, but are designed for the good of the people of all States whose citizens find pleasure and profit in traversing them, as is done most freely.

Ample appropriations for both the proposed roads are imperative. No expense should be spared for their construction with the best modern materials and according to the highest standards of efficiency and durability.

I believe the time has arrived when Congress should anticipate the future, and in pursuance of our policy of national preparedness build a system of strategic highways wherever needed in this country, over which, in event of invasion or threatened invasion, troops, supplies, ammunition, and guns could be quickly and expeditiously transported. If in 1812 we had been equipped with an adequate military force and national highways of the character I now propose, we would not have suffered the humiliation of having to see the troops of the British march to this city and burn the Capitol and the White House.

When highways of this description are finished the Capital will be in the closest possible touch with at least two of its most important naval surroundings, and a step forward will be taken in a larger and broader scheme which when completed will have gone far in aiding the safety and security of our people. The completion of such roads will make them available for massing troops, will enable quick transportation to be had to these bases, will be conclusive evidence that at the Capital of the United States a full and just appreciation is being paid to the needs of our country, and that a beacon has been lighted that should shine through and illuminate other sections with vital needs for defense.

Taking lessons from war-cursed Europe, we see there the great use for national highways and Government roads, and when we consider the ease and celerity with which huge guns and tractors have been rushed to the front, to save and win battles, it makes it even more evident that the time has arrived for prompt and decisive action on this side of the water, where to be forewarned should be to be forearmed.

I trust the day will never come when a foreign fleet will stand at our gates with hostile intent, but I am very firmly convinced that we should not overlook the possibility of such an occurrence, and in the meantime should adopt those measures which if danger threatens would at least give our citizens the reasonable protection to which they are entitled as Americans.

It behooves us in every way to conserve and protect the safety of the National Capital and to take every step to insure its proper defense.

The expenditure of money for such a project will be in the nature of wise peace insurance for the safety of Washington in the future, and will also enable the Federal Government effectively and quickly to mobilize troops and resources whose slowness in reaching their base in the past has menaced our country with gravest danger.

Completed as military highways these roads will serve in times of peace, and it is my earnest wish that along their stretches the commerce of Washington and its adjoining sister

State of Maryland may be carried on in ever increasing volume and diversity.

Congress in the past has appropriated money for roads to and from our national cemeteries, the final resting places of the Nation's honored dead. Broad and spacious highways lead to the silent cities where the heroes of land and sea sleep under the laurel of "fame's eternal camping ground." No words of tongue or pen can add to or subtract from the manly and unselfish qualities of our dead who in time of peril and stress gave their life's blood that the Nation might live. It is our sacred duty and ambition to-day to protect, if possible, the lives and security of our countrymen by those walls of defense and arteries of connection whose erection may mean the securing of lasting peace and the protection of our country from the ruthless hand of the invader. We owe, it is true, a debt of honor and gratitude to our heroic dead, but we also owe a debt equally large to ourselves and posterity.

We can in part pay that debt by the passage of these measures which, designed for protection from invasion, provide also for the safety and security of a mighty land. [Applause.]

I attach as a part of my remarks the bills introduced by me to which I have referred, namely:

A bill (H. R. 11959) to aid the State of Maryland to construct a military and post road to be known as the National Defense Highway, connecting the United States Naval Academy grounds at Annapolis, the capital of Maryland, and the seat of the Federal Government, the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of cooperating with and to aid the State of Maryland to construct a military and post road, which shall be a modern high-grade road, said road to be known and designated as the National Defense Highway, connecting and affording direct means of transportation and communication between the city of Annapolis, the capital of the State of Maryland, wherein is located the United States Naval Academy, and the District of Columbia, the seat of the Federal Government, the Capital of the United States, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended by and under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, as hereinafter provided, the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until the Secretary of Agriculture is satisfied that the State of Maryland has made provision and authority for the expenditure of an amount equal thereto toward the construction of said highway: Provided further, That the maintenance of said National Defense Highway shall not be a charge against the United States except to the extent of a proportionate amount of any appropriation that may hereafter be made by Congress in aid of the States for a general system of highways: And provided further, That no toll shall be exacted or charged for the use of said highway.

SEC. 2. That said National Defense Highway shall be a military highway and post road for the transportation of military supplies and postal matter: Provided, That the United States does not hereby assume jurisdiction over that part of said highway within the State of Maryland.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Agriculture, when advised by the proper authorities of the State of Maryland that the terms of this act are satisfactory and that said State will construct said highway in accordance with surveys, plans, and specifications to be submitted to and approved by him, he shall, in his discretion, from time to time, make payments upon such construction as the same progresses, but these payments shall in no case be more than the pro rata part of the United States of the value of labor and materials which have been put into such construction: Provided, That all actual construction of said highway under the provisions of this act shall be under the supervision and control of the highway commission of the State of Maryland; but the Secretary of Agriculture may make or cause to be made such inspection and examinations of said highway as he shall deem necessary, and prescribe what reports shall be made to him in relation thereto, when they shall be made, and the subject matter thereof.

SEC. 4. That all payments of money from the appropriation authorized by this act shall be made by the Treasurer of the United States upon warrants drawn by the Secretary of Agriculture.

A bill (H. R. 17768) authorizing the construction of a military road from Washington City, D. C., to the naval proving grounds, Indianhead, Md., and making an appropriation therefor.

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of constructing a modern high-grade road, which shall be a military and post road, connecting and affording direct means of transportation and communication between the city of Washington, D. C., and the naval proving grounds at Indianhead, Md., there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended by and under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of Agriculture jointly, under such regulations as they may prescribe: Provided, That in the selection of a suitable route and in the actual construction of said road provision shall be made for the cooperation of the highway commission of the State of Maryland: Provided further, That the United States shall exercise exclusive jurisdiction over said road for all purposes other than of offenses committed thereon indictable under the laws of the State of Maryland and shall maintain and keep the same in repair: And provided further, That no toll shall be exacted or charged for the use of said road.

SEC. 2 That the road authorized to be constructed by this act shall be known and designated as the Indianhead Military Road.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. It is always in order, Mr. Speaker, to ask unanimous consent, is it not?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will have to object to that resolution himself.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman withhold it for a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. There are a number of Members who have had unanimous consent who are anxious to address the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A number of gentlemen, by unanimous consent, are entitled to speak to-day, and occupying the Chair temporarily I do not feel that I am at liberty to recognize the gentleman for any other purpose.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The Chair feels that he is at liberty to make an objection to the resolution but not at liberty to reserve an objection?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. My feeling that I am not free to do it is confirmed by the fact that I would feel compelled to object if I were on the floor when this resolution was offered.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. It seems to me that the two positions of the Chair are opposed to each other.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR] is recognized for 10 minutes.

COMMERCIAL PREPAREDNESS.

Mr. MCARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, the paramount issue of the present campaign for control of the executive and legislative branches of the Government is the question of preparedness for conditions that are bound to exist in this country after the European war. There are other important issues, but commercial preparedness is of greatest consequence to the people of the country and therefore deserves our most serious consideration. Since the outbreak of the war, in August, 1914, our export trade to the warring nations has grown by leaps and bounds, breaking all records, and bringing to certain sections of our country such prosperity that no less a person than Mr. Charles E. Hughes recently said the American people are living in a "fool's paradise." This statement has been ridiculed by partisan newspapers and stump speakers, but it will, nevertheless, stand the test of the most carefnl analysis. [Applause on the Republican side.] To show the effect that the war has had upon our prosperity, let us take the export figures for the year commencing September 1, 1913—a year of peace—and compare them with the figures for the year commencing September 1, 1914—a year of war.

During the year of peace we sold in breadstuffs to Europe $181,484,000 worth. During the year of war we sold $567,607,000, a gain of 213 per cent.

During the year of peace we sold to Europe horses to the value of $3,177,000. During the year of war we sold them horses to the value of $82,276,000, a gain of 2,590 per cent.

During the year of peace we sold to Europe mules to the value of $622,000. During the year of war we sold them mules to the value of $18,041,000, a gain of 2,795 per cent.

During the year of peace we sold to Europe hay to the value of $790,000. During the year of war we sold to Europe hay to the value of $2,263,000, a gain of 233 per cent.

During the year of peace we sold to Europe meats and dairy products to the value of $138,736,000. During the year of war we sold them meats and dairy products to the value of $243,098,000, a gain of 75 per cent.

During the year of peace we sold to Europe sugar to the value of $4,341,000. During the year of war we sold to Europe sugar to the value of $36,816,000, a gain of 748 per cent.

The figures which I have just quoted refer exclusively to exports of the products of our farms and ranges, but they are insignificant as compared with the great sums of money that have been spent here for arms and explosives. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, we exported nearly $470,000,000 worth of explosives, $135,000,000 worth of shell steel, and nearly $20,000,000 worth of firearms. The United States Cartridge Co., of Lowell, Mass., was a moderate-sized concern before the war, with a force of 300 workers and a weekly pay roll of $2,400. To-day the same concern employs 10,000 men and women and has a weekly pay roll of $103,000. The American Steel Foundries Co. is completing an $18,000,000 order for 8-inch shells and has booked another order of $20,000,000. The Bethlehem Steel Co. is shipping 1,000,000 shells monthly to the allied armies. Taking 47 classes of articles properly characterized as war munitions—and clothing and food are as necessary to soldiers as ammunition and guns—these classes comprised more than 60 per cent of our $4,333,000,000 worth of exports for the fiscal year 1916. This statement can be verified by the June Monthly Summary of the Department of Commerce. These are but samples of the war orders that have been bringing us an average of $200,000,000 worth of trade per month and which have put more than $4,800,000,000 into the coffers of our manufacturers since the outbreak of the great struggle across the sea. A large percentage of this amount has been spent for wages and the products of labor and its diffusion through the channels of trade and commerce has brought prosperity to many parts of the country.

PROSPERITY IS SECTIONAL.

This prosperity, however, is largely sectional, and purely artificial. It is the prosperity of war, not of peace. It is a prosperity of hate, misery, suffering, and death. It has been bathed in the blood of the dying soldier and in the tears of his widow and his orphan. It is not a permanent, substantial prosperity and will vanish like leaves before the autumn blast when the great war shall have closed. I said that this prosperity has been sectional and I shall illustrate this by pointing to the Pacific coast and particularly to the Pacific northwest, where war orders have been few and far between as compared with those placed in the great manufacturing centers of the East where the arms and munitions are made. In that section of our country we are having normal Democratic times—the kind we always have when the country is on a free-trade basis. [Applause on the Republican side.] We have had no orders for firearms and explosives, and have struggled along as best we could with practically all of our products on the free list of the Underwood-Simmons tariff law.

The Morning Oregonian, speaking editorially on August 22, said:

Oregon suffered as much as any other State from the effects of the Underwood tariff before the war and it has shared only to a slight degree in the temporary prosperity brought by the war. Its lumber industry was struck down, its dairy industry was exposed to competition of New Zealand butter, Chinese eggs, and Danish cheese, and its wool industry gained a respite only through a short clip in other countries and through the war. If Oregon is to enjoy permanent prosperity it must have protection under a Republican administration which believes in protection.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I did not understand what paper the gentleman was reading from.

Mr. McARTHUR. From the Morning Oregonian, of Portland.

IMPORTS FROM ASIA INCREASING.

On the Pacific coast the values of imports from Asia have grown perceptibly since the Democratic tariff law became operative. Imports from four Asiatic countries increased nearly $200,000,000 during the fiscal year 1916 over 1913 under the Republican protective tariff law, or from $262,000,000 for 1913 to $461,000,000 in 1916. While we were standing at our eastern door gloating over our tremendous war-order business; while the Democratic Party was gleefully making political capital from the shekels pouring into the United States in payment for war supplies; while the lifeblood of hundreds of thousands was pouring onto European battle fields woven into tangled mazes with American barbed wire, furrowed with trenches dug with American tools, rutted with American motor cars, trodden by American shoes, and torn by American shells, these four little countries were gumshoeing through our western door and appropriating 21 per cent of our entire import trade for the fiscal year 1916. Is it not about time to turn to the other side of the house and put a protective latch on the western portal? Here are the figures:

Country.	Imports, 1913.	Imports, 1916.	Increase.
			Per cent.
Australia and New Zealand	$15,241,362	$64,553,441	327
British East Indies	116,220,591	177,423,346	53
China	39,010,800	71,655,045	80
Japan	91,633,240	147,644,228	61
Total	262,205,993	461,276,060	76

With the exception of Australia and New Zealand, these countries have the lowest wage scale on earth, on an average not greater than one-tenth the American scale of wages, while the scale in the kangaroo countries is far less than our own.

In manufactured goods Japan is fast becoming our most serious commercial rival in the far eastern trade, and every year under the Democratic tariff law sees her exports to us increasing by leaps and bounds. The far lower cost of production, which gives Japan such an advantage over us, and the shortsighted policy of the administration which discouraged American financiers from sharing in the six-power loan to China are hurting us immeasurably in our export trade with the Celestial Empire, while under our policy of near-free trade a great many American investors find it profitable to develop industries in China, using Chinese cheap labor and Chinese raw material and shipping their product to the American market to displace the product of American mills and labor receiving the American wage.

In referring to Australia and New Zealand it should be borne in mind that the 327 per cent increase in their exports to us was recorded despite the fact that Great Britain has placed a rigid embargo on many products of Australia which otherwise would enter into competition with American products, and these consist chiefly of meats, wool, agricultural, and dairy products. Wool was for a long time under embargo. When the war is over what a fat market this will be for Australia under our present tariff law. Do American farmers welcome this competition? Are they going to let Democratic orators fool them into keeping the door open to Australia, New Zealand, Argentina, Bermuda, Canada, the Orient, and every other country on the globe whose tillers of the soil live on less than it requires to fatten an American pig? [Applause on the Republican side.]

CANADIAN PRODUCERS REAP PROFIT.

While Asia has been flooding our western coast with the products of her cheap labor our Canadian neighbors have not been idle. I quote some figures comparing certain lines of imports from Canada for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, when the laborers and producers of this country enjoyed the blessings of a protective tariff, with those for the year ending June 30, 1915, when the Underwood-Simmons law was in full force and effect:

Articles.	1913	1915
Cattle	$1,026,301	$9,285,277
Fish	3,942,824	6,588,747
Steel rails	11,010	1,503,090
Butter	75,258	263,880
Belting and sole leather	100,112	1,513,075
Shingles	1,399,751	3,104,102

The total of our imports from Canada for the fiscal year 1913 was $120,000,000, as compared with $160,000,000 for the fiscal year 1915. Of these imports $102,416,000 in 1915 were such as come into direct competition with the products of those States bordering on Canada, compared with $60,648,000 in 1913, which more than accounts for the entire increase in 1915 over 1913. I may mention in passing that under the old tariff law 53 per cent of our imports from Canada were on the free list, while under the present Democratic law 86 per cent are admitted free. During the fiscal year just passed our imports from Canada totaled $204,000,000, of which practically 90 per cent were free of duty. We have given a free market to Canada while we pay to enter hers.

In the great lumbering States of Oregon and Washington many shingle mills have been forced to close down, throwing their men out of employment, while shingles by the trainload have been manufactured by the cheap oriental labor of British Columbia and hauled past our very doors to markets in different parts of our country. The lumber business has also fallen into a deplorable condition, due largely to lumber being on the free list.

AMERICA WILL BE DUMPING GROUND FOR EUROPEAN PRODUCTS.

The European war can not last forever and may God speed the day when its last shot is fired! The close of this great struggle will mark the beginning of a commercial war such as the world has never seen. The great armies now in the trenches will return to the factories and fields of Europe with a training that will make them more efficient than ever before. The great European nations will strive to capture the world's commerce, and, with their cheap labor, will unload their products on our wharves and put them in competition with the products of our high-priced labor, with the result that the latter will either be forced to accept lower wages or cease work altogether. We have received intimations of the sort of competition we will be called upon to meet from the reports of the so-called Paris pact of the allies and the Vienna conference of the central powers. With these two groups waging a bitter trade war following the cessation of the war by force of arms there can be but one outcome. Without a protective barrier the United States will be the great battle ground of the European powers for the control of our enormous market, and a competition absolutely destructive of American industries will be waged under the very noses of our producing classes. To guard against such a calamity our people must have the protective policies of the Republican Party. Strong, capable, constructive statesmanship is now the crying need of the country, but it is easy to foresee the conditions which will exist if we remain on a free-trade or near free-trade basis. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I have quoted figures—reliable and authentic, coming from official sources—showing how our imports from Canada and the Orient have increased under the Underwood-Simmons law. Our imports from Europe will be infinitely larger when the war is over unless we anticipate conditions and put up a tariff barrier. It has been suggested that the Tariff Commission provided in the pending revenue act will solve the problem. But the Tariff Commission, under our Constitution, has no power to legislate. It can merely recommend. Any export tariff commission will undoubtedly prove of great value to the country, but the power to fix schedules is vested in Congress, and our Democratic friends in the Baltimore platform (1912) declared legislation fixing protective rates to be unconstitutional. It is quite apparent, then, that if the country is to enjoy the blessings of a protective tariff it will not receive them through the instrumentality of the Democratic Party, notwithstanding that party's recent departure from its cherished position when it committed itself in debate to the protection of the manufacture of dyestuffs in the United States, but refused to fix rates which were protective. The Democratic Party has been and is the party of free trade or tariff for revenue only. We all remember the conditions that followed the adoption of these Democratic theories in 1892, and we have a vivid recollection of conditions that existed following the enactment of the Underwood-Simmons tariff law and continued until the European war orders revived them.

REPUBLICAN POLICIES SOUND.

The November election will decide the question and will tell whether the American people wish to continue an administration that will bring ruin upon the laborers and producers of the country, or whether they wish to return to the sound policies which prevailed almost continuously for half a century and which, because of their soundness, carried genuine prosperity to all classes. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] is recognized for 15 minutes.

THE EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I had it in mind to speak a few words on the subject of the recent crisis in the transportation system of our country, more especially in view of the fact that the greatest misinformation or lack of information seems to prevail as to the effect of the terms of the settlement.

It would not be surprising if our Republican friends, in their mad search for an issue, should attempt to make an issue out of the granting of an eight-hour day to the trainmen, although exactly how they are going to make an issue out of that, in view of the fact that nearly three-fourths of their membership in this House voted for the eight-hour bill, I am unable to see. Possibly there is no more objection to their candidate for President discrediting three-fourths of the membership of his party in this House on their vote on that bill than in his discrediting their vote on the rural-credits bill, the Vera Cruz resolution, and numerous other Democratic measures. Possibly they may go before the country attacking the principle of an eight-hour day, although I have my grave doubts on that subject, because with all of their mad struggles for an issue the rank and file of Republican politicians in this country have not parted with their senses. They are anxious to get into office, and they are not anxious to sink themselves deeper in the sea of obscurity.

But I had in mind more especially to call attention to the total misapprehension, the absolute lack of practical knowledge, which distinguishes my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. He started out by contending that this eight-hour bill, for which you gentlemen as well as ourselves voted, was no more and no less than an increase in wages. It so happens that when I was a boy I was in the railroad business and know a little practically about the subject. I know what is the position of the trainmen to-day on the subject of the 8-hour day as distinguished from the 10-hour day. Their original demand, gentlemen, was that they be given an 8-hour day, or 100 miles, as a standard for a day's work. At present the standard on those roads is 10 hours, or 100 miles. The mileage standard is not changed by the form of this agreement nor by the form of their demands. They ask 100 miles as a day's work, to be accomplished in 8 hours rather than in 10 hours.

Now, I want to remind all our misinformed friends that trainmen are paid on a mileage basis, and that it is the miles accomplished in the day's run for which they are paid and which constitute the standard of their employment. The hours consumed are not important, except on layouts, and unless a layout occurs in a regular run the hours' schedule cuts no figure in most cases. The pay is based upon the miles.

With that explanation in mind, gentlemen will see the utter falsity and unsoundness of a claim that a reduction of the time within which the mileage must be accomplished from 10 hours to 8 hours is an automatic increase of 25 per cent in the wages. They are comparing it in their own minds with a manufacturing institution or a mercantile business. If an employer employs a large number of men in a manufacturing institution and works them 10 hours a day, he has a given output. If he reduces the day to 8 hours, manifestly he decreases his output 20 per cent, and increases his wage scale 25 per cent if he pays the same wages. That is automatic, and the common impression upon the business man's mind is that that is what occurs in the railroad situation. It is that false notion that our partisan friends desire to inculcate in the public mind. The truth about the matter is that that principle does not apply to the railroad business at all. The railroad managers say that these trainmen involved in this dispute draw $400,000,000 a year wages, and that to increase their wages 25 per cent, which they assume will be done by a reduction from 10 to 8 hours, means an additional expense of $100,000,000. If they were running a factory, that would be absolutely true. If they were running a retail store, it would be absolutely incontestable; but it has not the slightest application to train-men. It is not a fact. There will not be an increase of $100,000,000 in the expense of running the railroads, and in my judgment and in the judgment of competent railroad men to whom I have talked there is very little chance for actual increase in the operating expenses of railroads.

The railroad trainmen tell me that in 95 cases out of 100 on the present existing schedule the run of 100 miles can be made within eight hours, and in many cases it is made within the eight hours or less right now. Ten hours for 100 miles are an average of 10 miles an hour for a freight train. A freight train can make in running time 20 to 22 miles an hour. Now, the trainmen are asking that it shall be put over the road, including stops and layouts, at an average speed of 12½ miles an hour instead of an average speed of 10 miles an hour. And there you have the whole gist of the situation.

To show that the trainmen are right in their contention, I want to state another thing that has not been brought to the attention of the public. The trainmen do not desire to earn overtime. They deny that their plan is to work 10 hours and secure 8 hours for a day's work and 2 hours overtime. They desire to cut their day's work to eight hours, and they point out one incontestable proof of their sincerity of purpose in that respect. And if you will follow me, I will tell you what it is: Their first proposition was that overtime over the eight hours should be penalized by charging time and a half for overtime. As those who had had no practical experience in railroading could not see the justice of that, it was cut out of their proposition and they abandoned it and surrendered it. But the effect of that is this: They say that if the punitive overtime were allowed, the railroads would put their trains through in eight hours, and no overtime would be paid to the men. Therefore they would not make a cent more wages, but would simply accomplish the net result of a reduction in their working hours. That is perfectly manifest when you know the conditions under which they work.

They say that if you give them only the present rate for overtime, the railroads will not feel the punitive weight of the time and a half and will not be so careful to put the trains through on an eight-hour schedule. In other words, the more you increase the expense to the railroad for keeping the train on the road beyond eight hours, the more you make it incumbent upon the railroad management to put through the eight-hour schedule and the less overtime earned by the men. That is a matter of common experience. If it costs the railroad managers no more in proportion to run a train 10 hours than 8 hours, they are liable to run them 10 hours, but if it costs them more for punitive time, then they will see by increased efficiency that they will keep to the eight-hour schedule, and the trainmen will get not a cent for overtime. I say that in justice to the trainmen. They did not demand overtime with a view that it should go into their pockets but with a view that it would cut down to eight hours time, which they demanded.

The reduction from 10 hours to 8 hours is not an automatic increase in wages. As a matter of fact, they are paid on a mileage basis of 100 miles, which will be the same to-day after the 8-hour law as under the 10-hour law, and that prevails now in many cases, and it will prevail in 90 per cent of the cases when the schedules are reduced. That an eight-hour schedule is practicable is shown by the fact that most roads operate their passenger schedule on that basis now, and many roads their freight schedule also.

How, then, does this affect the general public? In two ways. In the first place, the railroad presidents have no right to make a blanket demand for increase of rates until it is established that the increase of rates is needed to meet the increase of operating expenses. If it turns out that the railroad men are right, or partially right, in establishing this change, it will not affect the cost of operation and will not add to the operating expenses, then the general public can not be visited by this demand for increased rates. There you have the whole gist of the situation, politically and economically. There you have what the railroad presidents were contending for, a further opportunity to increase the railroad rates of this country upon the pretext of an eight-hour day for trainmen.

How did the President meet that situation? He said, "Gentlemen, let us concede the eight-hour day as a principle and that it may be made practical in railroading as in other business." Does any gentleman here deny that? "Then let us investigate by a fair commission how much this affects the operating cost of the railroads, if any." That plain, simple, business proposition was what was rejected by the railroad presidents. It was a plain business proposition Congress had put into force by its law. That covers to-day the whole of the legislative program that is practical now and which can be adopted at this stage of the contention. If the eight-hour day as a principle can be applied to railroading as to other businesses, then practical results, as the President said in his message, practical observation and experience are the only test to determine whether increased efficiency will offset the extra cost of the service.

Now, gentlemen, I want to say this in answer to a great deal of misapprehension that seems to be abroad in this House. The railroad trainmen are not paid by day or month. The railroad trainman is not a fixed employee of the railroad. He does not earn a penny of salary unless he takes out a load of freight. Every time a trainman goes out with a train his wages are measured into the tonnage he carries. A railroad trainman differs from a shopman, differs from a clerk in the mercantile employ or a factory operative. He is not on day wages; he is working on a commission basis. He goes out with a train and it is that train that pays him, and his pay is measured into the earnings of the train. To-day the trains are not run in 25 or 30 loads, but in 75, 80, and 90 loads. The railroads are straining every nerve to carry the commerce of the country, and the railroad man is taking much more tonnage per man than in the history of railroads. His wages are actually less when measured into the tonnage to-day than ever before in the history of railroads. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on to-morrow I may be allowed to address the House on the political issues of the day for one hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FITZGERALD). Not to-morrow.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota have permission to address the House to-morrow for one hour, not to interfere with privileged matters.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There may be other requests and other business, and that there will not be time.

Mr. MANN. There will be no other business——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will object to it himself.

Mr. MANN. Then I shall object to all request for to-morrow. The Chair has no right to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the unbroken precedents of the House, the Chair has the right to exercise his privilege.

Mr. MANN. No Speaker has ever objected; sometimes some occupant who got into the chair has objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Speakers of the House heretofore have exercised that right, and the present occupant of the chair exercises his right as a Member of the House.

Mr. MANN. Then there will be no business by unanimous consent to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That threat does not keep the present occupant of the chair from exercising his privilege.

Mr. MANN. It will affect the action of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 6748. An act providing that Indian schools may be maintained without restriction as to annual rate of expenditure per pupil; and

S. 3646. An act to amend the act of February 11, 1915 (38 Stat. L., p. 807), providing for the opening of the Fort Assiniboine Military Reservation.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, September 7, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, September 7, 1916.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we lift our hearts reverently to Thee this morning and ask Thy blessing upon us. We would carry into the labor of this day the impression of Thy presence with us and the inspiration that comes to us from a desire to glorify Thy name in the service that we render to our fellow men. We would remember the deep and lasting significance of every act in this Chamber of legislation. We ask Thee so to subdue all passion, so to refine us by the constant influences of Thy spirit that we may act in all things with a sense of our divine obligation, that through Thy leadership we may accomplish great things in the interest of humanity. We ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Husting	Nelson	Smoot
Bryan	James	Norris	Sterling
Chamberlain	Jones	Owen	Stone
Chilton	Kenyon	Penrose	Swanson
Clapp	Kern	Pittman	Taggart
Culberson	Lane	Reed	Thomas
Cummins	Lea, Tenn.	Shafroth	Thompson
Curtis	McCumber	Sheppard	Vardaman
Dillingham	Martin, Va.	Sherman	Warren
Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.
Gallinger	Myers	Smith, S. C.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. HUGHES, Mr. PHELAN, and Mr. SIMMONS answered to their names when called.

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. LEWIS entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the instructions of the Senate.

Mr. FALL and Mr. RANSDELL entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Secretary will read the Journal of the proceedings of the preceding session.

THE JOURNAL.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. GALLINGER. I object. Let the Journal be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Journal will be read. There is objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Friday, September 1, 1916, and was interrupted by

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I think it would comport more with the dignity of this body if the Journal was read with a little degree of clearness and slowness, so that we may know just what is in it, and not be rattled through in the way it is being done.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania whether he wants to have the time taken up by a slow reading.

Mr. PENROSE. No; but I do not want to have it read with such rapidity as to make the reading a farce. If the Journal is worth reading at all, it is worth being read properly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This entire colloquy is out of order. The reading of the Journal will be proceeded with.

Mr. OWEN. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That has already been objected to.

Mr. PENROSE. There is objection to that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the Journal be read.

Mr. PENROSE. In connection with the point of order to which I rose I suppose I have a right to say a word. There has been too much of a practice in the last two months of passing bills without reading them, just reading the titles. I have known prominent lawyers in Pennsylvania and prominent citizens who had been sitting in the galleries come away with signs of disgust at the way the public business has been proceeded with in this body during the last six weeks. It is absurd to pass bills by only reading their titles, and even that reading conducted in a rambling fashion——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania will come to order.

Mr. PENROSE. Have I not a right to speak on the point of order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has no right——

Mr. PENROSE. Then I am done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To proceed to lecture Senators here.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the Journal, and was interrupted by Mr. REED. I move that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have objected and shall object again to such a request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection has been made, and the Journal must be read.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the Journal, and it was approved.

LINCOLN FARM ADDRESSES (S. DOC. NO. 546).

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a public document the address of President Wilson on the occasion of the acceptance by the War Department of a deed of gift to the Nation by the Lincoln Farm Association of the Lincoln birthplace farm at Hodgenville, Ky., September 4, 1916.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, the Senator is chairman of the Committee on Printing, and he understands that we have virtually agreed that all such requests shall go to the Committee on Printing. This being the address of the President of the United States, I am going to make an exception, but it is only because it is the address of the President of the United States, and I will allow it to be printed without going to the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I make the same request as to the address delivered on that occasion by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]? (S. Doc. No. 545.)

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; the Senator can do that, too.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

PUBLIC-LAND STATUTES (S. DOC. NO. 547).

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to call attention to Senate resolution 243, which was amended yesterday and adopted as amended. As amended it creates a situation which I think we have to recede from. I am going to move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, because the effect of the amendment would be to increase the necessary expense beyond what the law allows for either House to expend in the matter of printing a document.

The estimated cost of printing provided for in the resolution as amended is $1,473.79. This estimate is based upon the cost of $259.51 for the usual number and $134.92 for each additional thousand, as estimated by the Public Printer.

The original resolution as reported by the committee provided for 3,000 additional copies, at a cost of $404.79.

The resolution as amended is a violation of the act of March 1, 1907, which provides that "if the cost of extra copies exceeds $500 the printing shall be ordered by concurrent or joint resolution; the latter if self-appropriating." It has not been customary, either, for one House to order printing of documents for the use of the other House by a simple resolution. If it is desired to pass the resolution as amended, it must be made a concurrent resolution to comply with the law.

I ask the Senate to consent to reconsider the resolution and pass it as it was reported from the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I merely wish to say the resolution was worded wrong in the first place if the law applies to it. It says it shall be printed as a public document. If it has already been printed as a public document, then there ought to be extra copies ordered; and if it has not been printed as a public document, the law the Senator has cited does not apply to it. I took it for granted that it had not been printed as a public document on account of the wording of the resolution.

Mr. MYERS. It had not been printed as a public document.

Mr. SMOOT. Then the law does not apply to it. The law applies wherever there are additional copies of a public document to be printed, and these are not additional copies. This is the original order to have the public document printed.

Mr. MYERS. I will state that the Public Lands Committee had a few copies printed but it was never printed as a public document.

Mr. SMOOT. That is not a public document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the request of the Senator from Florida?

Mr. FLETCHER. My motion would be to reconsider the vote and pass the resolution as it was reported. Otherwise we would have to amend it so as to make it a concurrent resolution, and I believe we could not get it through the House at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator is wrong. If it had been printed as a public document before, then the Senator would be right, but it has not been printed as a public document before and the Senate has a perfect right under the law to order whatever number of copies it may see fit. Thus, as the Senator knows, we have had public documents printed here by a Senate resolution that cost $43,000; but if extra copies are to be printed then the cost can not be more than $500 if the printing is ordered by a resolution of either House.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, this document has been printed.

Mr. SMOOT. Not as a public document.

Mr. FLETCHER. It was printed for the committee. There are extra copies provided for in the resolution itself. I do not believe under the law the Public Printer would have authority to print the extra copies according to the resolution as amended. That is the danger of it.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Montana is satisfied with 3,000 copies I have no objection to a reconsideration of the resolution and passing it as reported to the Senate.

Mr. MYERS. I would much rather have 10,000 copies than 3,000 copies. There is a great demand for copies of this document. The Senators on the Printing Committee, the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Utah, disagree diametrically about the law and I am not able to say because I am not a member of the committee and I have never looked up the law. I can only say that it never has been printed before as a public document. If we could agree on what the law is I would know what to say, but when the two members of the Printing Committee disagree about the law I do not know what to say except two things. It has never been printed as a public document, and I would like very much to have 10,000 copies.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator from Montana if it has been printed by the committee as a committee document?

Mr. MYERS The committee had a few copies printed.

Mr. WARREN. It is undoubtedly in type, and the expense for additional copies would be very slight.

Mr. FLETCHER. It would cost four hundred and some odd dollars to print the precise number originally asked by the Senator from Montana in his resolution. Why not stand by that? That is what the committee reported, and that is within our limit. If you amend it so as to print 10,000 copies, you exceed the limit, and it is going to cost $1,473.79; and I do not believe the Public Printer can print them under a Senate resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator must be mistaken as to the $1,400. The cost for 3,000 copies was $259.50. That is the estimated cost from the Printing Office. Ten thousand copies could not cost more than three times that amount.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have an estimate to the effect that it will cost $1,473.79 for 10,000 extra copies.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that the estimate made upon the resolution as reported last night was two hundred and fifty-odd dollars. Let me suggest to the Senator that he ask for a reconsideration of the resolution and that we provide for 5,000 copies. There is not any question but that that will come within the $500 limit.

Mr. MYERS. I will ask the Senator from Florida if he feels absolutely certain it will never be printed as a public document unless the resolution is amended.

Mr. FLETCHER. Under the resolution as it now stands amended the Public Printer absolutely, in my opinion, could not print the full 10,000 extra copies.

Mr. MYERS. Then I am willing to have the resolution reconsidered and to print 5,000 copies. As the Senator from Utah says, it is too late to look up the law, and I do not want to take the chance of getting no copies at all.

Mr. SMOOT. I have sent for the original resolution, on which the cost was estimated by the department.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the Senator from Utah recognize that the printing of 10,000 copies will be much cheaper in proportion to the cost than to have the number limited? It is a very valuable work. There is not any question but that the compilation of these laws will supersede looking up the statutes, and nearly every lawyer in the West and nearly every person interested in public lands will want a copy. I think 10,000 copies should be printed.

Mr. MYERS. They can send a dollar to the Public Printer and get a copy.

Mr. FLETCHER. It can be printed at the Government Printing Office and sold to the lawyers of the country at a nominal price, based upon the cost of reprinting.

Mr. MYERS. That is not the intention, Mr. President, in making it a public document. I have been told that the price would be $1, and any person writing to the superintendent of documents could get a copy.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Montana that that would not be the case if the resolution is passed. Then each Senator is allowed his pro rata of the copies printed for the Senate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the Senator think there ought to be some copies for the lawyers of the country?

Mr. FLETCHER. We can order them to be printed as a public document for free distribution to the extent of the number provided for, and they can also be put on sale by the superintendent of documents. The sale of the document has nothing to do with the resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. I have the estimated cost here of printing 3,000 copies. It was $259.51. I thought it was $252.

Mr. WARREN. There is some error evidently about it.

Mr. FLETCHER. The estimate of $259.51 refers to the "usual number" of copies, and the estimated cost for each additional thousand is $144.92, making a total cost of $434.76 for the 3,000 extra copies provided for in the original resolution. The $500 limit of cost on "extra copies" does not apply to the cost of printing the "usual number."

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly, it would not cost any more to print additional copies than to print the original 3,000 copies. So if the 3,000 copies cost only $259.51——

Mr. FLETCHER. That is the estimate for the usual number only.

Mr. SMOOT. No; this is the estimate for 3,000 copies called for in the original resolution.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Senator will find that the estimate of $259.51 was for the usual number, which would be only 1,345 copies, and in addition to that $144.92 for each additional thousand copies.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me read the original resolution. The estimate was made on the original resolution. It says:

Resolved, That the publication entitled "Public Land Statutes of the United States" be printed as a Senate document, and that 3,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate folding room and 1,000 additional for the Committee on Public Lands.

That included 3,000 copies, and the estimated cost under the resolution was $259.51.

What I thought was that by reconsidering the resolution and striking out "3,000" and inserting "5,000" we would be within the limits of $500, and let the resolution be passed in that form.

Mr. MYERS. I am willing for that.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the resolution be amended by substituting "5,000 copies" for "3,000 copies."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to amend it so that in the distribution there shall be 4,000 copies for the use of the Senate folding room and 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution as proposed to be amended.

The Secretary read the resolution as proposed to be amended, as follows:

Resolved, That the publication entitled "Public Land Statutes" be printed as a Senate document, and that 4,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate folding room and 1,000 additional copies for the Committee on Public Lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MISSISSIPPI CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION AT GULFPORT.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I am going to ask the Senate this morning to indulge me just a moment while I make a statement, to be followed by a request of the Senate, which I shall make in behalf of the people of Mississippi. House joint resolution No. 252, which lies on the desk of the Presiding Officer, authorizes the transfer of the Government exhibits now at the Panama-California International Exposition at San Diego, Cal., to the Mississippi Centennial Exposition, to be held at Gulfport, Miss., during the year 1917. The joint resolution carries an appropriation of $75,000 to defray the necessary expenses of maintaining the Government exhibits there. I am going to ask the Senate for immediate consideration of that resolution. While local in its application, I trust that the effect of the enactment of the resolution may be national in its scope, because I maintain that you can not aid, by Government or otherwise, a legitimate enterprise in one State without at the same time benefiting all of the States.

Mr. President, the people of Mississippi have gone to, or will go to, the expense of raising something like three-quarters of a million dollars for this exposition, which will be held in celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Mississippi into the American Union.

Marvelous changes have taken place in the affairs of the Nation since this great commonwealth linked its destiny with the sisterhood of States to form this great Republic. It is the purpose of the promoters of this enterprise in Mississippi to show forth not only the things that have been done in America, but in the light of the achievements of the present, to indicate the almost infinite possibilities of the future. To say that Mississippi has contributed her part to the development of our national civilization would be but a repetition of history known to every student of national affairs. We have not amassed the fabulous private fortunes which characterize the achievements of men of other sections of our common country, but our State has been glorious—wonderfully rich in the character and intellectual accomplishments and moral qualities of its men and women, which after all is the source of all true greatness of every country. Mississippi was the first State in the Union to emancipate woman commercially—to recognize the right of woman to control and manage her own property. Within the State of Mississippi by public taxation was established the first girls' industrial college, which equips woman for the duties of life and gives her independence in the matter of self-support and self-care. That institution to-day, situated at Columbus, is one of the great schools of America for the literary and industrial education of woman, and after all, Mr. President, woman is the custodian of the morals of the Nation and man's reverence for woman determines the excellency of all civilizations. It was Mississippi that first undertook by legal means, in the face of constitutional hindrance, the solution of the great race problem of America, which beclouds the future of our country with its well-nigh insoluble difficulties. I might weary the Senate by recounting the things that have been done by Mississippi men and women which contributed to the upbuilding of America's incomparable civilization, but the limited time at my command this morning will prevent, besides I am admonished that other Senators have matters of local interest which they wish considered by the Senate. But I will trespass upon the patience of the Senate to add just this brief statement. It is the purpose of the people of Mississippi to make this exposition an international enterprise. We hope to have every State in the Union represented there, and in addition the Central and South American countries with which the United States is now endeavoring to cultivate more intimate business relations. The proximity of the coast of Mississippi to the Central and South American countries will make the exposition easily accessible to them, and I have no doubt but that every one of these countries will take advantage of the opportunity to show to the world, through our exposition at Gulfport, the wonderful resources of their respective countries. I know the influence and effect of written treaties, but personal contact between men will do more toward cultivating the relation of friendship and exciting mutual interests than all the words that could be written on parchment and published in newspapers for a hundred years. Of course, Mr. President, Senators understand that this proposed legislation is not without precedent. A number of expositions have been held in the different States at which the Government was represented, and the one at San Diego, Cal., from which we hope to have these exhibits transferred settles the question of precedent.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not seen the joint resolution. Will the Senator state, for my information, where this exposition is to be held?

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is to be held at the city of Gulfport, which is a very enterprising little city of about 10,000 people on the Gulf coast of Mississippi—I think the most beautiful Gulf coast in America.

Mr. GALLINGER. I know about Gulfport. It is a very enterprising city and is growing rapidly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is growing very rapidly, and its people have shown great pluck and enterprise by that little city taxing itself $125,000 for this exposition. But I am not going to take up further the time of the Senate, for, as I have stated heretofore, I understand every Senator in the Chamber probably has some local matter which he hopes to get through during the closing hours of the session. I want to say in conclusion, however, that if the Government's exhibit shall be carried to Gulfport, it will contribute very much to the success of the exposition. We all desire it, and it will be, personally, very gratifying to me if the Senate shall agree to this resolution.

I wish also, on behalf of the people of Mississippi, to extend to the Members of the Senate, in advance, a very cordial invitation to visit the exposition next year, and I assure them that we shall extend to them that hospitality which is the perfume of the fairest flower of our civilization.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. VARDAMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. One other question. I have not examined the joint resolution, and I desire to ask under whose direction will these exhibits be transferred from San Diego to Gulfport?

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator from New Hampshire will permit me, I will read the joint resolution, which explains all that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall be glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is to be done by the direction of a commission to be appointed by the President. I will read the joint resolution, which is as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 252) authorizing the transfer of the Government exhibit, or such portion thereof as the President may determine is advisable, now at the Panama-California International Exposition at San Diego, Cal., to the Mississippi Centennial Exposition at Gulfport, Miss.

Whereas there is to be held at Gulfport, Miss., beginning in December, 1917, and ending in March, 1918, the Mississippi Centennial Exposition to commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of Mississippi into the Union; and

Whereas there is now a Government exhibit at the Panama-California International Exposition at San Diego, Cal., which exposition will close December 31, 1916: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the said Government exhibit at the Panama-California International Exposition, or such portion thereof as may be determined by the President as advisable, be transferred at the close of the Panama-California International Exposition to the Mississippi Centennial Exposition at Gulfport, Miss., and to be maintained during the continuance of the said Mississippi Centennial Exposition and until not later than April 30, 1918, and for the purposes herein named there is hereby authorized to be expended the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as is necessary to cover the expense of transferring and maintaining the said exhibit, or such part thereof as may be determined by the President as available.

SEC. 2. That all laws or parts of laws relating to said Government exhibit and constituting a Government Exhibit Board and authorizing the detail of civilians and Army and Navy officers of the United States in connection with the Government exhibit at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition and which were continued and made applicable by act of Congress, December 17, 1915, so far as the same could be made applicable, to the Panama-California International Exposition at San Diego, Cal., is hereby continued and made applicable, so far as the same may be made applicable, to the Mississippi Centennial Exposition at Gulfport, Miss., during its said continuance.

SEC. 3. That nothing herein contained shall prevent the Government Exhibit Board in their discretion with the approval of the President, from transferring said Government exhibit at the close of the Panama-California International Exposition from San Diego to some other point in the United States, if desirable, for being rearranged, repaired, or added to before transferring said exhibit to the Mississippi Centennial Exposition at Gulfport.

SEC. 4. That the Government of the United States does not become responsible in any manner for any bond, debt, contract, expenditure, expense, or liability of the said Mississippi Centennial Exposition, its officers, agents, servants, or employees, or incident to or growing out of the said exposition, beyond such appropriation as is necessary to cover the expense of transferring and maintaining the said exhibit or such portion thereof as may be determined by the President as advisable.

Mr. President, with that statement, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution, and I trust that the Senate may pass it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the joint resolution be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the joint resolution referred to, which will be read.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 252) authorizing the transfer of the Government exhibit, or such portion thereof as the President may determine is advisable, now at the Panama-California International Exposition at San Diego, Cal., to the Mississippi

Centennial Exposition at Gulfport, Miss., was read twice by its title.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] having read the joint resolution at length, it is hardly necessary that it be reread in full.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the formal reading of the joint resolution will be dispensed with.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to say that heretofore I have been rather technical about insisting that matters of this kind should go to committees and be reported; but this proposition strikes me very favorably. I think that we ought to generously grant this request. As the joint resolution comes from the other House, I shall not raise the point on it, which under ordinary circumstances I would do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I wish, in behalf of the people of Mississippi, as well as for myself, to express sincere thanks to the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire for his generous interest in this matter. The Senator's conduct in this instance is in keeping with the uniform kindness and courtesy which always characterizes his conduct in his intercourse with his brother Senators ir this Chamber.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will not the Senator from Indiana wait until this joint resolution is passed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana will suspend a moment. The joint resolution has not yet been passed. The question is, Shall the joint resolution pass?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the joint resolution is passed, I desire to say that after it has been passed I shall insist upon the regular order, which is the presentation of petitions and memorials—the regular morning business.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from New Hampshire will object to the request which the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TAGGART] is about to make, to take up the widows' pension bill for consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very likely I shall not.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. All the objections to the consideration of the bill have been withdrawn, and we desire to have the bill passed at this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. I certainly shall not object to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the joint resolution pass?

The joint resolution was passed.

PENSIONS OF SOLDIERS' WIDOWS, MINOR CHILDREN, ETC.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Order of Business 529, being House bill 11707, which is known as the widows' pension bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] is detained on conference committee work, but he has requested me to say that he will not object to the consideration of this bill, provided a certain amendment which he proposes to offer to the bill shall be agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I should like to know what that amendment is.

Mr. THOMAS. I will read the amendment. It is very short, and is as follows:

> Hereafter changes in rates of Army and Navy pensions under general laws shall take effect on the first day of the quarterly payment period.

Personally I have no interest whatever in the matter.

Mr. JAMES. But I understood the Senator from Florida had no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Before unanimous consent is given for the consideration of the bill I ask that it be read. I do not know what the bill is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the title of the bill.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 11707) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the pension of widows, minor children, etc., of deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War, the War with Mexico, the various Indian wars, etc., and to grant a pension to certain widows of the deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War," approved April 19, 1908, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are numerous committee amendments to the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to move to amend section 4 as it came from the House, which reads:

> That no claim agent or attorney shall be recognized in the adjudication of claims under the first and second sections of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is, Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire to inquire if the committee amendments are not first to be considered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first two committee amendments to the bill have heretofore been agreed to, the Secretary advises the Chair. There is no rule which requires committee amendments to be first considered.

Mr. SMOOT. In order that we may all know just what course of procedure will be pursued, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments be first acted upon.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understood we had acted upon the committee amendments down to the proposed committee amendment to section 4.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not think we have reached that point.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. When we reach section 4 I desire to offer an amendment to the House provision and to urge it instead of the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] asks unanimous consent that the amendments of the committee which have not been disposed of be acted on before other amendments are offered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Secretary will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The SECRETARY. The first two committee amendments having been previously agreed to, the next amendment of the Committee on Pensions is, in section 2, page 2, line 17, after the word "widow," to insert "of an officer or enlisted man who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War"; on page 3, line 3, after the word "law," to strike out "or laws"; and in the same line, after the word "pensioned," to insert "and the law or laws amendatory thereof," so as to read:

> SEC. 2. That any widow of an officer or enlisted man who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War whose name was placed or shall hereafter be placed on the pension roll under any existing law and whose name has been or shall hereafter be dropped from said pension roll by reason of her marriage to another person who has since died or shall hereafter die, or from whom she has been heretofore or shall be hereafter divorced upon her own application and without fault on her part, shall be entitled to have her name again placed on the pension roll at the rate allowed by the law under which she was formerly pensioned, and the law or laws amendatory thereof, unless she be entitled to a greater rate of pension under the provisions of section 1 of this act, such pension to commence from the date of filing her application in the Bureau of Pensions after the passage of this act.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I wish some member of the Committee on Pensions would tell me what rate of pension is allowed at this time to widows included in this bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Under the present law the rate is $12 per month.

Mr. STONE. And this bill increases that to $20 per month?

Mr. SMOOT. This bill makes it $20 per month.

Mr. GALLINGER. When the widow reaches the age of 70.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; when the widow reaches the age of 70.

Mr. STONE. I do not quite understand the bill as providing that the widow must have reached the age of 70 in order to be entitled to the increased rating.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, yes; the bill specifically states "who has reached or shall hereafter reach the age of 70 years."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, in section 2, page 3, line 23, after the word "remarriage," to insert "and to any person who was lawfully married to an officer or enlisted man, who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War and was honorably discharged therefrom and has since deceased, and who, having remarried since his death is again a widow, or has been divorced from her last husband upon her own application without fault on her part and who, otherwise entitled, was barred by reason of such remarriage from receiving pension under any existing law," so as to read:

> And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall be extended to those widows, otherwise entitled, whose husbands died of wounds, injuries, or disease incurred during the period of their military or naval service, but who were deprived of pension under the act of March 3, 1865, because of their failure to draw any pension by reason of their remarriage, and to any person who was lawfully married to an officer or enlisted man who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War and was honorably discharged therefrom and has since deceased, and who, having remarried since his death, is again a widow, or has been divorced from her last husband upon her own application without fault on her part, and who, otherwise entitled, was barred by reason of such remarriage from receiving pension under any existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 4, line 10, after the words "prior to," to strike out "June twenty-seventh, nineteen hundred and five," and insert "the passage of this act," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That any widow, as described in section 2 of the act approved April 19, 1908, who married the soldier or sailor prior to the passage of this act, shall have title to pension under the provisions of said section of said act, to commence from the date of filing her application in the Bureau of Pensions after the passage of this act: Provided, however, That the benefits of this act shall include those widows whose husbands, if living, would have a pensionable status under the joint resolutions of February 15, 1895, July 1, 1902, and June 28, 1906.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I move to amend the House provision in section 4, which reads:

That no claim agent or attorney shall be recognized in the adjudication of claims under the first and second sections of this act.

That clearly is intended to save to the pensioners the full amount of the money which they receive from the Government in the form of pensions. I wish to add this amendment:

It shall be illegal for any claim agent, attorney, or other person to charge or receive from any pensioner provided for by this act any sum in connection with the procurement of a pension, and any person violating this provision shall, on conviction, be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than six months.

This will absolutely save the money to the pensioners. Those receiving the benefits of this act do not need anybody to represent them. They will get what they are entitled to on application; and their Representatives in Congress are always ready to look out for them. I do want what the Government gives to go to the 70-year-old widows.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to the fact that there is a committee amendment pending to this section; and, under the order of the Senate, the committee amendments must be first disposed of.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But I wish to perfect the House provision before we vote upon the Senate amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia to the House provision of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no objection at all to the provision that the Senator has offered as an amendment to section 4 of the House bill, but I do have objection to having the amended House section 4 substituted for the Senate amendment. As soon as we agree to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia, to which I have no objection, I want to speak to the question itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia to the House provision of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, the question reverts, I suppose——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the Senate amendment.

The SECRETARY. The committee proposes to strike out section 4, and to insert a new section 4, as follows:

That no claim agent or attorney shall be recognized in the adjudication of claims under the first section of this act, nor shall any claim agent or attorney be recognized in the adjudication of claims under the second section of this act for renewal of pension previously allowed, and in claims for original pension under section 2 of this act no greater sum than $10 shall be allowed for services in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting such claim, which sum shall be payable only upon the order of the Commissioner of Pensions under such rules and regulations as he may deem proper to make.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] moves to amend the portion proposed to be striken out so that it will read:

It shall be illegal for any claim agent, attorney, or other person to charge or receive from any pensioner provided for by this act any sum in connection with the procurement of a pension, and any person violating this provision shall, on conviction, be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than six months for each offense.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The status of the matter is that the Senator from Georgia has proposed to amend the text of the House bill, and his amendment has been agreed to. The question now is on the adoption of the Senate amendment as a substitute for the House language as amended by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I sincerely hope the Senate will adopt the Senate committee amendment. The latter part of it provides:

In claims for original pension under section 2 of this act no greater sum than $10 shall be allowed for services in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting such claims.

Ten dollars ought to be allowed for those purposes; but I do not believe, and the Senate committee has so provided, that any claim agent or attorney should be paid in the adjudication of claims under the first section of the act.

Let us see how this will work, Mr. President. Wherever there is a question of testimony that a widow will be compelled to submit to the department, she can not without assistance present it in the way that it must be presented. She can not prepare the required affidavits. Perhaps she has no friends that can prepare them properly, and she would be perfectly helpless. Some of the widows could hardly understand the letters that would be sent them by the Commissioner of Pensions in answer to their application for pension. Now, we want to prevent any attorney or any claim agent from receiving more than $10 for such service. Not only that, but we go further and we limit the payment of that amount until the Commissioner of Pensions orders it paid. We have guarded it in every way possible; but I know that if that provision is not put into the law there will be thousands of widows in this country who will never receive the benefit of this act.

Mr. President, I do not believe there is a Senator who wants to debar any widow who is entitled under the law to receive a pension from doing so.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. My observation leads me to believe that there are a great many people in this country who do not realize that they can write to their Senator or Congressman with regard to pension matters, and that is the vice of the special pension system. Some one who does know a Congressman or Senator will bring a meritorious case to his attention and get a bill passed, while others—and there are lots of them who do not know the Congressman or Senator—do not realize that they can appeal to him, and they go without the protection which the law sought to give them because of that fact.

I believe the Senator from Utah is right. There are a great many people sought to be reached by this bill who would not understand that they could write to their Senator or Congressman in regard to the matter. I am just as anxious as anybody to protect the pensioners from the rapacity of agents and attorneys, but I am inclined to think that in our effort to protect the pensioners we are perhaps doing what may result in injury to some of them.

Mr. KERN and Mr. THOMAS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. UNDERWOOD in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield, and to whom?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator fron. Indiana.

Mr. KERN. I want to ask the Senator whether he thinks that Senators and Members of Congress could find time to prepare the necessary affidavits and hunt up the evidence necessary for the prosecution of these claims? I am quite sure that some provision must be made here that will enable these women who will be entitled to pensions under this act to go to somebody other than their Congressman or Senator for aid in the prosecution of their claims.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I think the Senators and Congressmen, as a rule, through their official force, do take care of those cases that come to their attention. The trouble is that I know well enough that there are any number of people who, not being personally acquainted with a Congressman or a Senator, do not realize that they can write to him; and I do not think we ought to throw this obstacle in the way of deserving pensioners.

Mr. SMOOT. There is another class of cases, Mr. President, that will have to be looked after under the $10 provision. There are many names dropped from the pension rolls upon the reports of pension examiners. Now, are we going to say that a widow who is dropped from the pension rolls, without receiving any information other than the notification of her name being dropped, shall not have the privilege of going to an attorney or a pension agent and have her case submitted to the department for reconsideration? It is unreasonable; and it seems to me that we have limited the amount in this bill so that no one is going to be taken advantage of.

I am in full accord with the policy of the Senate Pension Committee for the past 10 years in preventing pension-claim sharks from robbing the applicants for pensions, for that is what they have been doing in the past. I know not only of cases where there have been pension-claim agents who have taken all of the first year's pension that the pensioner received, but I have known cases where in order to meet their demands they have taken as high as three years' pension. Of late—I think during the last six years—there has not been a pension bill passed without a limitation being placed upon the charges that could be made by a claim agent or an attorney acting in behalf of a claimant for pension.

This being a widows' pension bill, we have limited the amount that may be allowed to the small sum of $10, not as to the first section of the bill but applying only to the second section. The testimony or application may be submitted by an attorney or a claim agent, but in no case shall he be paid more than $10.

If the Senate amendment is not agreed to and if the House provision as amended by the Senator from Georgia is agreed to, I say now that there will be many, many of the widows of officers and soldiers who never will be placed upon the pension rolls. Not only that, but I want to say that in every case where a name is dropped from the pension rolls I doubt whether it will ever be put back.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I am not clear from hearing the bill read whether it affects the limitation of existing law that prohibits a widow from getting a pension unless she married a soldier prior to a certain date. Does it change that law?

Mr. SMOOT. It does change that law, Mr. President.

Mr. NELSON. To what extent?

Mr. SMOOT. I will read the provision to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. Under the existing law it is some date in 1890—June 30, 1890, I believe. Unless a widow married a soldier before that date, she is not entitled to any pension. This removes that limitation entirely, as I understand. Is that the effect of it?

Mr. SMOOT. That is the effect, Mr. President. It removes the limitation.

Mr. NELSON. As to widows of the Civil War?

Mr. SMOOT. Widows of the Civil War will receive a pension down to the passage of this act.

Mr. NELSON. A pension of $20?

Mr. SMOOT. No; $20, provided they are 70 years old; but $12, as the law now provides, if they are not.

Mr. NELSON. No matter if they married the soldier yesterday?

Mr. SMOOT. That is true, Mr. President.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. KERN. I want to call the attention of Senators to the fact that we have only seven minutes left in which to pass this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I am ready to vote.

Mr. KERN. The Senator from Utah is insisting that there is no unfinished business. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] claims that there is unfinished business. Now, while we have this seven minutes, let us pass this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I am ready to vote. Mr. President.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not.

Mr. KERN. The matter can be disposed of in conference.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator has taken up the time in objecting to the amendment which I made, and I desire to reply to him.

I do not believe there is a county in the United States in which there are not high-class lawyers who would willingly represent the widow of a soldier for nothing and attend to her work for her. I have not very much opinion of the $10 lawyers or the $10 claim agents. I would rather risk a widow in the hands of a high-class lawyer who would gladly serve her for nothing, if she needed it, than in the hands of the $10 claim agent.

When I was connected with the Interior Department, there was often called to my attention the improper treatment that pensioners received from claim agents. I introduced this amendment because I am willing to see these 70-year-old widows get every dollar that the bill gives them. I am not much in favor of the widow who marries now and is not of advanced years herself; but the provision in the bill that takes care of the 70-year-old widow is what appeals to me, and I want them to have all the money.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, this is a very important measure, and I do hope it will pass before the morning hour expires, if there is unfinished business. The enactment of this bill into law will bring joy to the hearts of thousands of deserving widows; and I hope it may pass to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendment.

Mr. KERN. Let us have the question put.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] to the House text has already been agreed to. The question is on the adoption of the Senate committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I want to return to section 3, and ask a reconsideration of the Senate amendment there which provides that any widow who married a soldier prior to the passage of the act should be entitled to a pension. That means that if a woman 20 years old to-day marries an old soldier who dies to-morrow, and she lives 50 years longer, she will be a pensioner upon this Government at the rate of $360 a year. Now, I can conceive of no reason for that.

Mr. SMOOT. No; $12 a month, unless she is 70 years old.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, $12 a month, $144 a year. Upon what theory can we so legislate? A good many lectures have been read to the Democratic majority in the last few days regarding our extravagances. None of them have had reference to pensions. Here we propose to pension a lot of women who are not even married to-day, who may be married to-morrow, before the passage of this act, and who thereby become life pensioners.

I ask for a reconsideration of this amendment, and the adoption of the House provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator state what it is that he moves to reconsider?

Mr. THOMAS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment to section 3, on line 11, page 4, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

The SECRETARY. The committee amendment struck out the words "June 27, 1905," and inserted the words "the passage of this act," so that it would read:

That any widow, as described in section 2 of the act approved April 19, 1908, who married the soldier or sailor prior to the passage of this act, shall have title to pension under the provisions of said section of said act, to commence from the date of filing her application in the Bureau of Pensions after the passage of this Act.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I hope the friends of this measure will leave it as the House had it. I think that is very fair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado to reconsider the action of the Senate in reference to section 3. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I call for a division.

The motion was lost, on a division.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall object to the further consideration of this bill unless it contains the House provision in section 3.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. I do not think the Senator can object after unanimous consent has been given for the consideration of the bill. The Senate is considering it under a unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that under the rules of the Senate objection can be made in the morning hour at any time when a bill is being considered; but if the Senator from Kansas has any further light that he can throw on that the Chair will be glad to hear from him.

Mr. MYERS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The motion is not in order. The morning business has not closed, and a motion to proceed can not be made until the morning business is closed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order made by the Senator from Georgia is sustained by the Chair.

Mr. SMOOT. Has not the morning business closed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning hour had not closed then, but the hour of 12 o'clock having just arrived the morning hour is closed and——

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 11767.

Mr. OWEN. Before the Senator's motion is in order the unfinished business automatically must be laid before the Senate under the rule. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate as a matter of due order.

Mr. SMOOT. The calendar does not show that there is any unfinished business.

Mr. OWEN. The print of the calendar is a matter of no consequence.

Mr. SMOOT. I am aware that it is no evidence in itself, but I should like to say to the Senator he allowed the bill to be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of going into an executive session, and after the business of the executive session was completed there was a great deal of legislative business transacted, as the Journal discloses this morning, and we adjourned by a vote of the Senate. The Senator well knows that the corrupt-practices bill was not before the Senate when we adjourned, and therefore it can not be the unfinished business.

Mr. OWEN. I recognize the fact that the attitude of the Republican leaders this morning in demanding the reading of the Journal for an hour and a half, more or less, and the present attitude of the Senator from Utah is merely a filibuster against this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. It is no filibuster. I am perfectly willing to have the Chair decide this question by the rules of the Senate, and I have not another word to say.

Mr. OWEN. The unfinished business was temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the Danish treaty, and while in executive session some legislative matters were considered, but it was done under a unanimous consent. But the fact was that the bill which had the right of way was merely temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the executive business, and it is in good conscience entitled now to its status as the unfinished business.

Mr. SMOOT. As far as I am concerned, I do not care what the ruling of the Chair is. I am perfectly willing to submit it now and let the Chair decide.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair was not in the Senate at the time the bill was laid aside, and therefore has to turn to the RECORD to find what occurred. The Chair finds the RECORD discloses the fact that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], addressing the Chair, said:

Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Oklahoma if he will not consent to lay aside the bill for a short time that we may have an executive session——

Mr. OWEN. That was the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will allow the Chair to finish—that we may have an executive session, and after that we can resume its consideration.

Mr. OWEN. I am willing to have the bill temporarily laid aside subject to the executive session, with the understanding that after the executive session is disposed of we shall then proceed with the consideration of the bill.

The Chair finds that, after we went into executive session, by unanimous consent there were certain other matters that were taken up, but it seems to the Chair that when the Senator from Oklahoma consented to lay aside the consideration of the bill before the Senate it was clearly with the understanding that its status as the unfinished business should not be disturbed, and the Chair holds that it is the unfinished business of the Senate. The Secretary will report the bill to the Senate.

The SECRETARY. A bill, H. R. 15842, known as the corrupt-practices act.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. OWEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma has charge of the bill.

Mr. OWEN. I am willing, unless the widows' pension bill is going to consume an unlimited amount of time, to ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside to dispose of that bill. If Senators mean to talk on the widows' pension bill indefinitely, then I do not feel willing to have the unfinished business laid aside. I should be glad to know whether the Senators are willing to have the pension bill disposed of.

Mr. THOMAS. If I may be allowed, so far as I am concerned, I will say that if the Senate will accept the House bill and reject the amendment to section 3, I shall not say a word against the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. OWEN. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will allow me, the House bill was brought to the attention of myself and several other Senators, and it seemed so fair and so much in the interest of women of advanced years that we agreed to cooperate and support the bill and put it through.

The Senate committee amendments confront us with an entirely different bill. I do not claim that anyone has acted improperly in it; but I was shown the House bill, and the 70-year-old widows appealed to me tremendously, and I wanted to help do something for them. I thought here is a chance to help me to vote for a measure I am glad to support. This change to let a girl marry a man of 75 to-morrow and draw the pension does not appeal to me at all.

Mr. SMOOT. Is that the only provision the Senator objects to?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is the one I principally object to.

Mr. THOMAS. It is the only one I object to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Why should we not pass the House bill and close it?

Mr. SMOOT. I will tell the Senator why. For instance, the first Senate amendment I do not think the Senator will object to. It is to perfect the House bill; that is, to make the House bill read:

That from and after the passage of this act the rate of pension for a widow who was the lawful wife of any officer or enlisted man in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the period of his service in the Civil War shall be $20 per month.

To perfect that the Senate committee put in the words:

Now on the roll or hereafter to be placed on the pension roll and entitled to receive a less rate than hereinafter provided.

The Senator would not object to that.

Mr. THOMAS. I would not object to it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not object to that.

Mr. SMOOT. The only thing the two Senators object to is the provision granting a pension to the widow who may have married a day before the passage of this act.

Mr. THOMAS. Striking out "June 27, 1905."

Mr. SMOOT. I am willing that that amendment should be rejected in order to get the bill through.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to get rid of the $10 to pension agents, but I will waive even that.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that rather than see this bill fail this session of Congress I would be willing to accept the House provision.

Mr. OWEN. With that understanding, and that this bill will therefore take only a few minutes to dispose of, I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for this purpose and then return to the unfinished business.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma I do not think it will take 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 11707.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask unanimous consent to take it up. There is not any objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. All we need is to let the House bill pass into the Senate and reserve the amendment to section 3.

Mr. SMOOT. The one amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The one amendment to section 3.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the amendment to section 4 agreed to in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It has been agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not remember the Senate agreeing to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been agreed to, the Chair is advised. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. MYERS. I move to amend the bill in line 9, on page 2, by striking out the word "seventy" and inserting "sixty."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 9, before the word "years," strike out "seventy" and insert "sixty."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMOOT. There is one other amendment I want to call attention to.

Mr. THOMAS. What has been done with the amendment to section 3?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from Colorado that that amendment has been reserved for action when the bill goes into the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. Is the bill now in a position where other amendments can be offered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. THOMAS. At the request of the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], I offer an amendment. I understand it is acceptable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Add, at the end of the bill, a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. Hereafter changes in rates of Army and Navy pensions under general law shall take effect on the first day of the quarterly payment period.

Mr. SMOOT. The committee can not accept that. That does not affect the widows included in this bill but it affects every old soldier in the United States.

Mr. THOMAS. The amendment is not mine. I have introduced it by request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I suggest to the Senator to let it go to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah has the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. I will not take the time of the Senate, because I gave my word to the Senator from Oklahoma that it would not take very long to conclude the consideration of the bill. All I will say is that I sincerely hope the Senate will not vote for the amendment. It means that every old soldier in the country who arrives at the age of 75 years, we will say, is not entitled to increase of pension immediately as the law provides, but he must wait until the first day of the next quarter. That is what it means. I ask that the Senate disagree to the amendment.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What is the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. The purpose of the amendment is that the pensioners shall be paid only quarterly, or, in other words, on the 1st day of January——

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is simply a matter of bookkeeping.

Mr. SMOOT. That is not all. Increases of pensions are to begin on the 1st day of January, the 1st day of April, the 1st day of July, and the 1st day of October; and if an old soldier arrives at the age of 75 on the 2d day of January he can not receive an increase of pension until the 1st day of April.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Let us vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMOOT. There is one other amendment I wish to offer. I do not want any discussion over it. If there is any objection to it, I will withdraw it. I will state very briefly what it means. It is to strike out the proviso commencing with the words "Provided, however," in line 15, page 4 of the bill, down to and including line 20, and insert:

Provided, however, That where a pension has been granted to a soldier's or sailor's helpless or idiotic child or children, or child or children under the age of 16 years, his widow shall not be entitled to pension under this section unless the pension to such child or children has terminated or unless such child or children be a member or members of her family and cared for by her, and upon allowance of pension to the widow payment of pension to such child or children shall cease.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think that is all right.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to say that it takes care of the widows of Confederate soldiers who afterwards served in the Union Army.

Mr. CHILTON. Does the Senator's amendment strike out lines 15 to 20, inclusive, and insert that which follows?

Mr. SMOOT. It strikes out those lines and inserts that which I have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. What has become of the amendment to section 3?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is reserved for a vote in the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. It is reserved for action in the Senate.

Mr. NELSON. Very well.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in all the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole except the amendment to section 3, which was reserved.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask that the Senate disagree to the amendment in section 3, on lines 10 and 11 of page 4.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator allow the Chair to put the question on concurring in the other amendments made as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee proposed, on page 4, lines 10 and 11, to strike out the words "June 27, 1905," and to insert the words "the passage of this act."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I only want to say that a number of us agreed to help to get this bill through as it was written in the House at that place, and think it only fair it should go through in that way. I hope the amendment will be rejected.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. THOMPSON. I should like to move, on page 2, line 9, before the word "years," to strike out "seventy" and insert "sixty-five."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I trust that that amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is another change proposed from the bill that we all agreed to help through, and I think the amendment ought to be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I will take just a minute. I think it was in the Sixty-second Congress that I introduced a bill providing a pension of $24 a month for widows who were the wives of soldiers during the war. I believed then, and I still believe, that those women ought to have some recognition in their own right. They suffered as much, if not more, than any man who was at the front. That bill was favorably reported at $20 a month. I have been pressing it ever since, and I am glad that in this bill those widows receive recognition; that there is granted a pension to those widows, regardless of their age, if they were the wives of soldiers during the war. Of course I suppose there are hardly any of them who are not now 70 years of age; but it is a sort of a statutory recognition, at any rate, of these women, and I am glad to support the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

TRADE WITH CHINA.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I introduce a joint resolution and ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 174) providing for an American Congressional Commission for the investigation of commercial trade opportunities in China and the establishment of direct trade relations between China and the United States of America was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas it is apparent that the markets of the world are undergoing and will continue to undergo reorganization as the result of changed conditions caused by the European war; and

Whereas it is necessary to broaden and extend the markets for American products to the end that with the close of the war the largest possible demand for American products should exist throughout the world; and

Whereas there are great possibilities and opportunities for enlargement of trade with China, and especially for such enlargement as a result of direct trade relations between China and the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That a commission, to be known as the American Congressional Chinese Commercial Commission, composed of four Senators and five Members of the House of Representatives, shall be named by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to investigate and study the opportunities and inducements for enlarged commercial trade with China and the development to the fullest extent of direct trade relations between that country and the United States of America; and be it

Resolved further, That the President is requested to name five citizens of the United States selected from those interested in trade development with China, who shall also be members of said commission, all the members of the commission to serve without compensation; and

Resolved further, That the said commission shall visit, as soon as practicable, the Republic of China, its principal commercial and manufacturing cities, as well as its agricultural districts, and the President is authorized to furnish a vessel of the United States for the use of the commission in making the trip; and the said commission shall submit a report to the Congress as early as practicable, giving the result of the investigations and such recommendations as it may see fit to make.

THREATENED STRIKE OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES (S. DOC. NO. 549).

Mr. NEWLANDS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 267), which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the hearing entitled "Threatened strike of railway employees" before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce be printed as a Senate document, and that 9,000 additional copies be printed, of which 4,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate document room and 5,000 copies for the use of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. FLETCHER subsequently, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the foregoing resolution, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

NATIONAL PARK IN INDIANA.

Mr. TAGGART. I submit a resolution which has for its object the investigation of the practicability of converting three sand-dune counties in the State of Indiana into a national park. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the resolution require an appropriation?

Mr. TAGGART. No appropriation is involved.

The resolution (S. Res. 268) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to investigate and report to Congress at its next session the advisability of the securing, by purchase or otherwise, all that portion of the counties of Lake, Laporte, and Porter, in the State of Indiana, bordering upon Lake Michigan and commonly known as the "Sand Dunes," with a view that such lands be created a national park.

That the said Secretary shall also report the cost of acquiring such lands and the probable expense of maintaining them as a part of the national-park system.

FEDERAL AID ROAD ACT (S. DOC. NO. 548).

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I desire to have printed as a public document the Federal aid road act of July 11, 1916, together with a summary of the rules and regulations relating thereto; and also an article by the Secretary of Agriculture on the Government and good roads. I ask that the matter be referred to the Committee on Printing, with a view to having it printed as a public document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter will be referred to the Committee on Printing for action.

Mr. FLETCHER subsequently, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 270), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

David F. Houston, be printed as a Senate document.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

W. J. FIELDS,

The report was agreed to.

WYANDOTTE INDIAN CEMETERY.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask the Senator from Oklahoma if he will not yield one moment for a little local bill for the preservation of the cemetery of the Wyandotte Indians in Kansas City, Kans.? It is right in the midst of the city and is not being taken care of. The bill has been favorably recommended, has been passed by the House, and has been favorably reported by my colleague [Mr. CURTIS] from the Committee on Indian Affairs. It provides for $10,000 to take care of the grounds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is entitled to recognition upon the unfinished business.

Mr. OWEN. I have no objection to withholding the matter for a moment.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am sure there will be no objection to it. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10089) making appropriation for the preservation, improvement, and perpetual care of Huron Cemetery, a burial place of the Wyandotte Indians in the city of Kansas City, Kans.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the preservation and improvement of Huron Cemetery, a tract of land in the city of Kansas City, Kans., owned by the Government of the United States, the use of which was conveyed by treaty to the Wyandotte Tribe of Indians as a cemetery for the members of said tribe: Provided, That the authorities of Kansas City, Kans., will construct and maintain all necessary retaining or outside walls along all the boundaries of said cemetery abutting on streets.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC AUCTIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JAMES. I ask the Senator from Oklahoma to yield to me that I may ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 14824) to prevent fraud at public auctions in the District of Columbia. The bill has passed the House of Representatives and has been favorably reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia. It is to prevent fake auctions in the District of Columbia, and I do not think there will be the slightest objection to its consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope consent will be given. It is an important matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. OWEN. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter, excepting sales made under authority of law, it shall be unlawful in the District of Columbia for any person, firm, or corporation, either for himself or itself, or for another or for any firm, or corporation to sell or offer to sell at public auction any stock or stocks of merchandise, in whole or in part, without first obtaining from the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia a written or printed permit so to do; and the said Board of Commissioners shall not issue a permit for any such sale or sales until they are satisfied that neither fraud nor deception of any kind is contemplated or will be practiced, and that neither the sale, the reasons therefor nor the goods to be sold have not already been or will not thereafter be fraudulently or falsely advertised or in any wise whatsoever misrepresented.

SEC. 2. That every such permit shall be issued for a definite period of time not exceeding 12 months from its date of issue, and the date and hour of its expiration shall be stated in the permit, and before such permit shall be issued the applicant therefor shall pay to the District of Columbia, through its collector of taxes, such fee as the said Board of Commissioners may deem sufficient to reimburse the District of Columbia for the work and expense of issuing the permit and gathering information concerning the applicant and his goods as the said board may deem prudent and best for the protection of the public, but which fee shall not exceed the sum of $50. The application for the said permit shall be by verified petition, stating the name of the applicant, residence, street, and number of the proposed place of selling, and shall set forth in detail the goods to be sold and what statements or representations are to be made or advertised as to the same, and the length of time for which the permit is desired; and, if previously engaged in a like or similar business, to designate all the places where the same was conducted, and shall furnish to said commissioners such further evidence as shall be deemed necessary to establish the truth of the statements made in the said petition.

SEC. 3. That no permit as herein provided for shall be required for the sale of any wagon, carriage, automobile, mechanics' tools, used farming implements, live stock, including game, poultry (dressed or undressed), vegetables, fruits, melons, berries, flowers, or for the sale of used household furniture and effects when being sold at the residence of the housekeeper selling them.

SEC. 4. That the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby vested with authority to temporarily suspend the operation of the license herein provided for whenever they may believe that this act or any part thereof, or regulations made in pursuance thereof, are about to be or are being violated, and they shall thereupon forthwith institute the appropriate proceeding in the police court in accordance with this act, and in the event that the said violation results in a conviction, then and in that event the license shall be and become null and void, but in the event that the said proceeding shall terminate in favor of the defendant, then and in that event the suspension of said license shall be at an end, and the license shall thereupon be restored and be in full force and effect.

SEC. 5. That no person as herein provided for shall sell at public auction, from the 1st day of April until the 30th day of September, both inclusive, between the hours of 7 o'clock in the evening and 8 o'clock the following morning, nor from the 1st day of October until the 30th day of March, both inclusive, between the hours of 6 o'clock in the evening and 8 o'clock in the morning, any jewelry, diamond, or other precious stone, watch, gold and silver ware, gold and silver plated ware, statuary, porcelains, bric-a-brac, or articles of virtu.

SEC. 6. That any person selling or offering for sale any property under the provisions of this act shall, in describing the same, be truthful with respect to the character, quality, kind, and description of the same and which, for the purpose hereof, shall be considered as warranties, and any breach of the same shall be punishable by prosecution in the police court, as hereinbefore set forth.

SEC. 7. That all prosecutions under this act shall be in the police court of the District of Columbia upon information by the corporation counsel or one of his assistants. Any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $200 or imprisonment of not more than 60 days or both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 8. That nothing herein shall be construed to excuse or release any person, firm, or corporation, or property from the payment of any occupational or property tax, or any other tax imposed or levied by law. Neither shall anything herein be construed to obviate the application of any fraudulent or false advertisement statute of the District of Columbia to any person who may violate the same; nor shall anything herein be construed to prevent any prosecution for fraud, deceit, or larceny by trick; nor to in any way estop or hinder any remedy at law or in equity, or the right to cancel or estop any unconscionable bargain or fraudulent transaction.

SEC. 9. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SCHOOL LANDS IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Oklahoma be kind enough to yield a moment to allow me to have passed a bill to deed certain land in the White Earth Reservation to the village for school purposes? It is to give them a deed for a schoolhouse site on the White Earth Reservation. It will not take a moment.

Mr. OWEN. I shall not object.

Mr. NELSON. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14533) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee simple to the district school board No. 112, of White Earth Village, Becker County, Minn., for a certain tract of land upon payment therefor to the United States in trust for the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota.

Mr. OWEN. I shall not object.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue to the district school board No. 112, of White Earth Village, Becker County, Minn., a patent for the east half of the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 22, in township 142 north, range 41 west, of the fifth principal meridian in the State of Minnesota or such part thereof as the said district school board may select, upon payment by them to the United States in trust for the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota of the appraised value of said land.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND AT NEWELL, S. DAK.

Mr. STERLING. I wonder if the Senator from Oklahoma will yield to me long enough to call up a local bill?

Mr. OWEN. I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. STERLING. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12889) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell the unsold and unappropriated portions of lands within the town site of Newell, S. Dak., and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to reserve and set apart such portions of the unsold and unappropriated lands within the town site of Newell, Butte County, S. Dak., as he deems necessary for administrative purposes in connection with the Belle Fourche irrigation project, and after subdividing the remaining portions of such lands into tracts that in his judgment would render the same most salable, and, appraising the reasonable value of each such tracts, sell the same, for not less than the appraised value, at public auction to the highest bidder, on such terms and under such rules and regulations as he may establish.

SEC. 2. That of the proceeds of such sales, after deducting all expenses incurred in the subdivision, appraisement, and sale of said land, an amount not exceeding $15,000 shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States in a special fund available only for expenditure by the Secretary of the Interior to provide or assist in providing the said town of Newell, Butte County, S. Dak., an adequate system of water supply for domestic purposes, under such terms and conditions as may be provided by the Secretary of the Interior, or for such other and further public improvements as the Secretary of the Interior and the municipal authorities of said town may agree upon. The net proceeds of such sale in excess of $15,000, if any there be, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States and credited to the reclamation fund in accordance with existing law for the sale of town sites on reclamation projects.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for carrying into effect the provisions of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL INFORMATION.

Mr. PHELAN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate resolution 258.

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from California for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the resolution has been referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PHELAN. I ask that the Committee on Naval Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The resolution was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish the following information to the Senate:

First. The number of midshipmen now authorized by law.

Second. The number of midshipmen now enrolled at the Annapolis Naval Academy.

Third. The number of midshipmen who shall attend the academy during the next academic year.

Fourth. The capacity of the academy and how and by what methods of crowding or otherwise can it be made to meet the present and future demands.

Fifth. What plan of expansion will best promote the health, comfort, and efficiency of the students.

Sixth. In case the number of students exceeds the capacity of the academy and any reasonable expansion thereof, is there any reason affecting the efficiency of the service why officers for the Navy should not be educated in another naval academy in some other part of the country?

JAMES L. YOKUM.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask the Senator from Oklahoma to allow me to call up a little bill which will not take a minute.

Mr. OWEN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2208) for the relief of James L. Yokum. The bill has been reported from the Committee on Claims and authorizes the payment of $1,000 as a reward for the arrest of a mail robber.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $1,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay James

L. Yokum, a citizen of Red Bluff, Tehama County, in the State of California, reward for the arrest of mail-train robber on the night of November 8, 1912.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OREGON WARM SPRINGS RESERVATION.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5916) authorizing an investigation to determine the true north and west boundaries of the Warm Springs Reservation in Oregon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. OWEN. I will yield for the consideration of the bill, if it occasions no debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill named by the Senator from Oregon?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5916) authorizing an investigation to determine the true north and west boundaries of the Warm Springs Reservation in Oregon. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to investigate and report to Congress his conclusions on the merits of the claim of the Indians of the Warm Springs Reservation in Oregon to additional land arising from alleged erroneous surveys of the north and west boundaries of their reservation as defined in the treaty concluded June 25, 1855 (12 Stats. L., p. 963), and appropriates $100,000 for the purpose of conducting the investigation and $10,000 to make such surveys or resurveys as may be necessary for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR PENSIONS.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me to give a notice? I shall not intrude on his time, for he has been very gracious.

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Illinois for that purpose.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to give notice that at the conclusion of the pending measure, known as the corrupt practices act, I shall move to take up what is known as the Key bill, from the House of Representatives, providing for pensions to widows and minor children of the Spanish-American War soldiers. It is Order of Business 265, being the bill (H. R. 54) to pension widows and minor children of officers and enlisted men who served in the War with Spain, Philippine Insurrection, or in China. I desire to give notice now that I shall make the motion to take up that bill and to have it considered immediately following the measure of which the Senator from Oklahoma is now sponsor.

JOHN E. KEYS.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me to call up a small bill? It will not lead to debate.

Mr. OWEN. If the bill will lead to no debate, I will yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to say that the claimant is suffering for want of the money for the payment of which the bill provides. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1963) for the relief of John E. Keys.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay $602 to John E. Keys, for injuries received during the construction of the Corbett Tunnel on the Shoshone reclamation project in Wyoming.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NONCONTIGUOUS HOMESTEAD ENTRIES IN MONTANA.

Mr. MYERS and Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] has the floor. Does he yield, and to whom?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I desire to ask for the present consideration of Senate bill 5611, which, I suppose, will lead to no debate. It proposes to extend to settlers on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation in Montana the right to take up noncontiguous lands on enlarged homesteads. A similar privilege has been extended everywhere else in the United States.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5611) providing for noncontiguous homestead entries within the former Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., of land of the character described in the enlarged-homestead act of February 19, 1909.

It proposes to permit any person who has made or shall make homestead entry subject to the provisions of the act approved May 30, 1908 (35 Stat., p. 558), entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana," etc., of land of the character provided by the enlarged-homestead act approved February 19, 1909 (35 Stat., p. 639), and who is unable, because there is no vacant land of like character contiguous to his original entry, to enter additional land, to make an additional entry, also subject to the act of May 30, 1908, of noncontiguous land of the character described in the enlarged-homestead act, above cited, which shall not, together with the original entry, exceed 320 acres; such additional entry to be in reasonably compact form and subject to the general provisions of the homestead laws relating to improvements, cultivation, and final proof; but the land originally entered and that covered by the additional entry shall have first been designated under the enlarged-homestead act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL JUDICIAL DISTRICT IN TEXAS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 5450.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor, having charge of the unfinished business.

Mr. OWEN. I ask the Senator from Texas whether the bill for which he desires consideration will lead to any debate?

Mr. CULBERSON. I hope not.

Mr. OWEN. If it does not, I will yield to the Senator for its consideration.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I have named.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JONES. What does the bill propose to do?

Mr. NELSON. The bill simply proposes to add another judicial district in the State of Texas.

Mr. JONES. Does it provide for the appointment of an additional judge?

Mr. NELSON. It provides for an additional judge for the additional district. The Committee on the Judiciary unanimously reported in favor of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5450) to amend section 108, chapter 5, of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 7, line 14, after the name "Burnet," to insert "Caldwell," so as to read:

The central district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of January, 1916, in the counties of Bastrop, Blanco, Burleson, Burnet, Caldwell, Hays, Lampasas, Lee, Llano, Mason, Travis, Washington, and Williamson, which shall constitute the Austin division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Bell, Bosque, Coryell, Falls, Hamilton, Freestone, Hill, Leon, Limestone, McLennan, Milam, Robertson, and Somervell, which shall constitute the Waco division.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARTICLES BY MAXIMILIAN HARDEN.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me for just a second?

Mr. OWEN. If the purpose for which the Senator from New Jersey desires me to yield leads to no debate, I shall yield.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD two articles from the New York Times.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The articles referred to are as follows:

[From the New York Times, May 28, 1916.]

FULL TEXT OF THE EXTRAORDINARY ARTICLE BY MAXIMILIAN HARDEN, "IF I WERE WILSON" "LISTEN, MANKIND, TO THE MESSAGE OF A MAN!"

Maximilian Harden, author of the remarkable article printed below, has been known for years as the most famous and feared of European publicists. He first leaped into prominence when he denounced the "Round Table" scandals in 1907, involving close friends of the Kaiser, and since then it has been said that his fame in Germany is second only to that of the Emperor himself. Harden's writings on the present war have attracted world-wide attention.

The article printed below, one of the most striking utterances of the war, occupied the entire April 22 issue of Die Zukunft, Harden's paper. He called it "If I were Wilson," and it is written in the form of an imaginary address by President Wilson to the German Government. Up to now only small excerpts have been cabled across the ocean. The New York Times has obtained the full text, and it is printed here for the first time in America.

It is significant that the publication of the article was permitted by the German Government at a time when the submarine controversy between the United States and Germany was acute.

(By Maximilian Harden.)

[President Wilson is supposed to be speaking throughout the article, addressing himself to the German Government.]

1. WAR.

The son of Nun, whom you may call Joshua, Jeshua, or Jesus, and who, as the head of the tribe of Ephraim, after the death of the great Moses became ruler over Israel, the brain and sword of his people, led the multitude, which by the grace of God had been redeemed from the dominion of the heathen, dry foot over Jordan, by the power of a breath, blown from their trumpets of rams' horns by his seven priests, threw down on the seventh day the Walls of Jericho; he also conquered and burned the town of Ai, and from the fortified camp of Gilgal stretched out his arm far over the Promised Land. He defeated five kings, those of Eglon and Hebron, of Jarmuth and of Lachish, and also the Amorite of Jerusalem, and he commanded the leaders of his men of war to place their foot on the necks of the five. "So," said he, "shall it be done to all the enemies who fight against us." He had the kings killed and hanged upon five trees. There they hung till the going down of the sun. Then did Joshua order that they should be cut down and thrown into the cave in which they had hidden themselves from him, and he had great stones rolled to the mouth of the cave.

The sun, which brought this miraculous victory, and another also beyond Makkedah, stood longer in the heavens than ever before. For when the Lord, to help his chosen people in their sore struggle, lashed the Amorites with hail, Joshua in holy wrath cried aloud to the bright firmament, "Sun, stand still upon Gibeon and thou moon in the Valley of Ajelon!" And the stars stood still until Israel was revenged upon its enemies. In the middle of the heavens flamed the sun almost the whole day long, and no day was ever like this day, when the light of the world obeyed a human voice.

TURNING BACK HANDS OF THE CLOCK.

A thing which in that distant time, without the help of experience and knowledge, was the work of a day could now be completed in an hour. And at this very moment there have come to us the tidings that the nations which are fighting on the other side of our Atlantic wish, in order that they might be more certain of their vengeance upon their enemies, to lengthen their day by an hour of the sun. Joshua is now a high official, a member of the Paris Chamber of Deputies, and he has won for his proposal not only his homeland, but also the German Empire, now thrusting far into the countryside of France. In both countries, and therefore we may assume in all the lands of western Europe ringed by the conflagration of war, the clock is to be put back an hour, the light of day to be lengthened for every worker by 60 minutes.

Here it need not trouble us that the object of the idea is economy, the reduction of lighting expenditure by millions and millions of francs, the increase of the possibilities of work. We seen men and women, whom we recognize as our parents or love as our brothers and sisters, strike out an hour from their life, offer a portion of time, whose every minute might be charged with happiness, on the altar of their hatred.

Joshua, to make full use of his victory, requires a double day, an extension of brightness for he is without the means of illuminating night, giving her an eye between her beclouded brow and flaccid cheeks. That can the warriors do now; but since their will in its money vesture already discerns the warning signs of weariness, and fear that sleep may come upon them, they filch an hour from the night lest indolence make them rest too long and money vesture become threadbare too soon. Rage will not content itself with the old measures of time. The descendants of Jesus of Gibeon, in their steel panoply, have forgotten the warning which came to their ancestors when Jesus of Nazareth hung upon the cross; have forgotten that an unwonted darkness hung over the earth when Jerusalem and Rome, the strongest of the great powers—spirit of force, mind, and will—joined for the destruction of the finest flower of humanity.

Do they in their shortsightedness imagine that by a prefect's edict, by the decree of an official girt with the sword, they could append an addition onto the day, to the will power of raging humanity? Has the memory of Europe become so darkened that it does not see how the kingdom which was won by Joshua and the later leaders of Israel's army came to nothingness? Then let our voice recall the wearied madmen to reason. Because the Continent, which, since the birth of Veda and the Holy Scriptures (of the Old and New Covenant), since the death of the Buddha and the Christ, has produced the richest fruits of the spirit, is tired, the attempt may succeed. Because the message sounds forth in the atmosphere of holy week, steeped in thoughts of crucifixion and resurrection, it finds the spirit of man in a favorable mood. Hear, mankind, the message of a man!

A MESSAGE THAT WILL BRING PEACE.

This message goes to the Congress of the United States of America, and at the same time to all kingdoms, all nations of Europe, belligerent and neutral. It will utter that which is; from the sum of that which has been made possible in one and twenty months it will complete that which is necessary and show the way to secure it; that is, it will bring peace.

It is not from the assumption of a right which does not belong to me that this determination has come. Did another mouth speak, I would gladly be silent. But who will relieve me of this heavy burden? Thirteen nations are in the turmoil of war. The neighboring neutral States, even if united, weigh too light to draw down the scales. The pope, whose spiritual army no one but a fool would underestimate, is without physically effectual, physically tangible power, and as the head of the church, whose adherents swarm in both camps, his will to action is paralyzed. Brightness will not penetrate into the thicket from a light which is fading, but only from the glow of a young power which has not yet reached the pinnacle of its capacity for growth.

For the hundred thousand seeds and germs which the spirit and industry of Europe have sown on our ground our gratitude is due. And we would have shown true gratitude if Europe had been saved by our counsel. But our counsel can only be of use if it comes from the passionate desire for justice and speaks with the tongue of scrupulous honesty. Painful truth must be spoken, but none shall be offended. Europe has blundered into this war as a child who, deceived by the thin ice, falls into the running water. Does it not need a powerful arm to lift it out of the stream, and duty's call to us to stretch out this arm is louder in proportion as the danger comes nearer that the stream of fate will entice us also into its eddy.

We are still neutral, not only without bias, but also without the prejudice which shoots up like a clinging weed from the consciousness of the unity of the race. He who has considered our people finds in their form and feature the mark of every race of the ancient world; the mark of the Briton, of the Roman, of the Celt, of the German, of the Scandinavian, and the Iberian. He whose vision has penetrated below the surface and has learned not to be astonished that he sat on Thursday by a Spaniard and on Friday by a Scotchwoman, both of whom had been conceived and born in America from Americans, will also find in the recesses of our being the theories and ideals of all nations, often thrown together in wild confusion. We who gladly would be ancestors are descendants. Notwithstanding the foolish caricatures painted by jealousy we are no more intent on gain and on money than other active and busy nations; it is only because, in the words of the German poet, we have no useless memories and ruined castles that we are more disposed than the guardians of such hordes to see in possession the creator, or at least the measure, of value.

Could it be otherwise in a land where we have neither princely power nor feudal retainers, neither warrior caste nor noble birth, but where the quick brain of the rascal who used to cry out papers wet from the press has built palaces for children and changed heaps of refuse into gardens which might delight the lord of Versailles? Far be from us ever the childish whim of desiring to change Europe into our image. Far, too, the presumptuous desire, in the insolence of an irreverent energy, of interfering in the fate of a continent which for us long has given laws to the earth, contents and form to the history of mankind.

The demesne which we rule and where we may gather in our harvest lies between Cape Lincoln and Cape Horn; and in it there is room for all the people to be born to our children and our children's children. But the weal and the woe of both worlds are so closely knitted together by the network of nerves that complete separation is scarcely thinkable. The decay of the one can no longer be imagined without a profound weakening of the other. If you grow poorer, we seem richer; but still we should have to mourn a fountain and a market, the richest mine of intellect and our best customer. The longing for beauty and selfishness wed one another; and from their union springs the wish that health, which the Logosman calls reason, may return to you.

And over his cradle bends pride, and demands at last in clear and unmistakable words the undiminished maintenance of our rights. Too long have they been treated with disregard; the disregard we have entered in our ledger, we have not requited with arms as a coarse insult. We are a strong and free people which can not continue to live unless we enjoy self-esteem; and we are the leader and voice of all the nations which have not yet been forced into your war. The United States, not only of America North and South, but of the white world, wish for speedy peace. For they can no longer look on inactive, can not again and again dawdle through the months in discussion with this or that camp, and exchange their own counters with those of strangers in the play of words. For they would here place themselves in the bloody ranks and join in the conduct of the war, if they are not, by suffering the war to continue, to see honor and wealth decay away. This is felt by the most sober; but they do not venture to speak it openly. We must be peacemakers, or, in our own way, join in the fray. And the hour which demands the decision has struck. Set your European clock as you will, extend or shorten the day, let yourselves be lulled to sleep by coxcombs and rogues with the fable of our impotence, our empty boasting which will yield before the sword; there is no steel that will cut away this hour from the body of your fate.

We are still neutral. In Europe this is violently contested in both camps. In both camps, by means of insulting articles and caricatures, which even one who is free from pedantry and prudery and is a genuine friend of vigorous satire can only look at with disgust; attempts are made to lower in public opinion the President of the United States as a ludicrous and contemptible fool. Much greater men have borne in silence similar insults for decades. And from the morass of this pitiful wit, which greedily angles for the applause of the mob, I look to the word of the German who was unapproached in purity of will, in intellectual courage, in power of decision and manly courtesy. He whose work has become the New Testament of all statesmanship: "The honor which I bear in my own heart suffices for me, and no man is judge of it, and can decide whether I have it. My honor before God and men is my possession; I award myself so much of it as I think I have deserved, and renounce all addition."

MUST BE GUIDED BY MY CONSCIENCE.

Millions of my fellow citizens have intrusted to me the conduct of the affairs of state. Had they wished to lay this office in the hands of a man in whom the unrestrained rashness of a Cavalry colonel or of a submarine commander weakens all reflection, they would not have chosen a man of learning. As my conscience bids me, in that way alone can I administer my high office; not to blind men by my impetuosity, not to hasten on decisions without a firm and secure foundation of facts. Nine-tenths at least of our citizens wish to live in peace and friendship with all nations, especially with those of Europe; this wish must be my guide so long as the honor or a vital interest of our country does not rise up against it. Has the growing wrath of popular feeling at last cut asunder the tightened thread?

The western powers accuse us of weakly tolerating German breaches of international law, and mock at us because we answer the killing of American citizens in courteous notes, and allow ourselves to be delayed by promises of information and other excuses. In their opinion, we should have defended the neutrality of Belgium, of which we are joint guarantors, and guarded the dearly bought blessings of civilization with a loud and warning voice, and, if necessary, with the sword. Germany and Austria-Hungary scold us because arms and ammunition are delivered to their enemies from American factories, and because we put hindrances in the way of their conduct of the war, as they believe, without any justification; because we "meddle in things which do not concern us" (this more or less is their formula). Double accusation of this kind is the lot of all who attempt to maintain impartial justice. In the long duration of the war the Government of the United States has not taken the smallest step which a clear head could interpret as offense not even as the faintest offense against the obligations of neutrality. Great Britain is carrying on an industrial war against Germany, prevents the importation of provisions, and says:

"This form of warfare is not only permitted and has been customary from olden times up to the present against beleaguered towns and countries, but it is also the most tolerable kind of warfare according to the feelings of our days. We live on an island; we are not a nation of land warriors; we desire disputes between States to be settled by arbitration; and we can not overcome a wild animal madly running against us with the sword, but only by exhaustion. If his means of life disappear his madness will yield to the reasonable consideration of realities. Whoever contrasts our action with a 'chivalrous passage of arms' and calls it infamous is either blind or a liar. Present-day warfare, which allows siege shells of the most monstrous caliber to descend on men like hail, which works with floating mines, asphyxiating gas, liquid fire, explosives and poison, with deceit and treachery of every kind—such war has absolutely nothing in common with knightly warfare, not even with the wars of the nineteenth century, which were confined to infantry, cavalry, and field guns. To burn out the enemy's eyes or lungs, to bombard unfortified towns and villages from the air, from the depth of the water to rip the bellies of defenseless ships carrying men or goods, to kill or maim women or children, old men and sick people with air bombs or torpedoes—is this more chivalrous than our attempt to cut off from the enemy the opportunity of buying and selling and so compel him to cease his shell fire? To bombard his coast towns would not be more humane and would be useless, since naval guns are of no avail against strong coast defenses. Our blockade is 'effective,' it has the 'effect' that the German flag has disappeared from the seas and that no ship passes through the North Sea or the Channel without our permission. This fact has been done away by the bold strokes of certain stout fellows, such as every corsair period has known and preserved in literature. And the ineffectiveness of a blockade is not proved because a bold patrol gets through a gap and perhaps even manages to get back. On the sea by disguises and deceptive flags this has become the easier in that the thought of German ships now comes less into men's minds. And again we ask, is the attempt to approach a merchantman, your vessel disguised with artificial funnel and painted sides and a false flag, and under threat of firing to take off its crew and goods and then sink it—is this more chivalrous than our bloodless economic warfare? The only aim Germany had in building her fleet—she disclaims any intention of attacking us—was to break through such a barrier, with the possibility of which she has always reckoned. Her task, like that of any blockaded power, was to turn herself with all her might against the blockader, who has reached his aim and has no reason to trouble himself further, and, if she could, overcome him. This was what was promised by the creators of the fleet.

"The submarine warfare against defenseless merchant ships is not permitted by international law, and it contradicts the demand made from of old by civilized humanity that the fight of armed men against unarmed should be proscribed. Our decision, forced upon us by bitter experience, of arming merchant ships, in no way justifies this war. A merchant ship will only attack a submarine if there is no doubt about the latter's intention to attack; otherwise fear of a superior weapon is sufficient check. We determined to arm merchant ships when many of our merchantmen had been destroyed by submarines. If in a street many inhabitants of a certain house have been killed in the dark, and the survivors, in consequence, only go out armed with a revolver, may the concealed murderers say that it was within their rights to shoot down these armed men because they were capable of attacking?"

That they may not. And we Americans who, in spite of or because of our relationship, are always on the lookout against English arrogance—we find at most in England's statement of the case the idea of an "effective blockade" unsatisfactory. But we have much more to complain of in England's action. That she cuts off our trade with Europe and asserts her right of search and seizure is an offense we might have punished long ago if Germany had not been doing us a wrong that affects us far more deeply, for almost a year, by the murder of American citizens. The sorrow of the widowed, of the orphaned, of mourning parents, cries more loudly to heaven than the loss of merchantmen. And yet the manner in which England uses her blockading power is irreconcilable with international law.

THE LAW OF NATIONS NOT INVALIDATED.

This law is not a feeble conception of letters, it was not intended for the time when the nations were living at peace among themselves, and it is not invalidated by the discovery of new means of warfare. "In the time of war the laws are silent, but only those of trade and those which might be followed in peace by foreign courts of justice; not the eternal laws, valid for every age. The possibility of suffering outrage never gives a State the right to use outrage itself." These sentences of the Dutchman, Hugo Grotius, are pillars on which our conviction rests firm. We share no guilt for the outbreak of the war, and we can get nothing out of it. We put up with the fact that under its reign of terror our exports and imports are shrinking; we can not endure that they should be altogether arrested, that our cotton market should be laid desolate, our agriculture deprived of potash, and our textile manufactures arbitrarily deprived of coal-tar dyes. Still less, that deadly peril should be prepared by act of men for our citizens on roads which they have a right to use. Such roads are the great waterways between continents. To cut off principal portions of such roads by a bare one-sided proclamation and call them "war areas," and to rob and kill anyone who ventures in them, is not permitted anyone either by the letter or by the spirit of any international law. It is a legal fiction, a legal pretension, to which we will not bow, and which we may the less expect, in that we have generously given up hitherto to European bands our whole trade with Europe, which supports in opulence a dozen merchant fleets and gives life to tens of thousands of employees, contractors, and actionaries.

Because England is not to receive corn, meat, textile fabrics, copper, steel, explosives, petroleum, and fat, and England's enemy has no means allowed by international law, no means by which she is able to give a warning recognizable at a distance, of cutting off the importation of these goods, because of this fact, is it permitted to a crawler along the bottom of the sea to destroy every ship suspected of carrying such goods, together with crew and its passengers? It would be just as incoherent a law which would allow it to be announced to our world to-morrow that Spain was to be considered as a war area because France was able to get goods from her, or that Sweden was to be considered such because Russia could get goods from her, and permitted German airships to throw bombs on every railway train which they could see in these countries because everyone is under suspicion of supplying essential materials for French and Russian economic or even military needs.

The submarine war does not violate any of the sovereign rights of any State; but day by day it violates the rights of men and nations. It can not but violate them if it is not confined to warships. For since a usage, unfortunately still valid, allows the carrying of false flags, every ship sailing under a neutral flag may possible be the property of the enemy; whether a merchantman has two or three guns can not be recognized from a submarine; and the mines which these boats strew in the sea do not ask whether it is an enemy or a neutral ship which they blow to atoms; for this reason the promise of protecting neutral and unarmed ships, of warning them, or calling to them, or saving crew and passengers before firing into them, is one which with the best will in the world can not be kept.

CRUX OF THE DISPUTE WITH GERMANY.

Nevertheless, since the horrible end of the Lusitania—the anniversary of which is just approaching—the German-American dispute has turned round this question. It has been doubly envenomed. Many factories of our States have provided the British, French, and the Russians with guns, shells, and war material of every kind. They had a right to do this; and it was not their fault that Germany, whose custom would have been equally welcome to them, was unable to buy anything from them on account of the blockade. In all wars of modern times German industry, in spite of the empire's neutrality, has supplied one party, often both parties, with arms and munitions; if she had not done this—so said the Berlin Government—her industrial capabilities must have shown a swift decline. What was allowed to her to an unlimited extent can not be prohibted to the industry of America. The statistics as to material delivered have been enormously exaggerated, and everything produced in South America and in the English colony of Canada has been reckoned to us as well. The entirely private contracting business, the extent of which is scarcely worth talking about, could only have been prevented by the State by means of an export prohibition. I have declined to demand this from Congress; and not merely because I was certain that Congress would refuse it. We do not desire that any State should be compelled to accumulate arms in the time of peace; for this very accumulation is a temptation to settle any dispute by war. We do not desire that a power armed to the teeth should be in a position to impose its will on a badly armed one to which neutral countries close their sources of supply; for we earnestly hope to see an extension of arbitration and an organized peace, not industriously and artificially organized force.

We do not desire a condition of law which, should we be compelled to go to war, must prevent us from buying weapons from neutral countries—weapons which we peaceful farmers, traders, professors, and artists lack. For a hundred years England has not been prepared for a land war of European dimensions; to have left her without arms in the difficult opening stages of a struggle which had no increase of territory for its aim would have gone, we felt, against the nature of the free, peaceful America, nay, against the spirit of modern humanity as well. The merchants, manufacturers, and administrators of the United States acted within their sure and incontestable rights. But their doing so drew upon them the bitter anger of the Germans, even of those who had been admitted as friends into our free States.

From their error arose the second element of poison. Many of them believed it their duty to avenge on their new home a wrong committed on their Fatherland, and to tear our State districts asunder. The proofs of such punishable behavior or of its encouragement lie in our archives. We had done no wrong to the German Empire, and we demand from each immigrant that he shall carefully respect the laws of the States. Why did he come here? Why, because at some time in his life the laws and the business prospects of our country seemed more favorable than his own. If he wished to remain in every fiber of his being a German or an Irishman, to plunge under all conditions into activities for his native land, he should have stayed at home and endured unfavorable conditions of life and cooperated for the improvement of the political and social system. To pick and choose all the tasty morsels from our country, and at the first storm to behave as a raging German or furious Irishman—that would be an intolerable piece of presumption. To give examples of what has happened would only stir up the flames which I would gladly see die down. For this reason I will only ask, Would Germany, during the Manchurian war, have allowed Japanese agents to work upon the Prussian Poles, to intimidate the German Empire into alienation from Russia by stirring up disturbances, by canvassing, by fiery speeches, by imperiling munition factories? And I would ask, too, Has not our legal contention been all through as good as the Germans'?

WARNING TO GERMAN PATRIOTS IN AMERICA.

I understand that to a nation fighting in peril of its life such cool reflection on real values is difficult, that under pressure of necessity it forgets how often it has itself supplied the enemies of its friends with arms and munitions. Yet I must demand from Germany that she shall break loose from any common action with injudicious patriots, however strongly her sympathies with them may be—for patriots who, as guests, or as admitted citizens of the United States, misuse the law of hospitality to undermine the civil peace; by which action they do not benefit the German Empire, they only greatly injure it. No serious man blames them for wishing this empire to gain the victory, for helping it by works of charity. But no man favorable to his Fatherland can allow them to hoist their three-colored flag over our star-spangled banner, to make our domestic political institutions an instrument in their campaign for Germanism and to append to their vote, which their second home has given them, the condition that the elected candidate shall pledge himself to help forward their German cause.

I am bound, secondly, to demand from Germany that she shall without circumlocution declare how she proposes henceforward to respect our national law and to protect the life and property of the American citizens. How she can protect; for the question whether there is to be friendship or hostility between two great nations certain of their future can no longer depend upon the eyelashes and nerves of a young submarine commander anxious to serve his Fatherland and cut his name in the German oak, and in whose ear conscience speaks only one command. Sink whatever can be laid hold of. Everyone must admire the bold cunning of such men. Their boats, however, have no surer position in international law than the corsair frigates which in the 20 years of the Anglo-French war, especially during the continental blockade against England, used to creep out secretly from the small harbors of Flanders, Normany, and Brittany and rob the Britons of 500 merchant ships every year. To-day, 100 years after the Napoleon frigate war, in spite of the conferences at The Hague (1907) and in London (1909), we have no valid international maritime law under the protection of an arbitrating authority with executive power. Yet the dictates of recognized morality, which, for example, does not give the right of sacrificing the lives of 10 strangers to save one's own child, and the experiences gained hitherto in submarine warfare, show the way to an understanding which would leave elbow room for both States.

Compromise would signify weakness on neither side; it would merely give expression to the honest wish to safeguard friendly intercourse between two nations which are not forced into hostility by any unsurmountable reason. The hope to frighten by threats a nation so brave and so strong as the German would be absurd and vain. Moreover, it is generally known in Germany, and it is also known to those responsible for her government, what would be the consequences of a rupture. Our whole continent north and south, would become hostile to Germany, and that not merely for the period of the war. Germany would lose all her ships lying in American ports, and would have to reckon them a considerable addition to enemy tonnage.

From the day of the rupture Germany would have to provision Belgium, which we are now supplying with foodstuffs. Holland and Scandinavia could hardly hope any longer for imports from overseas; for this reason they could not export any more goods, cattle, or grain, since by doing so they would be in danger of suffering scarcity themselves. It is for Germany only to examine, on the basis of what the Napoleonic blockade achieved and what the power of a league may be which America would join with her capital and economic resources, whether it would be wise to pay so high a price for the weakening of England through scarcity of food and tonnage. It is certain that the conclusion of the war would then be put far out of sight, because, even if badly weakened, the enemies of Germany could wait until our help made itself felt. And, further, from that moment we, too, should present at home an absolutely united front. The different extractions—German, Irish, Austrian, or Hungarian—would be at once forgotten, and every American would be wedded to the Stars and Stripes, and he who was yesterday disloyal at heart would to-morrow become a zealous, glowing patriot, as it has happened with Plechanoff, Guesde, and Legien.

We have not let our tongues run furiously about Belgium, because our purse had to secure her food, and this was possible only by an understanding with the German authorities. We have not taken exception to the procrastination in the dispute pending between Germany and ourselves, because in almost all cases facts could not be ascertained beyond dispute; further, because we were restrained by the wish to spare the world the horrors of an unrestrained submarine warfare, and spare the neutral States of western Europe the pain and misery which would be the effects of such a war; because the Berlin Government gave us the clear proofs of an honest will to reach an understanding, and did not hesitate to remove a vigorous statesman, highly esteemed by many, in order that in future only one tendency expressive of will should rule its policy; because we understand the enormous difficulty of her responsible action, and could not expect the second winter of war to give birth to the decision which is to be the goal of the spring of peace, viz, to put diplomacy above strategy and to establish firmly the higher authority of the council of statesmen over every irruption or interference of those brought up for the work of war.

2—PEACE.

If this higher authority was already secured, we would not have to-day a war which is the horror, and, in spite of all the virtues which it brings forth every day, the disgrace of the white race. Is it any good to dig for its roots once more in the soil washed by seas of blood and riddled by the worms feeding on corpses? All are guilty; the difference is only in the weight and time of their sins. This fact is not discerned by him whose eyes are darkened by his own guilt. It is hidden also from him who sees only what gave the last push and judges hastily, without following up or weighing the long chain of causes: "Germany abruptly refused the arbitration which was recommended by all the powers for the settlement of the Austro-Serbian dispute, and which was finally accepted by Austria-Hungary itself; she began the war, which, according to the undisputed testimony of San Giuliano and Giolitti, she had wanted as early as 1913; she wantonly violated the neutrality of Belgium, which originally she herself had demanded, carried through, and guaranteed, and after a rapid and devastating invasion, seized a powerful pledge in the shape of the industrial districts of France. She has, therefore, to be declared guilty without admission of any extenuating circumstances. This is the conclusion formed from a comparison of all the official documents."

FRENCH AND GERMAN AIMS CONTRASTED.

That this is the conclusion indeed has been proved a thousand times in all languages, even by the men of science with tempers of ice. Only they forgot to turn over the leaves of the book of the history which came before the month of July, 1914. France could not get over the loss of Sedan, Metz, and Strassburg; she did not set the loss to the account of the accursed Empire, nor did she decide on a new war, but she irritated, by continuous, sometimes noisy, threats of "revanche" the conqueror of 1870, who did not wish to take from her a single straw or a single stone more, and gladly allowed her to acquire the second biggest colonial empire, and she offered her alliance to anyone with the help of whose sword she could hope to reconquer Alsace and German Lorraine. The wire which unites France to the Russian Empire would have been made fast much earlier if Bismarck had not, even as an old man, climbed again and again untiringly the pole and broken the strands.

After 30 years of grace, Germany is no longer served by an unselfish genius, but she has acquired, through the unsurpassed and unsurpassable efficiency of her people, undreamed wealth, and has secured for herself an enormous share in the trade of the world. In all zones Germans make themselves snug and work diligently—more diligently than any of their competitors—for the capital and flag of their fatherland. Germany does not, unfortunately, remember that she can only win forgiveness for so rapid a rise, for so unexampled and flourishing success in every branch of activity, by a dignified and modest self-suppression; and she does not remember that the enemies at whose expense she has grown great are still alive, and some of them are still full of fight. She rattles the sword, and, in shining armor, she frequently allows to transpire the intention of enlarging her dominion. Instead of limiting herself to the defense of her coast, to the building of light cruisers and torpedo boats, Germany builds a battle fleet, of which the radius does not extend beyond the North Sea and the Channel, and which would yield a decent return for the milliards invested in it, only if after a successful war it broke at least one important prong from the Crown of Britannia. Great Britain feels that her trade and technical achievements have been surpassed; that her commerce, world trade, and her colonies are in danger; that her predominant position in the Islamic world, therefore also in Egypt and India, is threatened by competition; everywhere she has Germany pressing her hard.

GREAT BRITAIN SEES A VITAL THREAT.

Because Great Britain refuses to sit idle till some fine day she has to bow under the yoke of Germany's will, and because a mistrustful amour propre refuses any understanding concerning naval armaments, Great Britain has to relinquish her policy of splendid isolation and conclude an alliance with Germany's enemy. That enemy—France—was suddenly awakened from her indolent leaning to Socialism and her pacific content by the violent interference of Germany in her rights to Morocco (which Bismarck had acknowledged in 1880), and the common complaint at the disturbances of business, which knew no limits of time or place led her into an understanding with Great Britain. Tangier, Casablanca, Algeciras, Agadir—the jibers denoted by these names must not be overlooked by him who examines the roots of the war.

Germany asserts, all too zealously, her will to preserve peace; she increases, nevertheless, her military forces on land and on sea. Why, when no one wishes to deprive her of any piece of territory and no sword will be unsheathed for the sake of Alsace-Lorraine? Evidently to enlarge her frontiers. This can be guarded against only by firmly encircling her. Russia, driven out of eastern Asia by Japan at the order of Great Britain, fears the German militarization of Turkey, which Russia would fain deprive of Armenia and of the Straits, and bites at the bait, in hope of undoing, with the help of the strongest powers of western Europe, the work of Prussian generals in the Turkish Empire; of acquiring at least in the Balkan States, liberated by Russian blood, at least a religious and spiritual influence, and of expunging by the intimidation, or even the diminution of Austria-Hungary, the blot of the Manchurian defeats before the eyes of town society and mujiks, of Europeans, and of Asiatics. The wars in Tripoli, Albania, Macedonia, and Thrace are the results of the close alliances which had arisen over the Morocco dispute, and had for their aim to put southern eastern Europe under Slav and Latin guardianship in order to prevent its permeation by German power, culture, and trade.

Should this plan succeed, should Italy fix herself in the Adriatic flank of the Balkans, and Austria-Hungary be shut in between the Slavs (Russians and Serbs) and Latins (Italians and Rumanians), should her body be paralyzed by fragments of alien peoples which aim at reunion with their own nations, Germany would no longer be able to deliver a powerful blow. Her enemies do not wish for war; only because they are afraid of an attack and the attempt to establish an unbearable hegemony, do they try to contain the youngest great power of Europe within the frontiers which it had already acquired.

In view of her growth in population and wealth, of her spiritual and economic achievements, Germany can not accept them as final; and because she does not want to submit to a hostile will, because she does not want to let her most powerful weapon rust—the war to be carried on with technical means, and in accordance with the methods of big industry—because she does not want to miss the favorable moment for the fateful enterprise, she throws off all diplomatic mediation and whips out her sword against France and Russia. By this resolve, dictated, as she believes, by necessity, she exposes herself to the most dangerous misconstruction and forgets the warning word which the creator of the German Empire uttered in his most fruitful speech: "If we become aggressors, the whole weight of the imponderabilia, which weigh heavier than all material things, will be on the side of the antagonist whom we have assailed."

A preventive war, then? The classical case. Two groups of powers which do not trust each other across the street. France fears that she may be attacked and treated as a hostage, Russia that she may be cut off from an ice-free sea for another hundred years. England has bound herself to take no share in any aggressive war against Germany, but has not, as was desired in Berlin, promised her neutrality in any war "forced upon" the German Empire; for it could not but apprehend that any war provoked by aggressiveness would appear to be "forced upon" those suffering by it. Germany did not want to be boxed in, nor to give the right of arbitration to a hostile majority, nor to allow herself to be weakened by the dismemberment, attempted from three quarters, of Austria.

It is a libel upon Germany to say that it chose war not as a necessary measure of defense (Nothwehr), but as a means of conquest. Only a madman could desire such a war, of issues impossible to forecast, and from which no gain could be garnered in the long run. It is just as false, indeed, to assume that England, France, and Russia, which were not armed at all, or at best only half ready (and needed a year to obtain the most necessary things), started with the deliberate intent to attack. They desired a diplomatic, not a military, struggle, and strained every nerve to avoid immediate war. The outbreak, however, was not to be prevented; because, at the decisive moment, the will of the military chiefs was more powerful than that of the statesmen. To the military authorities Bismarck's advice, "In preparation for war always remain one step behind your adversary," was counted mere talk, with which a cunning drafter of notes wished to thrust his clumsy hand into the rough work of warriors. When Mars rules, think they, only their expert opinion is of consequence; and only they can judge when this crimson régime is to begin.

From the oldest times, since the original quarrel waged by Agamemnon and Calchas between sword and brain, doubt as to the truth of anything issuing from the writer's desk has been firmly implanted in the minds of those who command in war. In every attempt to control them (we have witnessed it once more) they see an attempt to blunt the weapons for the efficiency of which they are responsible. They do not believe that Russia, as the Czar asserts, would, even with a mobilized army, refrain from any warlike step or even gesture, until the last hope of agreement had vanished. They do not believe that England will abandon her convenient, and now especially profitable, neutrality, and enter the struggle, and they regard the London warning against any such belief as bluff. Grey's plain promise to pledge the whole power of England, and his own reputation, upon the maintenance of proper relations between the triple entente and Germany, if peace be preserved, they regard as an empty swindle. For them only physical tangible facts count. They do not realize that annexation has for a long time ceased to be the only way of obtaining power, and they see in Russia's and England's hesitation to content themselves with an assurance of the complete maintenance of French, Belgian, and Serbian territorial integrity, a proof of treacherous deceit. They have no need for the information that the establishment (1815) and the neutralization (1839) of the Flemish-Walloon Belgian State was brought about at the wish of Britain, to protect that island kingdom from attack from this dangerous portion of northwest European coast, and that England was bound to resist, on the ground that it was the prelude to operations against itself from the same base, the German attempt to use Belgium as a base of operations against France.

HOW MILITARISM PERMEATES A NATION.

All that is of importance in their opinion is to avoid delay in mobilization, to give their country all the advantages of a good start, and to choose the way by which the fruits of victory can be rapidly plucked. They have neither time nor sense to weight the imponderables or to distinguish between a neutral State which may decide to enter into the war any day and a State neutralized under a guarantee, which is bound by oath to defend its irrevocable neutrality. Because they reserve to themselves the final decision in all military matters, they think that the British plenipotentiary, who announced in Brussels in 1912 that England would, in case of need, without asking, land troops on the Belgian coast, also spoke in the name of the United Kingdom, and ridicule as a miserable civilian evasion the statement that this Lieut. Col. Bridges was censured by the London Government and rejected by the Brussels Government on account of this unhappy thought.

All treaties, events, feelings, and bonds of mutual interest confirm the statesman in his conviction that Belgium, in order to avoid becoming the theater of war, would have resisted with all its force any invasion, including an Anglo-French one. The army chief takes the possibility (the toleration of the advance of enemy troops into Belgium) for a certainty and infers therefrom, "We must be the first to get in; they will let us through all right." Superiority of force, he thinks, will quickly compel them to give over resistance. Also the warrior is not to be bound with thread; negotiations waste irreplaceable time; the Fatherland is calling.

The state of affairs which gives precedence to such thoughts in every higher circle of communal life is called in modern speech "militarism." It does not only press for ever more powerful armaments, but it also accustoms citizens, scholars, merchants, and artists to the idea that for a struggle between people the only adequate weapon is armed conflict, and that everything else is unworthy and useless. In this way it permeates every root and every branch and twig of the nation. Militarism is a state of mind and a form of civilization. That without its existence heroism and the warlike virtues can thrive, a single glance at England and France, at the two Serbian States, at Hungary, at Austria at Australia, and Canada shows. That militarism alone can guarantee constant readiness of every limb of the body politic for the rapid transition to war is proved by Germany's achievement, which is unequaled in the history of the world. That is, in the material sphere; as a spiritual achievement many will place higher the voluntary enlistment of three million island and colonial Englishmen, the heroic endurance and self-sacrifice of the Serbians and the French, fighting in the very face of the enemy. Twenty million heroes are fighting between Antwerp and Trebizond, and the majority grew up in unmilitary countries—yes, in some which seemed to have succumbed to the plague of luxury.

NO ARMED TRUCE BUT A FIRM PEACE.

Because militarism facilitates readiness for and temptation to war, and because it can only spread farther and farther unless weeded out root and branch, the war must endure until it is destroyed. The slogan is proclaimed aloud by all the enemies of the German Empire and is whispered by all neutrals. How long only by them? After the inconceivably horrible slaughter of which to-day at least 5,000,000 corpses and 10,000,000 cripples are evidence, the cry for the sure establishing of peace will, even between Hamburg and Bagdad, drown every other. Is the uprooting of militarism possible? To my mind, yes; an inevitable certainty. Its approach has been merely retarded by the foolish attempt to cut from the body of a State a portion which is indispensable to its vital functions or for its self-respect. From the first day of peace onward this State would be compelled to make every sacrifice in blood and money to attain the restablishment of its constitution and its prestige. Think, Grey, Briand, Sazonoff, through what thunderclouds and what pressure of misery you would have to pine if this mutilated power were immortal Germany, compelled to gather together all the energies of mind and economic strength for the bursting of the barrier erected before its house and for the chastisement of impious excess! But, Bethmann and Burian, do not forget that those who pine are more sensitive than giants, and that Servia itself has once already risen from the moldy tombs in which it seemed to be inclosed! A peace which, like a war, left crippled peoples behind it would only mean a truce. And we do not desire a peace that is a truce but a truce which will give rise to a firm and noble peace, to Europe's Easter. We wish it to-day because to-day it is possible and therefore necessary.

We, all who are not blinded by irrational rage, whose numbers grow every day in multitude and with whom in both camps, man for man, the dead agree. Those only stand far off who imagine that this war is essentially like other wars, and might—indeed, must, like other wars—end in victory and defeat, treaty and indemnity. Those upon whom the realization has not yet dawned that this war's most certain consequence—its only certain consequence—will be the most gigantic revolution of all times, a revolution that penetrates the whole of Europe with its flame, that plows up the whole continent, beside which the revolutions of 1789 and 1793 might seem petty child's play, and that every man of good will and natural piety must exert himself fervently to keep this revolution clear of blood guilt and confine it to the world of the spirit.

No State, no people, no class, neither man nor woman, will after this war, this cataclysm, be as they were before. Constitutions and laws, prejudices and scruples, will lie prone before the whirlwind, like reeds in a pool. Let us take care that, from the altar of the new league—the league of humanity with divinely inspired nature—a grateful odor shall be wafted heavenward, as from Noah's thank offering when his second dove had brought him the olive branch in its bill, while the message of "Peace on earth!" was written shimmering across the sky.

An armistice is possible. Nothing indispensable remains to be conquered; nothing that would sufficiently reward the effort involved. The aim and result of that effort can only be the ventilation, cleansing, disinfecting, the hallowing without priest or dogma of the Continent; the transformation of swampy, moldy, hate-befogged, envy-poisoned ground into the luminous abode of free men, working on the basis of their own right, and consequently respecting that of others—men who, just because they are strong and proud of their reason can not but affirm their will to select in peaceful ways the fittest, whether among individuals or peoples. The wolf will not graze beside the lamb nor the lion run with the hare. But the form of war and other horrors will be radically altered, as after the first deluge when the curse and condemnation of all living things was lifted from the earth and the rainbow bridged over the chasm between godhood and beasthood.

This hope does not appeal to you? You want vengeance, retribution, the chastisement, the annihilation of the enemy? Woe to you if it should be left to the wrath of the people to drive their rulers and governors out of the thorny entanglements of such illusions! Only at the cost of its own enervation can one group so crush the other to earth. And behind the melancholy monument of such a universally destructive victory militarism would rear itself more menacingly aloft. Now it may be rooted out from the field on which honor has been maintained and power demonstrated, but the decisive battle has not been fought. Now the power which received it as an heirloom from the soldier King and Frederick the Great then let it rust and only polished it up again under the lash of Bonaparte, that power can now, without inward or outward impoverishment, lay it to rest.

The days of competitive armament are dead. In unconquered countries the will of the people, together with lack of money, forbids its revival. Has it not ever been the part of wisdom to do voluntarily to-day what would have to be done involuntarily to-morrow, and to make a profit of necessity? As Scharnhorst borrowed from the enemy, from the leaders of the French revolutionary armies, the cry for universal service; as Bismarck annexed and added to his own hand the Austrian trump card of manhood suffrage, thereby securing the preponderance of Prussia in the German Confederation and the union of all Germans save those under Hapsburg sovereignty, so will the new Germany make the watchword of her enemies her own, and, impressing upon it the stamp of her spirit, confer upon it the value which her needs require. "In the half-ripe Europe, botched by the Congress of Vienna, and not yet adjusted to the dread of national disintegration, while we were threatened by the envy of our neighbors and oppressed by the nightmare of a hostile coalition, we have never, whether in poverty or in wealth, neglected or haggled over anything required for the strengthening of our defensive armament. That in our efforts to build up the military State we were not following a deceptive will-o'-the-wisp the summer of 1914 has proved. Now, however, in a continent which has discharged its humors, the aim of our striving is: Organized peace. We can not give up the army; indispensable as a school of manhood; we can only transform its nature, its period of service, and its method of training, in the light of the lessons of yesterday and with a view to the needs of to-morrow. We can undertake no humiliating engagement nor anything in the least approaching to it; but in a Europe spiritually purified and freed from the gray spider's web of knavish treaties, we can come to an understanding with other strong peoples as to the extent of our armaments and place ourselves in frank fellowship with all other States, under the control of arbitration. This we can do without fear of being outvoted or constrained to do aught unfitting; for the longing for the preservation of peace will be ten times—aye, a hundred times—stronger in all other lands than in ours, and in none will the wish arise wantonly to attack us after what we have achieved in these two summers and two winters."

Were Germany to speak thus the world would rapturously acclaim her spirit of yearning toward the future and the high courage of her soul.

Not a day longer should the war last, nor any useless memory of unfruitful strife.

Hark, oh hark! the hours are fleeting!
Rapturous strains his advent greeting,
New-born day dethrones the night.
Mountain portals roll asunder,
Phœbus comes on wheels of thunder,
Tumult harbingers the light.

The dawn of rejuvenated humanity! It breathes afresh. Let reason at last get in a word again, and shame spread a thick veil over self-deification and enemy bedevilment. Who would bet that, if any of the buds of hope failed of maturity, were nipped of frost, humanity would not again resolve to pass from armistice into a state of war? What profit could war bring? To the French, Alsace-Lorraine and the Cameroons; to the Germans, Couraland and Polish and Lithuanian territory; to the Austro-Hungarians, Serbia, Montenegro, Northern Albania. That would mean, instead of establishing peace, sowing the seeds of new wars; to say nothing of disruptive domestic dissensions. To what European State, during the last century, has the incorporation of foreign populations brought any appreciable gain? To Russia, Austria, and Prussia, the Netherlands, the German Empire? To none of them! The Savoyards and the people of the Maritime Alps were already half French and, like most of those living by work for the foreigners, remote from the storms of national feeling. Annexation has long been recognized by the far-sighted as a form of the extension of power not to be reconciled with European custom. Nothing is easier than to proclaim annexation, but if the morsel, once swallowed, proves indigestible, and the swallower would willingly spit it out, yet honor commands him to retain it, and, even at the risk of his life, to protect it against greedy enemies.

LOOKING FORWARD TO THE FUTURE.

German banks and industrial companies hold the mastery over—"control" is the hypocritical New York expression—many foreign undertakings, whether openly or from behind a screen painted with other colors. They have acquired the majority of shares, or something approaching to it, but not the land and buildings, and they have taken great care not to install German officials or to hang out the banner of the Empire. Why must States act with less sagacity? Might gives right; the appearance of might, nothing but vexation.

The eye of my spirit looks forward to the time when States shall league themselves in a community of interests, pass from pooling to fusion, and, to save expenses, merge two official staffs into one. For the present that is only to be thought of as between different sections of one national organism. But the more sterile, in the days of electric trunk lines and international legality, the idea of frontiers becomes, and the more solid the unity of Europe, will it not hold good, too, as between Holland, Belgium, and Luxemburg, between Spain and Portugal, between the Scandinavian Kingdoms, between the Baltic Provinces from Riga to Finnish Tornea, between two or three Balkan States? The new form of annexation, which opens to the stronger State the channel of influence and spares the feelings of the weaker, will certainly be in process of casting to-morrow. And, as—since the war has broken down all dams the flood of democracy is unrestrainable—the hour can not be very distant in which even great powers shall unite in defensive associations, and, after amalgamating their steamship lines, both for freight and passenger traffic, shall maintain only a fleet of cruisers, a submarine squadron, and a standing army. Why not, since even to-day they can not take from each other any possession of enduring worth, and the day after to-morrow, at latest, the unmuzzled populace will forbid them even to wish to do so? Hearken to the voice of the fleeting hours! At their bidding, if madness no longer howls them down, greater miracles than this will come to birth.

The first timid aspirations toward this end may be heard in the demand for the nationalization of all munition manufactures. If it can not supplant private enterprise altogether, by enlisting men of the stature of Ballin, Lloyd George, Rathenau, Stinnes, and Thomas for the organization of the whole business, it may farm out the work to private individuals at high, but fixed, rentals. Our deluge has swept away, among so many other things, the superstition that only when spurred by the craving for profits can men do great things. Never again and nowhere must a class of men arise who shall suck profit from the dripping veins of soldiers—who have a loathsome business interest in the outbreak and prolongation of a war, because it destroys weapons, guns, clothes, boots, horses, motor cars, armor plates, barbed wire, explosives, copper, nickel, rubber, ships and airships, camp kitchens, cement, concrete, searchlights, and commercial tonnage, and therefore requires them to be replaced at lightning speed and at enormously inflated prices. No Parliament will then vote money for armaments of which the chief profits do not flow into the coffers of the State.

The Government which did not bind itself to this would beg in vain to be admitted to the fire and life insurance league formed by the nations, great and small.

This international insurance company requires a strong police force or militia; otherwise it could not compel obedience to its verdicts, and a verdict which can not be executed is rubbish and ultimately fuel. It requires, destitute as it is of any revenue to finance itself and its European militia, to possess a fund bearing interest. How is it to amass such from the wasted and impoverished continent? How, I ask, is it to find the means to pay off the war loans, to defray the costs of restoring the country, rebuilding the ruined cities and villages, replacing the implements, maintaining the cripples and helpless, survivors in dignity, far above the mere minimum of necessity, to their lives' end? Twenty-one months of war have cost from 100,000,000,000 to 120,000,000,000 marks; to that are to be added the costs of restoration and the burden of maintaining disabled soldiers and their dependents. A bare indemnity, which in respect of such sums would look like not more than the musbroom at the foot of the giant beech tree, even the victor in the height of his triumph can not hope to obtain. And tribute wrung out by a military occupation protracted beyond the lustrum, the decade, was a possibility in the time of Rome's glory and fall, but to-day is as little a possibility as that forcible deportation of whole tribes and peoples of which many dream. No State that has been involved in the deluge can look for any other indemnification but that which it creates by its own economics.

Any great power which abridges its annual expenditure on land and sea defenses by 1,000,000,000 marks may hope after a generation to see again the first dawn of financial regularity. And what will become of debts and liabilities? Because what is gained by saving suffices at the most to cover to a tolerable extent the new needs which are the legacy of the war. Taxes and customs duties, which brought in were it only an equivalent of the interest of the tenth billion of debt, would cripple industry and commerce in the competition with our continent, with Australia and the yellow world, would break up the idea of property, and drive the moderately well to do, from the fear of confiscations, into neutral States of sound financial constitution, and stamp out the courage for far-reaching enterprises as a horse crushes a rose leaf. Money does not grow like grass. What then is to happen?

What has never happened before anywhere on earth. Nothing save new thoughts, no sere and yellowing ones, opens the drain vent of the abyss. After the first deluge Noah kept himself by the cultivation of the vine. Just as his son Ham, because he despised the uncovered shame of the drunken vintager and told his brothers, was laid under the curse of being the servant of all servants, so the old continent would come under the curse of servitude to the younger continent, if its humanity did not speedily succeed in covering the exposed shame of their racial breeds with the mantle of brotherhood. Let Europe's war debt become a fund of atonement. Let the loan coupons in all the European States which have participated in the war (and in those ready to recognize the principle of arbitration) be valid money, guaranteed by all the debtors, not a currency which can be rendered worthless by dissoluteness and fraud like the assignats of the Jacobin convention and the French directorate. Money which in every country subject to the authority of the court of arbitration must be taken at every counter by every creditor at its full face value. For how long?

Till those weakened by the war can redeem the international currency with national metal or paper. In 40 years at the earliest, in 60 years at the longest, after the conclusion of peace. The international court of justice administers the fund and sets aside in equal portions from the contributions of all the States what it needs for itself and its militia. It has to punish the party disobedient to its verdict by the infliction of a money penalty and invalidate, call in, destroy, all the current loan coupons of any State which, without being threatened in life and limb, breaks the peace. In that direction the glimpse of a mutual European security may be descried, a bond which can hold together and yet not pull the strings too tight, not throttle to death. The Continent would be freed from money tightness; it would not need to allow the arts and sciences to wither, industry, technique, commerce, and household decencies to sink back into destitution. It would not need to frighten its citizens by the threat of crushing taxation across the seas.

It would be under gentle compulsion to bury deep and bury quickly the idle remembrance of fruitless strife in order that the stink of its rottenness might nowhere poison the will for great, clean human business yielding fruit to justice and civilization to those near and those far away. He who holds us for nothing but hucksterers, without ideals and without reverence for the noble things fashioned by brain and hand, can not doubt that we, North and South America, will, for the sake of custom and a market, if for nothing else, take a new paper money in payment, that we will set it in circulation and enter with both feet into the federal hall, under the dome of which we might deliver our giant island from fear of attack and from something still more painful, the duty of undergoing uncomfortable militarism.

France, so lovably unreasonable, secure against irremediable exhaustion of its power of reproduction, wellspring of the finest social delights, surrounded by the bubblings of the old Gallic festivity, France neutralized, and that soon it may be at its own desire, like the free Belgium (free, too, from lust of revenge), the costs of whose rebuilding will be borne, half of them by Germany and a quarter of them by England and France, respectively.

Great Britain, land power and sea power, which has outgrown the fretful desire to be the suspiciously grumbling trustees of Europe, rudely awakened out of supine slumber and easy-going comfort, honestly reconciled to the German Empire, to which it has opened coaling stations and large fertile lands for settlement, lands not cut through by wedges of alien peoples; first among its peers upon the seas that are freed now from rights of capture and every other bad custom of the times of envious rapacity.

Russia finally, purged clean after the hurricane from Tartar rubbish and all relics of ghostly nonsense, with a broad outlet into the always open sea, rid wholly of the craving to make community of creed, out beyond lakes and mountains, contribute to its power, under engagement to the international court of justice not to cut short the political rights of Balts, Finns, Poles, Ukranians, and Letts: peasant country, using all its strength for modern methods, schools, roads, changing its cities from garish boils to reservoirs of the strongest forces of the people, purifying its tchin, spiritual and secular, in the fire of unfettered popular wrath.

PICTURE OF A FREE AND PEACEFUL GERMANY.

Austria-Hungary, a league of States, between the German and the Swiss pattern, into which Serbia, with all the Serbian people and with good commercial harbors, is admitted as an independent federal State, like Saxony in Germany, and into which every Balkan State can be admitted when it will; master of its Adriatic coasts, from which the west Slavs scare away the inheritor of Rome, firm and clear in the determination to eliminate harmful prejudice, to secure every nationality its own tongue, every member of the body of the empire freedom of movement; in the Near East, sower and reaper.

Germany * * * but you will see how Germany will display its glory when peace has come, and we no longer with fevered heads dispute what sort of submarine attack is permitted, what sort forbidden. When everywhere freedom reigns, kindness without weakness commands, and the rights of men are respected, even in the tattered beggar.

When Europe can speak before the graves and urns of those who are fallen: "It was for this that ye died, not for bits of territory coveted yesterday and to-morrow without delight, nor for the work, uncongenial to our age, of implanting fragments of our stock, about which morbid matter was soon running from our own flesh and blood. Ye died for clear freedom and for a worthy peace, its foundations deep in the rock to the weal of the Fatherland and mother Europe. And a death of more beautiful consecration no German maiden has ever sought for her beloved." Then the survivors need no longer put back the clock in order that their day of sunshine may be longer.

Thirty-one kings vanquished by Israel did the aged eyes of Joshua, diving deep into remembrance, see upon both banks of the Jordan, and his wrinkled mouth spoke what the Lord had instilled into his ear: "Great and mighty peoples did he drive out before you, and even unto this day hath not one of them stood before you, but every man of you driveth a thousand far away. But where ye suffer other people to come among you, there they shall be unto you a snare and a net, a goad and a scourge, and such event will take away from you the good land that ye now possess."

So warned the voice whose command once for a whole day long in Gibeon the light of the world obeyed. The day star above the dark world. The Joshua who would enlighten it with the ray of His glance did not concern Himself with the tribe of Ephraim or with the children of Israel; it was not for them He lived, nor for them that He died. What was their plat of land to Him, the noise of their tongues, loud with the vainglory of war? He stands before the governor, does no more than acknowledge that Pontius calls Him King of the Jews, and when high priests and soldiers accuse Him vehemently, He does not so much as open His lips for an audible breath. For His will is toward the cross. His will is that the soldiers shall spit upon Him, smite His face, cast lots for His garments. The threshold of the gates of Yerushalaim, the abode of peace, have been purified by His tears. "Oh, that thou wouldst learn not too late" so He spake to the Blind City, "the things which belong to thy peace! Yet are they hid from thine eyes. But the day is near when thine enemies shall besiege thee, together with thy children, shall cast down thy fortresses, and not leave one stone upon another, because thou knewest not what the time of thy visitation doth require of thee."

Only to the faithful Disciples He gave His peace, not as the world gives. "Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." Not one stone remained of the fortress wherein the conquerors of 31 kings looked with astonishment upon Joshua's sun. But for us the crucified is arisen.

[From the New York Times, June 11, 1916.]

FULL TEXT OF ANOTHER EXTRAORDINARY ARTICLE BY MAXIMILIAN HARDEN—"THE REAL WILSON"—THE DARING EDITOR OF DIE ZUKUNFT, GERMANY'S MOST RENOWNED AND DREADED WRITER, AGAIN FEARLESSLY CRITICIZES THE KAISER'S GOVERNMENT, EULOGIZES THE PRESIDENT, AND ADVOCATES FRIENDLY GERMAN-AMERICAN RELATIONS.

In this and others of those bold and extraordinary articles with which Maximilian Harden has astonished the world since the war began, the famous German publicist gives an estimate, a defense, and a eulogy of President Wilson. "The real Wilson" is the title of Harden's article, which has been banned by the authorities in Germany. The copy, printed in German, which was sent to the New York Times from England, is believed to be the only one that has reached this country. In frankness and effectiveness, this article ranks with the remarkable Harden essay, "If I were Wilson," which was published in the Times two weeks ago.

(By Maximilian Harden.)

"Not a stone remained of the stronghold where the victors over the 31 Kings had gazed in wonder at the sun of Joshua. But the crucified One is arisen."

Not to a race like Mohammed, from whose deathbed Omar went before the tent and cried that his curved saber would split every throat wide open that dared to assert the prophet was dead. He who arose from the rocky tomb in the garden of Joseph of Arimathea does not live under the shield of a threat that is to frighten doubters. All you shall live who, without having touched His arisen body, believe in the resurrection of His soul.

On the seventh day after Easter, on Quasimodo Sunday, following the admonition in St. Peter's First Epistle to wipe out evil and deceit, hypocrisy and envy, and, like new-born babes with pure milk, to become saturated with nothing but clear understanding, there is read from the pulpit from the next to the last chapter of the Gospel according to St. John:

"When, therefore, it was evening on that day, the first day of the week, and when the doors were shut where the disciples were for fear of the Jews, Jesus came and stood in the midst, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you.

"And when He had said this He showed them His hands and His side. The disciples therefore were glad when they saw the Lord.

"Jesus therefore said to them again. Peace be unto you; as the Father has sent Me, even so send I you

THE STORY OF DOUBTING THOMAS.

"And when He had said this, He breathed on them and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost.

"Whose soever sins ye forgive, they are forgiven unto them; whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained.

"But Thomas, one of the twelve, called Didymus, was not with them when Jesus came.

"The other disciples, therefore, said unto him, We have seen the Lord. But he said unto them, Except I shall see in His hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and put my hand into His side, I will not believe.

"And after eight days again the disciples were within and Thomas with them. Jesus cometh the doors being shut, and stood in the midst, and said, Peace be unto you.

"Then saith He to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger, and see My hands; and reach hither thy hand, and put it into My side, and be not faithless, but believing.

"Thomas answered and said unto Him, My Lord and my God.

"Jesus saith unto him, Because thou hast seen Me thou hast believed; blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed."

Noli me tangere: This motto stands at the door of every faith that wishes to spread itself around the world like the warming and protecting rays of light from an open tower. Thou shalt not touch Me; not from a sense of touch, sight, or hearing shall thy will allow thy faith to spring, but from the heaven-born fruit conceived by a divinity. If this divinity needs force to assert itself, if the menacing curse of Moses or the saber of Omar must win respect for it, then it dwells in the crumbling despotic citadels of the old covenants.

A new covenant, such as the Occident never had seen, became possible when a son of a man, without the evidence of touch, sight, or hearing, believed in the resurrection of a body familiar to the eye, therefore in a new divinity. Because Mary of Magdala sincerely believes it, the woman despised yesterday as a creature of the devil is able to transmit her pious ardor to the brains of Peter and John. Because the faith became as firm as a rock in two of the disciples, ten of them, among whom there is not merely one doubting Thomas, cling to Him and gather together a congregation t which He becomes a shelter in the whirlwind of events. Because an abiding hope, whose ardor was never cooled by any draft of mean-souled distrust, caused unseen things to be made visible in Jerusalem and in Galilee, to this very day Calvins in the Netherlands upon their deathbeds see the towering figure of the Savior. The belief that He will come and at the last moment of their life free them from the bonds of sin has been sucked in with their mother's milk. And in the realms of the physic being the infallible passionate hope always forces into sight the face of what it desires.

In this German spring, in which the sap, not by spurts, but with a gentle flow that promises good fruit, rises from the roots to the stalk and the branches, is there not germinating somewhere faith in the resurrection of Europe and in the new humanity in a restored earth, whose wounds and marks left by the Crucifixion may be felt by every finger? It will spread like rays from a warming and transparent tower far out across the desert over silent privation and shrieking misery if it is cherished ardently.

It will win to the sacred cause hundreds and hundreds of thousands if its defender, with the other disciples, does not fear the hardships of journeying, the pain of persecution. Can Pentecost come from Easter without spring thunder showers? Can a strong and united faith develop from splintered doubts without persecution and vengeful wrath?

Hark back through the echo of the spring festival at home to the teachings of Christ. The Sadducees, Hanan, Alexander, and Jochanan, are in power; their tool is the high priest Caiaphas, whose weak will is subject to that of his father-in-law, Hanan. They have crucified the happiness of the world. And shall their stern mind, never softened by the falling dew nor by the gentle tear of sympathy, permit that a handful of peace advocates, with the heritage of the One so shamefully executed, insinuate itself into the favor of the unthinking masses? Then all the amount of labor, the increase of power that the gloomy Nisanmond has brought them would be wasted in vain. It would have been wiser to have let the seducer himself, the catcher of souls, who through long delay and through oft-repeated warnings must have lost prestige, continue to wander through Judea and to have sent out word ahead of him that the main object of the vagabond's march was to rake in money.

Josephus writes that the Sadducees constantly engendered more ferocious severity than any other of the sects within the domain of the patricians of the temple. From their ranks came the watchword, "Rather the death of a man than pestilence and the ruin of the entire people." Hanan, a hundred times more severe than Pontius Pilate, is burdened with the guilt of the crucifixion, and can only escape the curse of the survivors if he leads his "party of order," the herd of Jehovah imperialists, to victory and roots out of all the highways of Israel and out of every furrow of earth the weeds sown there and nourished by the breath of the deceiver. In the shadow of the Savior's spirit the flower of the priesthood perishes from cold. Woe unto you, if this shadow succeeds in spreading! Wrath, that calls itself pious, because it clings to the dust of old phrases, eagerly arms its bailiffs against it.

VOICE OF WARNING FOUND NO ECHO.

What punishment may the Jews demand and inflict without a protest by Roman powers, by the mild legate in Syria, Vitellius? Imprisonment and driving out with whips. In the Sanhedrin Peter and John shout for joy under the lash. The people who live in the temple and from the temple, for whom every wall of the holy house sweats outrageous profits, and who consequently believe themselves called to guard the temple as the ones chosen by the powers of Heaven, want to force free spirits to do their will by means of orders and inhibitions, by punishments and pains, and do not even suspect what happiness this torture causes to the persecuted ones who are filled with their cause. One man warns them. It is the old rabbi, Gamaliel, a wise grandson of the wise Hillel. This most famous scholar and most tolerant priest in Israel speaks as follows to his comrades of the Sanhedrin:

"If the new doctrine is criminal sacrilege, it will fall to pieces of its own weight. If it is the creation of an earnest spirit, then it is wanted by God, and the risky attempt to destroy a work that is favored by God can never succeed."

The voice of the warner found no echo. When was common sense ever heeded in the cloud of sparks stirred up by fanaticism? Stephen becomes the first victim of blind rage. Before the descendants of the Jews from Alexandria and Ephesus, Kilikien and Kyrene, he has, in the synagogue of the Libertines, denounced the Jews as rebels who still dispute ocular evidence, and who are guilty of a grievous crime, because their hate put the Messiah on the cross. A sermon that stamps the Galilean as the Messiah and sets him upon the exalted seat of the promised Savior can not remain unpunished. The beneficiaries of the temple send out listeners. How can the ruling clique quickly seize the bold chap by the neck? Has he not, perhaps, by the allegation of things not proved to be true, lowered the esteem the public holds for Moses, the bringer of laws of the faith? He has; therefore, he must answer to the Sanhedrin.

He shouts to his judges: "Ye stiff-necked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost: as your fathers did, so do ye. Which of the prophets did not your fathers persecute? And they killed them which showed before the coming of the Righteous One; of whom ye have now become the betrayers and murderers; ye who received the law as it was ordained by angels, and kept it not. * * * Behold, I see the heavens opened and the Son of Man standing on the right hand of God."

Hastily they ram their fingers into their ears so as not to hear such an impious declaration. Slaver drips from gnashing teeth over lips pressed hard together in rage. What says the law about such blasphemy? It says in Deuteronomy:

"The dreamer who tries to convert you to the belief in a new divinity must die. As soon as the tongues of two witnesses have pronounced him guilty, take him before the gate of the city. The hand of the witnesses shall cast the first stone. Then all the people shall stone the wicked man, so that he shall be completely destroyed. For he wanted to lead you away from the Lord thy God, Who brought you out of bondage in the land of Egypt and Whom you must thank."

YOUTH WHO DEFIED THE DISCIPLES.

Stephen is taken outside the city. The witnesses who are to cast the first stones take off their outer garments and lay them before the feet of a youth who, with wide-opened eyes, is watching the execution of the sentence. Now he stoops to pick up a stone himself. He is happy at being able to assist in the execution of the blasphemer. And from this day on he is the tool of hard-hearted, heretic-hunting priests. Armed with their warrant he breaks into suspected houses, drags the followers of the doctrine of Christ, men and women, before the judges or to prison. No one (as is shown in the Epistle to the Galatians) is a hotter persecutor of the congregations of Christ; no one else lend themselves more willingly to the service of the old laws. Indeed, many a night he hears through the darkness the sighs of the women thrown into jail on his accusations; he lies sleepless and meditates on the gentleness, on the quiet, heroic renunciation of the world by his victims and of the earthly pilgrimage, still producing miracles, of Him for whom they joyfully suffer and die; often his face turns crimson because he believes he sees the blood of Stephen that his stone drew from its veins spurt forth again. But he turns with horror from the seduction of such a deception of the senses and pulls himself together with the resolution to avenge every breach of the law as it is handed down with unswerving severity and never to spare anyone who did not regard the law as the embattled home center of their desires and actions.

This Saul becomes the terror of the band of disciples. He becomes, after the day of Damascus, the Apostle Paul, who spreads the sectarian belief through the mass of the world church. Gamaliel's pupil, who for so long had sealed all the pores of his soul to the ancient wisdom of his teacher, hears the question from on high:

"Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?"

Through the roaring thunder it rings, as clear as the call of the lark from on high, in the ear of the weary man, who in the fatal Spring of the Emperor Tiberius, who with wounded feet had wandered from the wastes of the hot land of Iturea and saw with blazing eyes the plateau of Damascus rendered fruitful by the blessing of God and the labor of man. Has a thunderbolt struck his brain? Saul falls to the ground. Paul, with a bewildered brain but with a soul like the sun at noonday, rises from the earth. The Christian, Hanania, becomes his physician, healer, teacher, and brother. The scales fall from Paul's eyes. With resistless power of the will he tears out the thorn that for months has been boring into his flesh, and with it the imp of Satan that has been chastising his heart, and he also receives the baptism. The thoughtless one who, with his brain fired with passion by everything, was the most ferocious persecutor of Christians, becomes the most earnest and enthusiastic Christian. He elevates the ardent, all-embracing faith far above Essenism; delivers it from the hands of the sects that live from day to day in the belief that the end of the world is at hand and the twilight of humanity near; joins power to its faith and insures its immortality through this union.

Is there germinating in our Spring the faith in the resurrection of Europe and in the new humanity in a restored world, whose wounds and marks of crucifixion every one can touch with their fingers? This faith will tower like a transparent, warning lighthouse above the desert, above dumb suffering and howling misery, if it has been filled with light by the ardor of a strong, tried man and the will to power. He will win hundreds and hundreds of thousands to the holy cause. It needs Stephen and Paul; it needs the devotion of the spirit of martyrdom and of the head of a statesman. You Germans who remain Europeans and do not want to sink back into primitive animal life, become the apostles of the new faith! Do not let yourselves be halted either by the continual bawling of those living in the past, and who classify your pure desires as a Utopia and a barren island of idle dreamers, or be frightened by the tools of blind force, who are not suited by the tendency of your thoughts. Hanan can do no more in a warrior's garb than he has been able to do in priestly raiment.

He can proscribe heretics—those of to-day who will be the fathers of the church of to-morrow—can cut their spiritual bide to pieces with the lashes of his jailers, banish them from a hearing by their own people, and have them stoned by every people, have their freedom of movement curtailed with iron nails, but he can never throttle the soul with his heavy hand. That rises from the wreck of the body, crosses the borders, slides under the barriers, and wins disciples the world around. Let him act fearlessly who feels his soul prepared, he who has ever heard with the ear of his soul the plaintive cry, "Why dost thou persecute the longing of humanity after the holy ghost?"

We want a Germany that is strong, merry, bright, with agreeable, not haughty, dignity, and earnest gladness. This Germany can not be spared by humanity; but neither can she do without humanity. It is not her task to enslave it or to color it after her own fashion, but to flourish in it as a powerful member in a constant interchange of healthful, life-giving streams. We know that in every great period Germany's most effective weapon was thought; spades and plows, creators, not like mortars, howitzers, and asphyxiating-gas destroyers.

We want reason, not the sword, to be Germany's guiding star; the statesman, not fortune's casual favorite on the battle field or in the submarine. So that history may not some day judge us thus. With an unexampled display of popular strength, genius, and endurance, Germany fought for an ideal that had long been reduced to a shrunken, withered shadow, against the band of her foes, who with all their superficiality of judgment, with their confused dilettantelike ignorance, still combined in the perception of the direction pointed out for mankind to follow by all the great signs of present times.

So that Clio may not sigh; with a most admirable implement wrought by the brain and the army on the one side a futile cause was served; on the other, with useless tools and with an outworn, unprofitable, dusty force of the will, the work of preparation for what was recognized as necessary was shamefully bungled.

WANTS AN ERA OF PEACE AND GOOD WILL.

We want Europe to get well, not pine away as a cripple; we want her to become clean, not still more disgustingly besmirched. We want the vital questions of the world to be answered in a way that will meet the needs of the nations, both the strong and the weak, and, without supplementary strife over it, will last long after the day on which peace is declared. We do not want people to brag about the greatness of a time that was merely destructive, for with us greatness is the characteristic of creative ability. We want a free people to be in the future the creator of its own destiny from the ground up, and be able to rejoice without envy at the prosperity and spiritual advancement of other peoples; we wish that goodness and human rights be respected, even in the most ragged beggar. There you have the basic outline of our faith and desire. All you who wish to dwell within its arch gather quickly from all camps to the loyal union. Steel yourselves with the vow of brave men, to venture something at last. Only by daring will you be worthy of the heroes who are cheerfully bleeding out there. At no place and at no time has Pentecost come out of Easter without spring thunderstorms.

THE QUESTION.

No matter how often we must think of it, the discovery of America must each time make a fresh appeal to our imaginations. For centuries, indeed from the beginning, the face of Europe had been turned toward the East. All the routes of trade, every impulse and energy, ran from west to east. The Atlantic lay at the world's back door. Then, suddenly, the conquest of Constantinople by the Turks closed the route to the Orient. Europe had either to face about or lack any outlet for her energies; the unknown sea at the west at last was ventured upon, and the earth learned that it was twice as big as it had thought. In that part of the world, upon that new-found half of the globe, mankind, late in its history, was thus afforded an opportunity to set up a new civilization; here it was strangely privileged to make a new human experiment.

Never can that moment of unique opportunity fail to excite the emotion of all who consider its strangeness and richness; a thousand fanciful histories of the earth might be contrived without the imagination daring to conceive such a romance as the hiding away of half the globe until the fullness of time had come for a new start in civilization. A mere sea captain's ambition to trace a new trade route gave way to a moral adventure for humanity.

"The race was to found a new order here on this delectable land, which no man approached without receiving, as the old voyagers relate, you remember, sweet airs out of woods aflame with flowers and murmurous with the sound of pellucid waters. The hemisphere lay waiting to be touched with life—life from the old centers of living, surely, but cleansed of defilement and cured of weariness, so as to be fit for the virgin purity of a new bride. The whole thing springs into the imagination like a wonderful vision, an exquisite marvel which only once in all history could be vouchsafed.

"AMERICA A BEACON FOR THE WORLD.

"One other thing only compares with it; only one other thing touches the springs of emotion as does the picture of the ships of Columbus drawing near the bright shores, and that is the thought of the choke in the throat of the immigrant of to-day as he gazes from the steerage deck at the land where he has been taught to believe he in his turn shall find an earthly paradise, where, a free man, he shall forget the heartaches of the old life and enter into the fulfillment of the hope of the world. * * *

"* * * The men who founded America * * * set up their standards here in America in the tenet of hope, as a beacon of encouragement to all the nations of the world. * * * Tyranny has become more subtle and has learned to wear the guise of mere industry, and even of benevolence. * * *

"What is liberty?

"I have long had an image in my mind of what constitutes liberty. Suppose that I were building a great piece of powerful machinery, and suppose that I should so awkwardly and unskillfully assemble the parts of it that every time one part tried to move it would be interfered with by the others, and the whole thing would buckle up and be checked. Liberty for the several parts would consist in the best possible assembling and adjustment of them all, would it not? * * *

"We say of a boat skimming the water with light foot, 'How free she runs.' * * * Human freedom consists in perfect adjustments of human interests and human energies. * * *

"Well, then, in this new sense and meaning of it are we preserving freedom in this land of ours? * * *

"Have we, inheritors of this continent and of the ideals to which our fathers consecrated it—have we maintained them, realizing them, as each generation must, anew? * * * Are we, in the consciousness that the life of man is pledged to higher levels here than elsewhere, striving to bear aloft the standards of liberty and hope? * * *

"And we stand in danger of utter failure yet except we fulfill speedily the determination we have reached to deal with the new and subtle tyrannies according to their deserts."

(Herr Harden then proceeds to quote scattered sentences and paragraphs from Mr. Wilson's speeches, bringing out the necessity for America to hold fast to the old ideals of liberty and equality of opportunity for all.)

I have collected these excerpts from the campaign speeches of Woodrow Wilson (that under the title "The New Freedom, a Call for the Emancipation of the Generous Energies of a People," have also been published in the German language) in order to indicate what manner of man it is over whom there has been so much talk during the past weeks and months. So much silly and, unfortunately, also miserably shameless, talk. "A dusty professor," "a rabid enemy of Germany who has sworn to prevent England's defeat with all the means in his power." "a rascal bought by England." This is the parrotlike chatter of lazy ignorance that has nothing in common with holy love of country. Burn up at least ninety-nine hundredths of all the parasitical war "literature," bound in warlike covers, and throw all these poems, speeches, romances, treatises, boostings, and tracts in the only place where they are of any use—in the paper mills—and devote your time to books from which you draw the spiritual inspiration of clear speech. Then, perhaps, pure reason will return to its home and awaken the duty of respecting the dignity of strangers.

GERMANY MIGHT BE PROUD TO OWN WILSON.

As Rodin and Hodler, Maeterlinck and Verhaeren, Kipling and Wells, Forain and Raemaekers, Spitteler and d'Annunzio, by their angry attacks on Germany lose none of their value in an artistic sense, so, too, Woodrow Wilson, the scholar and politician, would not be a wretch even if he did prefer English ways and statesmanship to German. That he has done so has never been shown. The problem, if the President of the United States is an eagle, may be decided when he spreads out his wings for a flight. He certainly is a man of high moral and intellectual rank—a man of whom we might be proud if he were one of ours (and he could speak, as I let him speak from these pages two weeks ago). He is at the least an American Fichte. In the State of Virginia he was born by the descendant of an Irishman to the grandson of a Scotchman. So this man, who is now nearly 60 years old, has no blood prejudice that promotes blind deification of England.

As a student at Princeton University he writes against "Cabinet government," loudly attacks the secrecy and avoidance of responsibility that prevail in the business of the Government, and that mit into a sounder steep from year to year the people's desire for active cooperation. The review is followed by a book over Government by Congress that earns him the call to a chair in the youngest college for women. He leaves the presidency of Princeton University (that, as the favorite resort of the proud and rich youth, might be called the Bonn of America) after eight years of fruitful administration because an endowment of twelve millions had conditions attached to it the acceptance of which the president feared would be of serious injury to his college (through a deepening of the gulf between the classes). In order not to soil his ideals, the image of his power of thought, he goes, and is, as the wise and valiant fighter of ugly abuses chosen as the governor of New Jersey. He frees this State from the bondage in which it was held by the trusts. In defiance of the silly inrooted custom that limits the governor to written communication with the assembly, he defends his plans of reform personally in the legislature and also at the voters' meetings and in the press. He does not hesitate to make known throughout the land the names of the obstinate deputies. And, with the enthusiastic support of the people's will, he puts his plans through.

REBUKE FOR SLANDERERS OF THE PRESIDENT.

He has outlined the life of Washington, the history of the American people, and the nature of the State in good books, and in the collection of essays, Only Literature, on politicians and statesmen, poets and writers, he has said as many wise things as hardly another in the two worlds for many a year. Then, as a new man in the highest place in the Republic, he has made far-reaching mistakes. Is he the only one among all the heads of governments? This man loves his people and has the desire to lead it upward to the heights of the ideal from which it has slipped into the swamp. Germany must be ashamed of the persons who slander him, because there has been slimy dirt in the newspapers.

Wilson, the teacher of political law, who now speaks in the name of the United States of America, stands upon the conviction that the announcement that from March, 1915, the Imperial Government would treat the waters around Great Britain and Ireland as being in the war zone was a gross denial of international law; that the premeditated method of the German submarine warfare is not compatible with the basic laws of humanity; that this method which, without the flimsiest legal justification, without a twinge of conscience, destroys mighty ocean liners and unarmed passenger ships, and has cost the lives of hundreds of peaceful Americans, wantonly smashes to bits the undeniable rights of neutrals and the sacred privileges of all those not engaged in the war; that the Imperial Government, whose uprightness and good faith are not put in doubt, neither has succeeded nor ever will succeed in reconciling its methods with the basic principles of humanity.

And as every promise of caution by Germany has been followed by an act by a submarine sharply contradicting it, the Government of the United States, that has been patient so long because it feels a genuine friendship for the people and rulers of Germany, must break off diplomatic relations with the Imperial Government unless the methods of submarine warfare are immediately given up, passenger and freight ships not armed for attack are spared, and the rules of humanity, of international law, and of the rights of neutrals are again put into effect.

These are the principal contents of the note that the American ambassador laid before the state secretary of our foreign office on the evening of April 20. Dare we treat the complaint of a great, free people, radiating the strength of youth and represented by a man of the importance and stamp of Wilson, according to the rules of a students' row? Shall we haggle over words, refuse to stand for the "entirely impertinent" tone, and use it as a pretext for refusing to answer?

That would be unworthy of the great matter in dispute, of the belligerent nations, of the human race. If President Wilson, after careful examination, is convinced that a long chain of German methods of conducting warfare has worn away and broken to pieces the laws of humanity and the holy custom of nations, it is not only his right but his duty to speak with uncompromising clearness. He owes the fulfillment of this duty not only to his own country but to ours. For we, the German nation and Government, do not wish that something which is not to be kept shall be agreed to, that agreements shall not be observed. In the darkness of the state of siege (not to be profitably endured much longer, Emperor and chancellor) we can find out whether such a thing has happened only when a firm hand, not to be turned aside by prohibitions, completely bares the real situation to our gaze.

Mr. Wilson demands nothing new. Has there been an agreement to do what can not be done, has there been failure to keep an agreement? That is the entire question. Against Wilson's basic argument that, even in the most ferocious war, the voice of humanity and of international law must be heard, nobody even lightly affected by the morality of our stage of culture will present objections; the Princeton professor might base his arguments on Bismarck or Goethe—who, in the presentation of essentials, are not so far removed from each other as heedless or hostile phrase makers would have them.

Are the statements of the American correct? That is the question. The imperial chancellor, who, before he answers, looks upon the evidence of both sides from every angle, deserves the gratitude of every thinking German. He is not "weak," but strong. He is strong in the peculiar sense attaching to his position; strong as the only responsible guardian of the Empire, of German faith and trustworthiness must always be.

The audacity of the chancellor should not be compared with that of the U-boat commander; the fate of 70,000,000 Germans must not be intrusted to a daring submarine commander nor to a man disguised as a statesman. Yet such pilots for the ship of state are wished by the silly clamorers whose unbridled actions are becoming gradually more dangerous to the Fatherland than all the endeavors of the foe, driven far back into his own territories. If these Pistols and the like, instead of pouring the wine of Mistress Quickly upon their noses, had stuck them into the book of history, their shouts for the strong man must have been choked at the memory of Cleon, the Athenian tanner. There was a swaggerer who was a strong man in the eyes of bullies. He branded the wise Pericles, because he carefully weighed all possible consequences, as a foolish philosopher, and, as head of the rascally crew of sycophants, he denounced all who worked independently for the good of the people instead of for profitable popularity. Informing and intimidation freed him from discomforting speakers and writers, and stole from the Athenians their most valuable possession, freedom of speech, and increased the fortune of the avaricious. "Pericles demanded calm deliberation on all matters; Cleon used every means to nourish and heighten the feverish excitement of the people. Pericles sought to act only according to reason and to set aside all results of unclear states of mind; Cleon drove the credulous multitude, by means of soothsaying, trumped-up oracular speeches, and inflammatory statements of all sorts, into the wildest excitement. He concealed from the citizens the perils of the situation and held up to their eyes certain victory, from which they were sure to derive new advantages and benefits." (Curtius.)

QUOTES LESSON FROM ANCIENT HISTORY.

"To annex and evacuate" was already Cleon's watchword. The entire Peloponnesus was conquered and tribute was wrung from Arcadia. Listen to his diatribes against Sparta and Mytilene. Terror alone can tame the islanders; only rascals can seek to turn away the Athenians from the prosecution of mercilessly cruel warfare. The inhabitants of Mytilene, having shamefully assaulted us, must be beaten to their knees and annihilated; if this is not done, their treachery will threaten us within a few years with another war. Does Diodotos advise you to keep hatred and lust for vengeance apart from political quarrels, which are not to be looked upon as a case before a law court? Does he counsel you to think only of the welfare and future of the State, unblinded by passion? That is but the old whimpering of the faint-hearted, who chatter about magnanimity and humanity when the only hope of deliverance from deadly peril is the merciless employment of every possible weapon. Sparta? Only when she has yielded all the territory that should be given by right to the Athenians—in the Peloponnesus, in Megaris, Nisaia, Pegai, Troezen, Achaia—then, and only then, can there be talk of an armistice. It is a waste of time to listen to the empty talk of Sparta's ambassadors; every Spartan lies as soon as he opens his mouth.

Cleon attains his goal. The ambassadors depart and the most propitious hour for concluding peace and dissolving the hostile alliance is gone. Because the voice of statesmanlike prudence is drowned, the most important affair of state is ruined by the frivolity of the flatterer of the multitude.

Does not he whose memory is good seem to see clearly before him our Cleons, the blonde and dark ones? Whether Fortune would smile even for one day on the Pistols as Generals and Admirals as she did on their immortal prototype at Pylos, when she bestowed upon him the cooperation of Demosthenes and the treason of Menedalos, the Spartan leader, is as uncertain as is the hope that to-morrow a new Aristophanes may cure the hide of the tanner's tribe with the sharp weapon of his wit.

They have deserved this chastisement ten times tenfold. Are they strong because, far from the front and the sea, they open wide their mouths twice daily and clamor for the conquest and annihilation of the world, which others in the van are to buy with their bones? Are they strong because they have never learned anything worth while, because they have simply picked up the speech of the power drunk, the foundations of all statecraft, the soul history, and political economy of the nations hostile to us?—because they never saw the thin spots in their hide, because they drive the multitude by coarse flattery to insane lust for power and to self-deification? Is it proof of strength to exalt the lowest impulse as the noblest, to wring applause from callous hearts and sweating hands by such cheap country fair tricks, by such horse-swappers' artifices? Even if those among us who resemble Pericles and Diodotos were of weaker fiber, reason speaks forth from them, not madness. They do not enrich themselves by supplying the Army and the needy people; they are not paid by cliques and speculators for dirty work; hard times do not double their earnings; for them no fat roast is cooking over the fires of war. They serve the Fatherland within the limits of their brain, modestly, after a fashion, and without thought of self interest. Whosoever, consciously or unconsciously, from a safe hiding place far from the enemy, accuses those governing us of dishonest weakness, betrays their interests.

OUTBURST OF SCOLDING ROUNDLY DENOUNCED.

It was to me like physical pain when Deputy Dr. Ernst von Heydebrandt wandered away into the midst of such evil company. In solitude I have often praised the brave earnestness of this man, his great will power controlled by keen understanding, the steely sharpness tempered with sobriety of his speech—I have praised him as the only personality in the Landstag and Reichstag worthy of the esteem even of his foes. But what he has now allowed to be printed is unworthy abuse, drearier than anything that the most violent enemy of the junkers could imagine. This outburst of scolding pusillanimity from an embittered heart would not stand out above the rest even in a calendar for peasant children. Nowhere is there even a spark of the fire from a statesman's brain. Every understrapper of the foreign office—yes; even the author of the Sussex note—would be justified in exclaiming, with a shrug of the shoulders, when he saw the tortures of this Heydebrandt: "Yet that fellow would set up to be my judge; that fellow would damn men of my stamp."

"America," says the deputy and party leader, "was even before the war, in relations with our opponents." (So was the German Empire; with Italy, Japan, Portugal, Russia—with Great Britain even, as has been said to us at least twice each year. To have such a relationship was quite within the rights of the United States; that it may have been set forth in a treaty is improbable and not supported by a shred of evidence.) "During the war America stood at first secretly, later openly, on the side of our enemies." (That remains to be proved; according to what I know the Republic never violated neutrality.) Mr. Wilson is "insolent"; his "arrogance can not be surpassed." Because it "favors his chances of reelection" he bases his acts on dictates of humanity, "which are surpassed only by the hypocrisy with which he advances them." The Americans are "business people" to whom an Empire of the strength of Germany must speak only in the most harshly unequivocal terms. They supplied the belligerents with arms and ammunition. (So did we, neutrals, in every war of the last decades. And, during the Boer War, we were, in a more limited sense, exactly in the position of America to-day, able to sell the British arms and ammunition, but unable to sell them to the Transvaal and the Orange Free State on account of the English sea blockade. Does anybody with even half the average sense doubt that the American private business houses who armed our enemies would have shipped to Hamburg and Bremen with equal willingness all that we ourselves ordered? The exportation of war material could not have been prevented except by special legislation, and the reasons for open opposition to such legislation were based neither on greed nor "relations.")

Without this supply to our foes from America, we hear, the war would "have been over more than a year ago." (A friendly notion, which can not be looked upon except as an error, even if Lloyd George, without apparent reason, had lied when he said that everything supplied by America amounted at most to one-sixth of the total.) Therefore, "the blood of hundreds of thousands cries to heaven against this brand of humanity." (Not louder than the blood of all those laid low by the fire of Krupp and Ehrhardt guns, among whom, until yesterday, there were very many Germans.) "We see ultimate victory beckoning," but we must "voluntarily forego it," and "give up the best and most effective weapon against our deadly foe England because it suits the political and business interests of the Americans. To such a pass have we come!"

To such a pass that it may be said openly that responsible persons exist in the German Empire to-day who wish to forego using an effective, victory-promising weapon because they tremble before America's "insolent demand." To such a pass, that a party leader, whose strength and parliamentary strategy are rightly rated higher than those of anyone else, speaks openly during a fateful hour for his dearly beloved fatherland, about things and beings concerning which he has not the slightest knowledge. Therefore, it would be hopelessly foolish to call him "hypocritical." He is too clever to be embittered by the lost cause of the Prussian right to vote, too long accustomed to fair play to use the exaggerated hope of the masses for submarine victory as a favoring wind for floating the ship of his party off the sands.

SPIRIT THAT MUST ANIMATE THE PEOPLE.

But does this serious man seriously believe that ignorance blazoned forth with the power of a Hercules will pull him through the flood; does he expect to go through this world epoch without the slightest inkling of the history and will power, the needs and ambitions of great foreign nations, of the duties and rights of imperial world politics? After the war also a conservative party will be needed. It will be possible, however—(despite the alliance with the big manufacturing interests, which assure to both sides not as much as three dozen seats in Parliament)—only if it be entirely renewed, if it fit its thoughts and acts to the newly-plowed earth, to the uprooted will of the time, changed from the smallest to the greatest. This can happen only if the party's leader does not, in fateful days for Germany, lay about him with his flail in the workshop of subtle statesmanship. The party will be thanked for giving the army able leaders; it will be blamed, perhaps too hastily, for having been economically inferior to the more cultured classes. Everywhere the war has brought greater profits to the agriculturer than to the masses in the cities—let that be allowed to him without envy. But let not one "who can see it through" speak harshly about patriotic duty to one driven by losses into want. Let him work in his district for social betterment and honest prices, but let him not haughtily brand as unpatriotic because they think differently from him, men who have worked harder, and by their industry attained to wider knowledge and thus to a more accurate appreciation of what is politically possible and necessary. Hanan did that once.

Herr von Heydebrandt did this. "We have a fractional patriotism which considers all beyond its fraction as something foreign which can be damaged in any way provided it bring advantage to the fraction." Thus Bismarck scoffs; Bismarck, whose spirit has never been grasped by the noise makers of to-day, for which reason they uselessly desecrate his name. Compared to him, Herr von Bethmann seems a daredevil.

Bismarck, even in the most difficult moments of battle, always reckoned as a probability the most unfavorable of possible results; in every one of his three wars he tried everything conceivable to appease neutrals.

In the Reichstag he himself bore witness to the fact that, in the service of the Fatherland, he set aside "aggressiveness, threats, vituperation," that he sought to soften, and even in extreme cases did not hesitate to "back down and grovel." He did this, he said, because "the wiser man yields."

Has reason become madness? Was Bismarck, the always just, the soldier well acquainted with Shakespeare's lordly heroes, backward in his belief in Prussia's and Germany's mission? Look upon him at Versailles, with his white cap and sulphur-yellow collar, standing sleepless in the moonlight, on the ladder, before the common soldier on sentry go. "Do you believe that we shall ever get into Paris?" The confidence of that common soldier helps the Chancellor to sleep.

Listen to him! "I have never looked upon international disputes, which can be settled only by war, from the point of view of German student honor, but only in relation to their effect on the demand of the German nation to live in common with all other great powers of Europe, an independent political life, on the basis of a national ability peculiar to us. Politics should not be a Nemesis; vengeance is not ours. Politics is a task to which, in reality, nothing but navigation in unknown waters is comparable. One does not know what the weather, what the currents, will be, what storms one must live through. And, moreover, in politics one is essentially dependent on the decisions of others and can never act independently. It is easy for a statesman in the Cabinet or the Chamber of Deputies to use the wind of popular opinion for blowing the war trumpet, and then quietly to warm himself beside his hearth; it is easy for him to make thunderous speeches from his platform and then allow the riflemen, bleeding to death in the snow, to decide whether his policy is or is not to bring victory and glory. Nothing is easier than that. But woe to the statesman in this day of ours who does not cast about him for a casus belli, which will be still tenable after war is over."

HOW BISMARCK MIGHT HAVE USED POWER.

There speaks Bismarck. Who dares to maintain that this genius, this Vulcan tamed by politeness, would ever have treated a land of such inner and outer strength, such abounding youth and confidence in the future as America, in the way that Herr Heydebrandt counsels, even were Germany already menaced by nine foes? Would he not have carefully weighed the efficacy of moral against military means—assured of the cup of victory which only imprudence could dash from his lips, would he have allowed irresponsible trifling with carefully guarded public opinion? Were Bismarck now Chancellor, Herr von Heydebrandt on the morning after his downfall from the narrow pinnacle of his glory, would have read this in the North German Gazette:

"In a certain highly important conservative circle, which usually backs up the Government—not always gratuitously—efforts have of late been made by a press campaign and demagogical speechifying, to exert influence on decisions of unusual importance.

The Imperial Government takes pleasure in recalling that, during the best days of the Conservative Party, the Government has often been requested not to countenance such machinations in any way. Conscious of its responsibility, the Government spurns all such machinations. The Government's actions are based upon dutiful weighing of circumstances, means, and situations of which it has thorough knowledge; of which, moreover, to a considerable extent, the Government alone has such knowledge. Concerning international decisions the Government is even less willing than in everyday matters to endure attacks upon its prestige more patiently from the Right in Parliament than from the Left. Should the Government need further support. * * *"

THE ANSWER.

"Now," says Herr von Heydebrandt, "I think that the German answer will be worthy of our country and of this great hour." I think so, too; and I hope that, in this hour, Herr von Bethmann will measure up to the greatness of his destiny. To blow the war trumpet, to make thunderous speeches, to hand still another ambassador his passports and swear all submarine commanders to merciless sweeping of the seas, would be easy to the dullest intellect. What would hinder him? Fools and hirelings would extol him as the strong man sent by Providence; for three days he would hear nothing about butter famine, shortage of cattle, speculation in veal, rise in price of poultry and pigs' tails; he would no longer hear nothing but the cry from the soul of the nation for a food dictator—who, of course, should not be a far-sighted captain of industry or big merchant, but an efficient field marshal behind the front. The Bardolphs and Pistols of Pan Germany would hail him with hosannas. And if, at the end of the week, the success promised by a hundred lickspittles had not arrived, the chancellor would, nevertheless, have hoarded up the applause, and would blame the navy, which had promised more than it could achieve.

Any fool would be capable of enacting such a farce. A courageous man, one of strong heart, is he who sticks to the determination not to yield to artificially stimulated popular clamor, but to do what is necessary, what does not glitter, what does not penetrate until later into the brains of the political mob. Is it to be a matter of "student honor," or is there to be careful reflection whether the complaint brought to the Imperial Government is justified? No essentially new concession that might be considered a sign of weak yielding in us is asked; the contention is merely advanced that something already promised has not been fulfilled because it was not possible to fulfill it within the bounds of the method of sea warfare chosen. If this contention is shown to be justified, atonement must be made for a mistake. And Germany never shirks such a duty.

There can be no doubt that President Wilson is speaking for all neutral nations of both hemispheres, having come to an understanding with them before he wrote his note of complaint. (To be sure, only one European nation has as yet definitely signified its agreement with him, viz, Monaco. "As a ruler, as an explorer of the seas and savant, I join you in the complaint which your noble feeling for human dignity causes you to make against the shameful attacks by Germany on neutral rights, the honor of mariners, and the conscience of humanity."

Albert Honorius, ruler of all the inhabitants of Monaco, lessor of the most famous gambling house and brothel, formerly our friend, telegraphed to the White House at Washington the above words. Olet; non dolet. It is unavoidable for us to fall out with all of them; but we will not tremble. But if, without overpowering provocation but on account of questions of advantage or points of honor, we bring upon ourselves the enmity of the New World, we shall then be playing the trump card of our foes. What does the enemy desire? That we fall out with America—and a quarrel with the United States would automatically bring one with the South American nations. What would bitterly disillusion our enemy and make him resign himself to fate? The fact that we had found firm foundations for an understanding with America.

England muddled along about conscription because she hoped that her answer on the question would be made easier if the United States raised a million men to fight us. If we come to an agreement quickly and genuinely with the Americans, the dispute of America and all other neutrals against England will at once flame forth again, and England will have to loosen her commercial blockade and forego her prying into cargoes, which only Sweden refuses to tolerate. Then she can breathe again, for bottoms for her cargoes and means of nourishment will be assured to her. Of that more will be said later, and steps must be taken to prevent U any longer being made into X.

NO JOY OF VICTORY IN DROWNING WOMEN.

If we blunder blindly into new enmities, we play England's game. The effects of the break would be enormous; they would be felt in southeastern Europe, in the heart of Canada, Australia, Japan (to whose account a gigantic part of the over-seas arms and ammunition supplied to our foes must be placed), China, India, and Africa. Equally momentous for us would be the effect of a firm agreement. Yet it must not be prepared and received with a wry face; we do not wish to do what the enemy desires, but we also wish to swallow no poisoned pill. There must be neither untruthfulness nor underhand dealings. Let us fight whenever it is inevitable, but never when it can be avoided; let us wage no fight in which only frightfulness can bring victory. Should victory hinge upon the pitiless drowning of all defenseless men and women, old people and children, from neutral lands, in order to frighten every ship away from traffic with England, then millions of good Germans would feel no joy in such a victory, and many a daring submarine commander would gladly exchange such hard duty for a watery grave. Never again could Germany assume her old position in the human race and live in communion with others, for she would then not only have sundered herself from the law of nations, but have broken a word that ought to have been binding upon her as an oath.

This should have been foreseen before that word was pledged, now it is too late. If our position is shown to be untenable it must be evacuated with the proud mein of him who has conquered himself. The bravest generals have often acted thus, and have blamed the general who did not. They never hesitated before the phantom of "honor" that might change from the coat-of-arms to the funeral procession of a nation.

SENSITIVE, SWORDLESS, YET COURAGEOUS SOULS.

Let the sword be the instrument of the brain, the general the helper of the statesman. And whosoever deems the sword a rusty thing, no longer worthy of the new human race, let him not tax us for that reason with possessing a cowardly soul. Since every day the belief grows that military means are not sufficient to bring war's horrors to a successful end, necessity is forcing us to look upon reason as the root of politics, forcing us to the conviction that within our boundaries there are worthy, morally sensitive, swordless, yet courageous souls.

In President Wilson's eyes war is a terrible crime, that bloody survival from the tales of knights, robbers, and ghosts against which Goethe once warned America's enthusiastic youth. He would apply international law and have a tribunal for laying it down and guaranteeing its execution. Are we to revile him for that? To-morrow 100,000,000 people will rally about him. Is he to be criticized for harboring the idea now and then that, after a triumphant war in Europe, all-powerful Germany would some day turn threateningly toward America and covet the hemisphere, discovered after the rest of the world, as an outlet for her long-repressed lust of power? He is mistaken (as an American, not as a slave of England); he will live to see our interests in harmony with his. When everybody has realized that even the strongest coalition can not conquer us despite the longest struggle, that the majority of voices in a debate is not, as it appeared to be in the days of the two groups of great powers, the expression of superior strength, then we may without fear of being misunderstood acknowledge our readiness for organized peace, such as will secure to each State its sovereignty. We will try every path that may lead toward this goal, willingly and without prejudice. If our answering note to America should show this willingness in words worthy of the great issue at stake (without foolish trimmings and distrustful fripperies) it would mean an appreciable step forward, and before the end of the summer one of the heads of the military bogy would be hacked off.

Plentiful declarations of war have not turned the fifth chancellor of the German Empire from his wish to mix ethics with politics. German history and German genius will thank him if what now is weakness becomes the strength of a giant. Two rulers, essentially similar in mind, may easily come to an agreement in the dwelling place of free nations.

"Peace be with you!" Must martyrs die on the threshold of every new doctrine? The seat of Paul is empty.

WHITMAN NATIONAL FOREST, OREG.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN and Mr. FLETCHER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor. Does he yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask the Senator from Oklahoma to yield to me to ask unanimous consent to take up a purely local bill which has passed the House of Representatives. It is Calendar No. 712.

Mr. OWEN. If it leads to no debate, I shall yield to the Senator.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 16732) authorizing an adjustment of the boundaries of the Whitman National Forest, in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE FEDERAL FARM-LOAN ACT.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Florida if the matter he desires considered will lead to no debate.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to call up Senate concurrent resolution No. 26, providing for the printing of additional copies of what is known as the Federal farm-loan act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida?

There being no objection, Senate concurrent resolution No. 26 was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 150,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 500, Sixty-fourth Congress, entitled "The Federal farm-loan act," of which 50,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 100,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

PROPOSED PRINTING OF NEWSPAPER ARTICLE.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I should like to have printed——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor.

Mr. OWEN. I hope Senators will now permit us to proceed with the pending matter. I do not wish to seem to be ungracious at all, and I know that there are many of these small bills which it will only take a moment to dispose of. For that reason I have felt impelled to yield to Senators on both sides of the Chamber.

Mr. THOMPSON. Will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me merely to have an editorial printed in the RECORD without reading?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask to have printed in the RECORD without reading an editorial which has heretofore appeared in the Washington Post relative to stopping the recent threatened railroad strike.

Mr. GALLINGER. What is the article which the Senator from Kansas desires to have printed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks to have printed in the RECORD an editorial article appearing in the Washington Post relative to the strike situation.

Mr. GALLINGER. The strike situation is over, and I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

KAREN S. SORENSON AND JAMES LYLE.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me for the consideration of a small bill, which will not lead to any discussion?

Mr. OWEN. If it occasions no discussion, I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1636) for the relief of Karen S. Sorenson and James Lyle.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay $1,019.69 to Karen S. Sorenson and James Lyle, doing business as copartners at Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, under the firm name and style of Sorenson & Lyle, for use of marine railway, work done, and materials furnished in making necessary repairs to the schooner Charles Levi Woodbury, which schooner was damaged as the result of a collision with the U. S. S. Iroquois in the Pacific Ocean, off the coast of Kauai, Territory of Hawaii, on May 4, 1905.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEPOSITS IN NATIONAL AND STATE BANKS, ETC.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to submit, and to have printed in the RECORD, a letter from the Comptroller of the Currency, stating the amount of deposits in the banks of the country. It is a short statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to printing in the RECORD the document referred to by the Senator from Oklahoma? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The document referred to is as follows:

COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
Washington, September 5, 1916.

Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have received your request, transmitted through your secretary, for certain data in regard to the growth of deposits in national banks and State banks, trust companies, etc., from January, 1914, to the present time.

I am inclosing herewith a memorandum which I have had prepared, and which, I trust, will give you the information desired.

We receive reports from the State banks and trust companies only once each year, usually in June. The returns for 1916 are not yet complete, but in the attached memorandum we have estimated the increase in all States to be in the same proportion as the increase shown by the banks in the 37 States from which we have heard.

If there is any further information you desire in this connection, please advise.

With high regard,
Sincerely, yours,

JNO. SKELTON WILLIAMS.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. A. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills:

H. R. 1636. An act for the relief of Karen S. Sorenson, and James Lyle;

H. R. 1963. An act for the relief of John E. Keys;

H. R. 14824. An act to prevent fraud at public auctions in the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 16532. An act authorizing an adjustment of the boundaries of the Whitman National Forest, in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes.

CORRUPT PRACTICES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15842) to revise, amend, and codify the laws relating to publicity of contributions and expenditures made for the purpose of influencing the nomination and election of candidates for the offices of Senator and Representative in the Congress of the United States, etc.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senate to the unfinished business, which is the so-called corrupt-practices act. I do not really think there is anything in the bill to which any Senator could seriously object if he would consider it. Any amendments which are desired to be made to the bill by those who are friendly to the bill, and which would not weaken the bill, I shall be glad to accede to. I very much hope that Senators will not feel impelled to merely consume time for the purpose of preventing action on the bill. We have now had the bill under consideration for a day. A large part of the time on yesterday was consumed in efforts to delay action, and this morning over an hour was consumed by compelling the reading of the Journal, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] demanding that it be read slowly. I hope that course will not be persisted in. I think the country is entitled to action on this measure.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator from New Hampshire, I am informed, desires to address the Senate, and so I shall wait until he has concluded. I did not know that he desired to speak at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before proceeding, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, without reading, a table showing imports of merchandise and agricultural products in June, 1916 and 1915, under the Underwood law, as compared with June, 1913, under the Payne law. It is a very brief table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the table will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The table referred to is as follows:

Mr. GALLINGER. In June, 1915, but 5 of the above products showed an increase over imports in June, 1914, while in June, 1916, 28 products show an increase of over 100 per cent over June, 1913, and if this rate of increase continues as it has since October, 1915, it means the end of prosperity in the United States, and I doubt if anyone will contend that we are blessed with "the best tariff law ever passed" in this country, but will demand a tariff law that will protect our industries.

Mr. President, I desire to consume a little time in the legitimate discussion of this bill, and, first, I want to have a little friendly conversation with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] who has charge of the bill. I realize the fact that the Senator need not answer any question I may propound unless he sees proper to do so.

Mr. President, in New Hampshire we have very stringent laws against bribery, regulating contributions for political purposes, and providing for reports as to such contributions, which I shall call to the attention of the Senate after a little. First, I want to ask the Senator from Oklahoma if they have a stringent law on the matter of political contributions in his own State, if he cares to answer?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the law in the State of Oklahoma limits the amount of expenditures by a candidate for Senator to $3,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. To $3,000, as I understand it.

Mr. OWEN. I think that a similar limit is set on the amount that a candidate for governor may spend, and also, perhaps, upon the amount that may be spent by candidates for some other State offices, and a smaller amount for less important offices. I think the law there is a fairly good law, but I think the carrying out of the law anywhere largely depends upon the public sentiment of the State. There are many ingenious ways by which laws may be evaded, and that is the reason why we thought that the national act needed to be corrected and to have put in it a provision by which evasion could not be so easily carried out.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Oklahoma, as I understand, had much to do with the enactment of the law in his own State——

Mr. OWEN. The Senator is mistaken in that; I had not.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I am mistaken on that point. However that may be, if I have acquainted myself correctly with the facts, there was a vote in the Senator's State not long ago relating to a proposed amendment to the constitution of the State pertaining to the subject of elections. I am correct on that point, am I not?

Mr. OWEN. The Senator is.

Mr. GALLINGER. And it was defeated by a large majority——

Mr. OWEN. It was.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was defeated, notwithstanding it was recommended and urged by the Democratic legislature of that State.

Mr. President, in opening the debate a few days ago on this subject the Senator from Oklahoma openly declared that the Lumber Trust had sent $40,000 into his State to defeat him for reelection. The Senator subsequently modified that by saying that he did not mean to say that it was the Lumber Trust, but that that amount was contributed by certain men interested in the production of lumber who wanted to punish the Senator for his opposition to the former Senator from Illinois, Mr. Lorimer. I want to ask the Senator, in all good conscience, Mr. President, if that money was sent into the State of Oklahoma and the Senator knew of it why proceedings were not commenced against the offenders against the law?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the information which came to me, in the first instance, was offered by a man named Waugh. It was not in connection with the election, but in connection with the primaries. It was an attempt to defeat me at the primary.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; but it amounts to the same thing.

Mr. OWEN. The man who was used in that connection I regarded as a despicable character, and I was not willing to accept from him his own statements, although he claimed to have letters, telegrams, and so forth, corroborating what he had said. Afterwards I was informed by Mr. M. C. French, of Okmulgee, that he talked to the man who sent money in there, and that this man said money was sent. I believe it was sent by the same people who were behind Lorimer. They were not residents of the State, not amenable to its laws; it was secretly done, through secret agents, and the Federal law did not forbid it; but I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that his discussion and enlargement of that matter is really not discussing the bill itself. I would be glad if the Senator would endeavor to improve this bill by suggestions, if he will.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, well, Mr. President, I will conduct the discussion in my own way. The Senator was responsible for injecting that matter into the RECORD, stating that $40,000 had been sent into his State by the Lumber Trust, as he then said, to defeat his renomination. Afterwards he qualified that. Now he says that somebody told somebody that somebody sent and somebody received some money for that purpose. The bill of particulars is very vague and very unsatisfactory to me. I do not believe that any such transaction occurred in the State of Oklahoma as the Senator suggests.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator would believe that the Senator from Oklahoma spent the summer at the seaside. He is willing to make that statement on the floor here, when the Senator from Oklahoma has not spent the summer, or any part of the summer, at the seaside, having been at Atlantic City one day to address the bankers of New Jersey, and on Long Island one day to visit his family.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, that is neither here nor there. I have heretofore put in the RECORD the fact that the Senator has responded to about 37 per cent of the roll calls during the last six months; and he was somewhere; I do not know where he was, just as his colleague [Mr. GORE] deserted the Senate in the middle of the consideration of an important bill, reported by the committee of which he was chairman, and has responded to less than 35 per cent of the roll calls during the session.

Mr. OWEN. Oh, Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma sits on this floor and does not vote on all roll calls because the associate and colleague of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CATRON] is absent, and therefore the Senator from Oklahoma protects that Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator can not do his full duty when he is not in the Senate Chamber.

Mr. President, I have no disposition to enter into a personal controversy with the Senator. I want to get some facts concerning this matter. The limit of the law in Oklahoma, I believe, on the amount of money that can be expended in the primaries is $3,000. Now, Mr. President, the Senator had a competitor, at least there was a Republican running for the office of Senator, who, I suppose, was selected in the primary. I do not know him personally, but I have gone to the record and found that he made a sworn statement that he spent $2,822.54. I assume that he swore to the truth. Now, if $40,000 had been sent there, or any part of $40,000, and had been used for political purposes, it seems to me that it would be an easy matter to uncover it, and, with the Senator's usual vigor and his great ability as a lawyer, it occurs to me that that atrocious act ought to have been brought to the light and the guilty parties punished.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the Senator is confusing his facts somewhat. In the primary a Democrat runs against a Democrat.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. OWEN. And a Republican runs against a Republican.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. OWEN. The Republican candidate was a very good man, by the name of Dickinson—Judge Dickinson—a very respectable Republican, who is somewhat progressive, but when it came to the election the people of the State of Oklahoma elected me by a majority that ran 15,000 more than the majority given to President Wilson, there being about 15,000 Republicans who voted for me in that State, which is the best evidence of the fact that I had been a decent man in the State, because when Republicans will vote for a Democrat it is a pretty good guarantee that that Democrat is a pretty decent sort of a man. I will say, further, to the Senator that in the election after the primary I did not spend anything whatever, except for my traveling expenses in going around the State in behalf of the State campaign.

Mr. GALLINGER. That may be, Mr. President. I do not doubt the Senator got some Republican votes. It is a tribute to his popularity——

Mr. OWEN. I do not believe the Senator has great joy in it.

Mr. GALLINGER. And to his standing in the State.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to know if the Senator from New Hampshire has examined the facts, so that he can say how many States have corrupt-practices acts?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not made a comprehensive investigation as to that matter, but think most States have such laws.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from Oklahoma made a statement that astounded me. He said that a corrupt-practices act was on the statute books in each State, but those acts were not enforced, and his idea was to have a Federal law, so that the Federal courts would enforce the law of Oklahoma as well as the laws of other States.

Mr. OWEN. I made no such statement as the Senator is now attributing to me.

Mr. OVERMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. I understood him to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that there was such a law in the State of Oklahoma, but that it was evaded, and he wanted a national law so that it could be enforced. I should like to know as to that. I hope the Senator did not say it, but that is what I understood him to say, and I beg the Senator's pardon if I have misstated his attitude. I will ask the Senator from New Hampshire how he understood the statement of the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. GALLINGER. I understood it precisely as the Senator from North Carolina did.

Now, Mr. President, I know but little about Oklahoma or Oklahoma politics. I have no disposition to make any criticism that is not justified by the facts. I know that the Senator was reelected, and that he was elected over a very good man. As I understand, that very good man has made a sworn statement that he did not spend as much money as he was entitled to expend under the laws of Oklahoma. I presume the Senator does not question the correctness of that statement or the integrity of his opponent.

But, Mr. President, if conditions were as bad in Oklahoma as the Senator depicted a few days ago, and some wicked men sent $40,000 into that State to defeat his nomination, it is rather a singular circumstance that shortly afterwards a vote of the people of Oklahoma was taken on a proposition to strengthen their election law, a proposition recommended by a Democratic legislature, as I understand, and it was defeated by 40,000 majority.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the election law referred to by the Senator probably related to a section which was intended to establish certain qualifications as to suffrage which were supposed to be unfair to the illiterate classes. It was so interpreted by many of the people of the State, and it was for that reason that the people of the State voted it down, because they wanted to have perfectly fair treatment for everybody. I do not think the law would have been unfair except, perhaps, in an indirect way; but that was the sentiment of the people of the State, and they voted it down. It is far from being a discredit to the people of the State.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, I am not going to enter into the question of the laws of Oklahoma as regards elections. I have read enough to know that they are about as bad as they can be, and that while the Senator is here contending and clamoring for pure elections——

Mr. OWEN. The Senator must not say that the Senator from Oklahoma is here pretending, because the Senator from New Hampshire is out of order. The Senator from Oklahoma is not making any pretense.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, I have not yielded to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEA of Tennessee in the chair). The Senator from New Hampshire has the floor.

Mr. OWEN. I call the Senator to order.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator forgets the rules of the Senate when he undertakes to interrupt me without my consent.

Mr. OWEN. I call the Senator to order.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator can not call me to order when I have not transgressed the rules.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator can not attribute an improper motive to a Senator on this floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. If it is attributing an improper motive to a Senator to say that he is contending for something——

Mr. OWEN. I thought the Senator said "pretending."

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not; I said "contending."

Mr. OWEN. Then I withdraw my comment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator ought to do so. The Senator is contending for what he calls pure elections; and yet it is a notorious fact that the laws of Oklahoma disqualify a large number of people who, under the Constitution and laws of the country, have a right to vote. The Senator knows that.

Mr. OWEN. I do not, and the Senator does not.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has not read the laws of his own State, then.

Mr. OWEN. Oh, yes; he knows the law sufficiently well.

Mr. GALLINGER. They are very lax and unfair.

Now, Mr. President, already one amendment has been made to this proposed law, with the consent of the Senator from Oklahoma, and that is that it shall not take effect until January 1, 1917. Why, that is a most extraordinary provision in a law that is intended, Mr. President, to purify the elections in this country and to prevent corrupt practices. It is a most astounding suggestion to me that the corrupt practices can be allowed to continue for three months by statute law.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the Senator surely does not feel willing to give an interpretation to that provision that is impossible. It only directed that the amount which a Senator or a Representative might expend should be fixed by the present law during this campaign, but that the inhibition against the corrupt practices forbidden by this act should go into immediate effect.

Mr. GALLINGER. But the corrupt practices relate to the amount being used, from the standpoint of the Senator.

Mr. OWEN. Oh, no.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is largely what constitutes a corrupt practice.

Mr. OWEN. Oh, no.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I seldom allude to myself in the Senate of the United States. I have never thought it was necessary to issue a broadside, such as one Senator has done, showing the wonderful things that he has accomplished during his incumbency of the office of Senator. I never have found it necessary to use the franking privilege to circulate material throughout my State calculated to secure votes at elections. Departing, however, from my usual custom, I want to say that there may be great corruption in some parts of this country of which, in the very nature of things, I would not have knowledge, unless the facts were brought to my attention; but however that may be it has not been necessary for me to use money in elections in New Hampshire.

I was elected twice to the House of Representatives, with a sharp contest each time, and I have been elected five times to the Senate of the United States, and I have not found it necessary to use a dollar illegitimately in any one of those contests. In fact I have used very few dollars for any purpose. Hence, I am naturally somewhat surprised to learn from the Senator from Oklahoma that in his own State, with a very stringent corrupt-practices act on the statute books, and he a distinguished lawyer, with knowledge, he says, at least from a statement made to him by one disreputable and by one reputable citizen of his State, that $40,000 was sent into that State to defeat his renomination—I am surprised beyond measure to know that the laws of his State have not been invoked to punish those criminals and to purify matters in his own State, before he undertakes to purify them in other States.

The statutes of New Hampshire are very specific on this subject. We have had on our statute books for a great many years a statute against bribery at elections; and at the polling places in New Hampshire, Mr. President, that statute is read on the morning of election day before a single vote is cast, so that the people who come there for the purpose of exercising the right of suffrage may fully understand what the law of the State is and what the penalties are; and, if they violate the law, they are subject to prosecution under the law, and some prosecutions have resulted.

Chapter 99 of the Public Statutes of New Hampshire says:

Any person guilty of offering, giving, or accepting a bribe, or of aiding or abetting bribery, or of attempting or conspiring to bribe, with intent to influence the vote of any person at any election, caucus, convention, or primary election shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not more than $500 nor less than $100 and be imprisoned in the county jail not less than 30 nor more than 90 days for each offense.

CHAP. 99, SEC. 2. Any person convicted under the provisions of the foregoing section shall thereafter be forever disqualified from holding any civil office in this State and from exercising the right of suffrage.

CHAP. 99, SEC. 3. No witness in any proceeding under this act or in any proceeding for violation of the election laws shall be excused from giving his testimony upon the ground that such testimony would incriminate him, but no such testimony shall be used against such witness at any time or in any prosecution. And any person who voluntarily discloses the facts to the proper authorities, and procures a conviction in any such proceeding, shall not be prosecuted for his connection with the bribery or attempted bribery.

Mr. President, that is a pretty stringent law. It is not a law of recent origin, either. It was placed on our statute books a good many years ago, I think before the Senator from Oklahoma became so intensely interested in getting a Federal statute to govern the elections in my State.

I turn again, Mr. President, to the public statutes of the State of New Hampshire, and I find some further legislation on this subject. Let me read:

If any person shall directly or indirectly give spirituous liquor to a voter—

If that is not in the Senator's bill, it ought to be in it. Perhaps it is in it.

If any person shall directly or indirectly give spirituous liquor to a voter at any time with a view to influence any election, or as a treat for his vote, or for the honors bestowed on any candidate at such election, he shall be fined not exceeding $20 for each offense.

SEC. 11. If any person shall directly or indirectly hire, procure, induce, or in any way influence or attempt to hire, procure, induce, or in any way influence, by payment, promises, offers of emolument, offers of reward of any kind, loans of money or other thing, threats or intimidations, any voter to stay away from any town meeting, or to avoid voting at any town meeting, or to vote at any town meeting for or against any particular ticket or candidate for office, or to ask, in order to disqualify himself from voting at any election, the abatement of his taxes, or to be excused from paying taxes, such person shall be fined not exceeding $500, or be imprisoned not exceeding three months.

SEC. 12. If any person shall directly or indirectly contribute or furnish, or promise to contribute or furnish, any money, goods, chattels, or other thing whatsoever to be used to induce any voter to stay away from any town meeting, or to avoid voting at any town meeting, or to vote at any town meeting for or against any particular ticket or candidate for office, or to ask, in order to disqualify himself from voting at any election, the abatement of his taxes, or to be excused from paying taxes, such person shall be fined not exceeding $500, or be imprisoned not exceeding three months.

Mr. President, there is much more to the same effect in the statutes of New Hampshire covering this matter. I can not conceive, for the life of me, why we need a Federal statute to govern the elections in my State. All the provisions that seem to be necessary are incorporated. There is a chapter on political advertising in newspapers; there is a chapter on campaign contributions by corporations, enacted a great many years ago. I want to read it. I do not believe the Senator's bill improves on it. Here it is:

No corporation incorporated under the laws of or doing business in this State, and no officer, director, agent, or employee of and acting in behalf of such corporation, shall pay or contribute or authorize or direct to be paid or contributed any sum of money or any check, draft, note, or other article of value to any political party, committee, or to any individual or corporation for the purpose or with the intention of having such money, or any part thereof, or such check, draft, note, or other article of value, or any part thereof, expended or used for the purpose of aiding or promoting or of preventing or opposing the nomination or election of any person to public office established by or under the authority of the constitution or laws of this State or of the United States, or expended or used for the purpose of promoting or antagonizing the interests of any political party.

No person shall solicit or receive payment of any sum of money or the delivery of any check, draft, note, or other article of value for the purposes specified in the preceding paragraph from any corporation incorporated under the laws of or doing business in this State or from any officer, director, agent, or employee of such corporation and on its behalf.

Any corporation violating any of the provisions of this act shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $3,000 for each offense; and any individual violating any of the provisions of this act shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding six months.

The statutes of New Hampshire may have, in some minor particulars, been changed from what I have read; but what I have cited is substantially correct.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to ask the Senator whether he thinks, because the State of New Hampshire has a good corrupt-practices act, that that constitutes a reason why the United States Government should not have one?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have several times said in this Chamber that I believed I was almost the only State rights man in this body. I have been astounded to see the Democratic Senators one by one apparently abandon the ancient doctrine of State rights, and consent to legislation transferring the affairs of this great country from the hands of the several States and placing them in the hands of the Federal Government. I will say to the Senator that I see no reason why every State in the American Union should not have as strict State laws as the State of Oklahoma or the State of New Hampshire, and I believe that will be the result in the very near future.

Mr. OWEN. I will ask the Senator if he thinks a State which has no corrupt-practices act, and where a Senatorship can be bought and sold, ought to have the right to send a Senator on this floor to vote upon the affairs of New Hampshire, which has such a good corrupt-practices act?

Mr. GALLINGER. I know of no State where Senators purchase their elections to this body, but there may be such instances. It was stated in this Chamber the other day that a long time ago the Senate was dominated by men of that class. I have been here a long time, almost 26 years. I am a poor man, as the world goes nowadays. I have associated with the rich men and the poor men in this body, and my observation has been, Mr. President, that the allegation that was made that the rich men who came to this body did nothing in the matter of legislation, but simply disported themselves upon the ill-gotten gains that they had received, has no foundation in fact. I have associated on committees, I have associated in this Chamber, with very rich men, and I have found them as a rule just as much interested in the affairs of the Government, just as much interested in the legislation of this body, as those of us who belong to a different class, so far as money is concerned.

Mr. President, I get tired of this talk about "predatory wealth," about the men who are accumulating vast sums of money and using it illegitimately in the matter of elections. I have had very little experience in that direction. For 18 long years I served as chairman of the Republican State committee of New Hampshire, and the men that I found least disposed to separate themselves from their money for political purposes were the rich men. It may be that somewhere else—it may be that in Oklahoma or some other State—they open their pocketbooks or resort to their check books to corrupt the ballot, but my observation has been that as a rule it was the men of moderate means who made contributions to the funds of State campaigns.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. OWEN. The Globe-Democrat announced, in their issue of September 5, in a very complimentary article with regard to Mr. R. C. Kerens, that he had contributed fully $500,000 to the Republican Party. He is a good man, too, I should like to say, because I knew Mr. Kerens very well, but he was a very generous man. I only call the attention of the Senator to the contribution to show that some of these gentlemen do contribute very liberally—more than perhaps a private citizen would be justified in contributing—and it lays the natural foundation that a man should ask for political preferment if he makes very large contributions. I think that is a trait of human nature. I do not think it is peculiar to any party.

I think when men show their interest by making very large contributions it does become a foundation for their preferment. Mr. Kerens was made ambassador to Austria, and I have no doubt he filled the office well, because I think he was thoroughly competent to fill any office that he might care to hold.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Kerens is dead. Did I understand the Senator to say that Mr. Kerens had contributed $500,000?

Mr. OWEN. The Globe-Democrat, in a complimentary article on him, said that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the books of the Republican national committee do not show that.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I remind the Senator that the books of the national committee do not show these contributions, and that is the trouble about it. The books of the national committee do show $100,000 from Morgan & Co., $100,000 from Perkins, and $100,000 from George Gould and other men—gigantic sums considering the ordinary citizen—but while they do show that, they do not show what may be contributed inside of State lines. They may make any contribution. That is the thing I am objecting to and hoping that we might have a limitation upon the amount contributed inside of State lines.

Mr. GALLINGER. What I was addressing myself to was especially the contributions that are made for purposes within the State. Undoubtedly, large contributions have been made to national committees for the nomination and election of Presidents. There is no question about that. I think a great deal more money has been spent than ought to have been spent along those lines. For instance, I have here in the testimony that was taken by the committee investigating this matter a statement that is most illuminating. I do not think it often happens, and it ought never to happen, but I doubt very much whether the Senator's bill would reach a case of this kind. It is the testimony of Mr. Thomas Fortune Ryan, of Oak Ridge, Va., a very rich Democrat. He says:

I went to the St. Louis convention of 1904 as a delegate from Virginia. Judge Parker was a prominent candidate for the Presidency at that time, and his friends, who sought to enlist me in his campaign, had come to me. I opposed his nomination and I was not in favor of his nomination. I was in favor of my friend, Senator Gorman's nomination—of Maryland—because of his long service to the party and his great abilities. Judge Parker was nominated at St. Louis. I took no part in aiding his nomination and I made no commitment to furnish campaign funds for the campaign. After the committees were organized in New York, however, I made a contribution of $50,000, which I thought was all that could reasonably be expected of me. Later on I contributed in small amounts during the early part of the campaign up to, I should say, $100,000. Toward the end of the campaign the members of the committee came to me and said, when it was perfectly evident that Judge Parker could not be elected, that the campaign would collapse unless they had financial aid, and I made up my mind, in the interest of the Democratic Party, and through the Democratic Party the interest of the people, as I believed the principles of the party to be the best for the interests of the people of this country, I made up my mind to give further aid, just before the close of the campaign, so that the workers, the party workers throughout the country, who were trying to keep the Democratic Party together, should have the aid that they thought necessary, and I contributed in the neighborhood of $350,000 and paid the debts of the committee, so that on the day before election every debt the Democratic national committee had was paid, and the party workers were reasonably satisfied, and I did that because I did not want to see the Democratic Party disintegrate.

And I notice that the chairman asked Mr. Ryan:

Your first contribution, I understood you to say, was $50,000?
Mr. RYAN. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. Was that made solely by yourself or on behalf of anyone else, or in association with anyone else?
Mr. RYAN. Every dollar up to the $450,000 was made by myself, collected from no corporation and no individual.

That is a most extraordinary case. Four hundred and fifty thousand dollars to help the Democratic Party elect a President.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, does the Senator think that is a good system of government? Does the Senator approve of that?

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggested that I thought it was a bad precedent, but I doubt very much whether the Senator's bill would prevent money being used in that way.

Mr. OWEN. It makes it a criminal offense for any individual to contribute over $5,000, and I would be willing to put it at $1,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator's bill provide that a man shall not pay the debts of the Democratic committee after the campaign is closed? That is what Mr. Ryan says he did. He allowed the committee to run in debt, using their money either properly or improperly, and when he found the committee had exhausted their funds and had become involved to the extent of $450,000, more or less, he paid up their debts.

Mr. OWEN. As I understand the Senator, because of his views on State rights he is opposed to any Federal corrupt-practices act?

Mr. GALLINGER. No; I am opposed to the kind of a bill the Senator is advocating. I want to say this to the Senator now, in all seriousness and in all candor: If we had time to consider this bill in all its bearings, in all its phases, in all its ramifications, I would have no objection whatever to giving time for that purpose; but I beg to call the Senator's attention to the fact, which I believe I called to his attention the other day, and he took offense apparently at my suggestion, that we have been here for nine long, weary months. I have been in my seat every day but one during that time, and I am not by any means the youngest Member of this body. I have seen the Democratic majority fritter away not only days but weeks and months of valuable time since December last, and if the Senator from Oklahoma had been here, as he ought to have been here, there would have been a great many opportunities for him to get at this bill and give us time to discuss it properly.

Mr. OWEN. Oh, no; Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. But the Senator comes in during the expiring days of a long, weary session of Congress and says he is going to have this bill, nolens volens. He is going to insist that it shall be passed, and it can only be passed in that way, without proper and adequate discussion.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield.

Mr. OWEN. I decline to believe the Senator from New Hampshire would willingly misrepresent the attitude of the Senator from Oklahoma. On the very first day of this session I caused that bill to be introduced. It was reported at the last Congress, at my instance and urgent request, and no action was taken on it. Then it was reported last May. I went before the Committee on Committees—or the steering committee, as it is sometimes called—and they agreed to make it a part of the program. I took it before the committee of conference on the Democratic side, and they agreed to make it a part of the legislative program; but I was informed, and I think it was true, that it was deferred because of the hostility of the gentlemen on that side. If I am wrong about that, I should be glad to be corrected; but I do think that the Senator ought not to charge the Senator from Oklahoma with laches or negligence or indifference about it, because he acted on the first day of the session and he has done what he could, in his very feeble and limited way, to bring this matter to a consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have once corrected the statement that the Senator has just made, and I will correct it once again, and that will be the last time. The Senator says that the Democratic steering committee did not add this bill to their program because of opposition on this side of the Chamber. I have put in the RECORD precisely what the Democratic steering committee submitted to the minority of this body, without any prior consultation with any member of the minority, so far as I know, and their program did not include the corrupt-practices act. The Senator must know that; at least he knows that I made that uncontradicted statement some days ago.

Mr. OWEN. I have had conflicting statements about it, and I do not wish to raise issues of veracity between Senators. I simply gave the impression that I had from statements that had been made to me.

Mr. GALLINGER. As already stated by me, I put in the RECORD not long ago—and the Senator will find it there—the proposition that came to the minority from the Democratic majority, word for word, syllable for syllable, comma for comma, and it did not contain this bill as a part of the Democratic legislative program.

Mr. OWEN. My understanding was that when this program was submitted to the minority it was due to numerous conferences that had taken place and a fixed belief on the part of those who presented it that it was impossible for them to get any agreement if the corrupt-practices act were included.

Mr. GALLINGER. I know of no such conferences. There was one thing that the minority did insist upon, and that was that the immigration bill should be added to the program. That is the bill we ought to be considering to-day instead of the bill of the Senator from Oklahoma. The country is demanding that that bill shall become a law. There is almost a universal demand on the part of the people of the United States for its passage. True, the President of the United States does not want it to become a law and does not want it passed, because he does not want to veto it, as he has said he would, just before an election. But I say to the Senator from Oklahoma that that is the bill that we ought to be considering at the present time instead of the bill which the Senator is advocating and which is receiving more or less opposition on both sides of the Chamber.

Mr. OWEN. Apparently two-thirds of the Senate were willing to take it up, and that would indicate that two-thirds of the Senate are desirous of passing on it, and only a filibuster will prevent its passing now.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it will not require two-thirds of the Senate to take up the immigration bill; and if I were in charge of that bill, which I am not, I certainly should move to take it up and displace the present unfinished business, because I think it is a bill of infinitely greater consequence than the one now under consideration to the people of this country. It is of infinitely greater consequence to the morality and intellectual probity of the people who go to the polls and cast their votes in these United States. The idea of admitting from a quarter of a million to a million people from the slums of southern Europe every year, and not requiring them to have intelligence enough to read a single line in any language—and that is all we require—is an insult to the intelligence of the Congress of the United States when they refuse to pass that bill. So, I say, if the Senator from Oklahoma wants to purify the electorate of this country, if he wants to improve the quality of the men who make laws in this country, he ought to give his consent and his willing support to passing an immigration law which requires that when men come, most of them ignorant and many of them vicious, to the United States from the slums of southern Europe, they ought at least to show some degree of intelligence before they are permitted to cast their ballots to elect Presidents, Senators, Representatives in Congress, and other officials.

I again say, Mr. President, that what we ought to be considering, and what we ought to have been considering during the last three or four days, if not before, is the immigration bill, which has been strangled because the President of the United States does not want to veto it just before an election. That is all there is to it.

Mr. President, I have said pretty much all I care to say. I have the same rights in this Chamber that the Senator from Oklahoma has, and he has the same rights that I have. We differ on a great many propositions. The Senator from Oklahoma, if he had his way, would turn the government of this country upside down.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield.

Mr. OWEN. If the Senator will pardon me, I would have this Government so conducted that the pyramid to which it may be compared would rest upon a square, sound foundation, and that the top should rest upon those beneath, not as rulers, not as those governing, but as the public servants of those who are beneath, and who ought to be served by those who hold the honors and the dignities of the people of this country.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have not the document in my desk—I carried it here for a good while, but it has been mislaid—showing exactly what the Senator from Oklahoma would do if he had the power, so far as the Government of the United States is concerned. The Senator knows what his views are. He knows that they are not in accordance with the conservative sentiment of either the Democratic or the Republican Party in this country. The Senator is a free-lance, and I do not believe the Senator has any greater desire to build that pyramid and to have it what it ought to be than some of the rest of us who do not share his extreme socialistic views.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma can not be classed as entertaining the views of the Socialists. The Senator from Oklahoma believes in the fundamental doctrine that the sovereignty of the people of this country is a real truth, and that the mechanism ought to be provided by which that sovereignty can be intelligently expressed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator and I are wide apart.

Mr. OWEN. I am glad of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. So am I. The Senator is an "uplifter" and I am not. I want to see things go along in their normal and natural course. The thought of this country is a progressive thought. There is an evolution in the human mind in this intelligent Nation of ours, and when better laws than are on the statute books become necessary there is no doubt that the people will place them there. There is no question about that; but it is not necessary to do it in a violent and revolutionary way.

As I said a moment ago, Mr. President, I have been here every day but one during this session, and I propose to leave to-morrow morning whether the session closes or not; but before going I wanted to put on record the few thoughts that I have expressed, without preparation and without any intention of being offensive to anybody.

If every State in the American Union has not a law that makes bribery at elections a crime, every State in the American Union ought to have such a law; and I give the Senator credit for the belief that I entertain that the discussion that has been had here during the last two or three days will have a tendency to call the attention of the people of the several States renewedly to the fact that they ought to have proper legislation on this subject. But I do not believe—and I can not bring myself to believe that the Senator from Oklahoma seriously believes—that as we are gathering up the expiring embers of a nine months' session, men on this side having sat here during the superheated season to help maintain a quorum of this body in order that business might be done—I do not believe the Senator from Oklahoma in his heart believes that in these closing hours a great question such as is involved in this bill should be forced to a vote because the Senator from Oklahoma or anyone else demands that it shall be done.

Mr. President, I sat here a few days ago registering my vote against the proposition, and saw a bill as important as any that has ever passed the legislative bodies of this country and received the assent of a President of the United States forced through both Houses of Congress because the President of the United States and four men, representing four brotherhoods of trainmen, demanded that it should be done and that it should be done that very day. That kind of legislation I do not approve of. I believe in deliberate legislation. I believe in discussion adequate to present all phases of every question that comes before the Congress of the United States. I repeat to the Senator, and it is my closing words, that if when we have time to take up his bill, consider it in all its details and ramifications, discuss it fairly and adequately, I shall not occupy the position of opposing it; but I believe that to force it through the Congress of the United States at the present time would be a proceeding unwarranted and unwise and one that I shall not support.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the remarks just made by the Senator from New Hampshire, to the effect that he had in the last two or three days witnessed the forcing through Congress of an important law by four men representing the railroad brotherhoods of the country, merits a moment's consideration. An attempt is studiously being made to give the country to understand that the representatives of the railway employees came to Congress with certain demands, and told Congress if it did not accede to their demands they would immediately call a strike. It is further impudently asserted that because of that threat thus made Congress, in a cringing and cowardly manner, and without any consideration, enacted the so-called eight-hour law.

I have already taken occasion to call attention to the facts as they exist, not as they may be imagined or willfully misstated. Nevertheless I desire again to state the case as it is, and in the light of the plain facts which I shall relate the inference which is left in the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire can not be given any credence or weight.

Now, what are the plain, cold facts? Four hundred and fifty thousand railway men, organized in their various societies, handle the trains of this country. These men for many years have been organized. They have, during all that time, as organized bodies, negotiated with the managements of the various railways with reference to the wages to be paid, the hours of labor, and other conditions of employment. Speaking broadly they have had written contracts with the railway companies, and again speaking broadly, for there are some exceptions, these contracts have run for the period of one year, with the right of either party to terminate the contract by giving 30 days' notice.

Many months ago notice was served upon the railway managements by the representatives of the men that they desired an eight-hour day for all men engaged in the hazardous business of moving trains. It is only fair to say that—at least by implication, if not by direction—they gave the railway companies to understand that they expected the 8-hour day, without any reduction of the pay which now goes with a 10-hour day. That marks the second step in the procedure.

The third step was the meeting of the representatives of the companies and the representatives of the men to endeavor to compose their differences and arrive at an understanding. That meeting resulted in absolute disagreement. Thereupon the representatives of the men took what they call a referendum vote, submitting to the various 450,000 employees the question whether authority should be given to call a strike in the event the eight-hour day was not conceded. The result of that referendum vote was an overwhelming majority in favor of conferring the authority upon the representatives of the men to order a strike if the eight-hour day was not conceded.

Then came the third phase of the controversy, namely, both sides prepared for battle. The railway companies began to take all the steps usual when a disaster in the nature of a strike is impending. It is not necessary to go into details. We know what these steps are. Among other things it is the refusal to receive freight of a perishable character, to be followed by a refusal to receive other varieties of freight, to be followed very shortly by a refusal to receive any freight, and running along coincident with this line of preparation generally you find them organizing men for the purpose of breaking the strike. That usually implies the employment of armed men who are to take the places of the men who strike. I said armed men; at least men who are armed or who are backed by those who are armed.

This, then, was the condition of affairs. The two parties to this controversy had advanced on the field of battle. They stood there, figuratively speaking, in martial array, waiting merely the advent of the 4th day of September to begin that fight. Up to that time neither side had appealed to the President, neither side had appealed to Congress. I also emphatically state that up to this present moment neither side has appealed to the President, neither side has appealed to Congress, neither side has made any demand on the President, and neither side has made any demand on Congress. Any man who asserts they did is either ignorant of the facts or willfully misstates the case.

But, Mr. President, when these two lines of battle had been formed, when the conflict was about to begin, it was apparent to every man with ordinary perception that when that fight did begin the men on either side of it would not be the ones injured most. Between those two battle lines lay the great body of the American people, with all the rights of innocent bystanders, and with more than the rights of innocent bystanders—with the right, under the laws of the country, to have the great public highways of the country kept open. Not as the representative of the men, neither as the representative of the railroads; not because of interest in the men nor because of interest in the companies, but solely because of interest in and representation of the hundred million people of this country who were not parties to the conflict on either side, the President stepped in and undertook to compose the difficulties and avert a national calamity. If he had not done so, he would be denounced by every man on the other side of the Chamber; he would be at this moment subject to the denunciation, the cavilling, the criticism, and the whining abuse of Mr. Hughes, the candidate of the Republican Party.

When the President stepped in he found both sides rigidly adhering to their positions. He finally in his own mind conceived what he thought to be a plan which he thought just and that would avert the calamity. He said, as I say, as you say when you are home talking to your people—for none of you dare say anything else when you are home talking to your people—that the eight-hour day is a thing that is bound to come in this country. Particularly is the eight-hour day certain to be applied in those occupations which require a great strain upon the brain and the muscle and the nerve of the employee. That is a thing inevitably to come, and it is especially certain to come in employments like that of running railway trains, because no man ought to sit at the throttle of an engine for a longer space of time than eight hours when his engine draws a freightage of human beings. After eight hours of such labor the brain may become dull, the eye may become uncertain, the nerve may fail; if there be only an instant's lapse of attention there may follow the calamity, the shriek, the grinding of bones, and the death of innocent people.

Statistics prove beyond any question that the great majority of railway accidents in this country and all over the world have occurred when the responsible party had been worked beyond the powers of ordinary human endurance.

Now, the President said to the railway companies, "Concede the eight-hour day," and he said to the men, "If the railways will concede the eight-hour day, will you declare this strike off and give us time to arbitrate all other questions?" The men agreed to this, and further agreed to arbitrate the question of overtime pay. The railway management said they would not arbitrate unless the eight-hour day was included in the arbitration, and also a great many other questions that had been for a long time settled by agreements voluntarily made. The men said they would include everything except the eight-hour day.

In that state of affairs the negotiation failed; and then the President, not at the demand of the men, not at the demand of the railway presidents, but as the representative of the innocent bystanders, who in this case were the 100,000,000 people of the United States, came to Congress and said, in this emergency, "I ask you to help not the men, not the companies, but the public, the people of the United States." Congress had to confront that issue.

Congress knew there would be no strike if the eight-hour day was granted. Congress knew if it did not pass a law providing for an eight-hour day there would be a strike, and so Congress enacted an eight-hour statute and prevented the strike. But at the same time we provided for the creation of a board to study all questions in dispute and to ascertain, among other things, how much the legal establishment of the eight-hour day would cost the railway companies and how the plan would work out. We did this not to the end of again abolishing the eight-hour day. That is never going to be done in this country until standpat Republicanism dares emerge from the shadows in which it took refuge from the wrath of the people to again take up the servile tasks in which it was so long employed. Because of what the Democratic administration did the strike did not occur. There is not a man on the other side of this Chamber but would have voted for the law if the responsibility for averting the strike or permitting it to go on had been directly on his party. But the majority of those on the other side fondly hoped that a strike would occur during a Democratic administration. Accordingly they did all they could to prevent any remedial legislation.

Being unable to realize their hopes, they now try to make a virtue of their cruel disregard of the welfare of the people, and hence raise the false issue, "You surrendered the majesty of the law and Congress to the demands of union labor." They also raise the cry that we passed legislation without investigation. Again I state the case: The only legislation we passed was the eight-hour day and the creation of a tribunal to investigate how, after a practical test, that eight-hour day works.

Of course you can not find out how it will work out in a practical test until you have a practical test. You can not have an investigation of how it will work until you have produced the conditions for such a test.

So what, then, did we really do? We adopted an eight-hour day, and they say we did that without investigation. The oldest question there is before the American people that is unsettled is the question of the eight-hour day. It has been debated in every country grammar school, it has been debated in every college, it has been debated on every street corner and at the forks of the creek the old fellows who whittle sticks and spit tobacco juice at cracks have discussed it from morning until night. It has been discussed, and intelligently discussed, for 10 or 15 years in this country. There is not any new light to be shed on it. It is a question of humanity on one side and of brutality upon the other side. Applied to the case in point, it is a question of whether you will in the hot days of August put a man in the cab of an engine close up against a boiler that carries 200 pounds of steam, just over a white-hot furnace, and require him to remain there for more than eight hours and at the same time demand that for every instant his eye must be alert, his every faculty at its keenest and highest tension.

I talked the other night with a man who is manifestly to-day more than half a nervous wreck. He is still a young man. He used to pull the twentieth century limited, the 18-hour train between Chicago and New York. He told me that by actual mathematics it could be demonstrated that upon that run the engineer holding that throttle had to read and record in his own brain six signals every second. Every second! That frequently at the division points there was less than two minutes for inspection; that he had found flanges of wheels torn off and other dangerous conditions, and that if he came in three minutes late with his train, although he had been obliged to run through a fog so dense he could not see the signal light, he was called onto the carpet and asked "whether he was losing his nerve."

Eight hours a day is long enough for that kind of labor. Eight hours a day is long enough for the passengers to ride behind a man under that kind of a strain.

Talk about lack of investigation on an eight-hour day. We have had investigation after investigation of the eight-hour day. There may be employments that men can work at longer; tasks that do not subject a man to a constant strain; tasks that may be performed automatically; tasks that are hard for one moment and easy for the next; tasks where the character of work is varied. But the kind of employment I am discussing and the kind involved in this legislation was that of the man sitting over a fire box against a superheated engine, drawing a freightage frequently of human lives, and if not of human lives, then of very valuable property. That question needed no investigation. It may be it is a question as to whether the roads should have an increase of rates. We have prepared for the investigation of that question, and when it has been investigated in the light of experience and not in the light of guesswork, in the light of facts and not in the light of theory, then I shall be prepared and the Democratic Party will be ready to do justice to the railroads, whatever it may be, and to do justice to the shippers, whatever that may be.

Now, Mr. President, let us look at the alternatives that were presented.

Again I state the case: Four hundred and fifty thousand railway men were assembled in battle array prepared for a great struggle, which might last for weeks or months. Confronting them were representatives of nearly 300,000 miles of railways that reached in their ramifications almost every hamlet and village of the United States. As was said by somebody the other day, those lines of transportation are as essential to the industrial and commercial life of this country as the veins, arteries, and blood are to the life of the human body.

This battle was about to occur, and the country was to suffer the disarrangement of its commercial arteries and the complete stoppage of its commercial blood. The President represented the people of the land, and he said, for the protection of the people from the great injury they are about to suffer, we must stop this conflict between the railways and the men. We stopped it by passing an eight-hour law. There was no other sensible way. There is not a man on the other side of this Chamber will dare to come to this Congress next session and introduce a bill to repeal the eight-hour day.

All the scribes and pharisees and hypocrites that still infest this earth may parade themselves, and, wrapping the garment of their holiness about them, exclaim, "We are not as you wicked Democrats," but not one of you will dare next session of Congress to bring in a bill entitled "An act to make railway men work 10 hours a day." Now, what was the alternative? The alternative was to sit still and do nothing and allow the strike to come. There was perhaps another alternative—to call the Army back from Mexico and to endeavor to run the railways by force.

Now, let it be understood that if the 450,000 trainmen now engaged in the operation of these roads go out there are no 450,000 other men to take their places. Men can come to Congress without any experience and can legislate without knowledge, but you can not get aboard of a mogul engine and run it until you have learned the business.

I take it no Republican advocates the bringing in of the Army, and if you were to do so you would simply have sprinkled the lintels of your doors with blood. You would have had riot and disturbance and agony and death. Inevitably you would have brought great ruin to the country. I do not believe there is a Republican in this Chamber so wicked as to have desired the employment of the Army, with all its attendant consequences. However that may be, I know there is not one of you who dares now rise in this Chamber and declare that he favors such a policy. It follows that the only policy you stand for was one of masterly inactivity. You proposed to stand still and do nothing. If that policy had been pursued, the men would have refused to work unless their demand for an eight-hour day was conceded. Upon the other hand, some 8 or 10 railroad presidents would have refused to concede anything. Accordingly, the strike would have occurred. While the two opposing forces were battling it out what would have happened to the rest of the people? In answering this let me take a leaf out of the past.

Mr. President, in 1912 there was a threatened railroad strike that would have involved only the eastern railroads. A Republican President appointed a board to investigate and arbitrate. I read a few excerpts from that report:

Early in the year 1912 the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, on behalf of the engineers employed on 52 railroads in the eastern section of the United States, presented a concerted request to the management of these railroads for a general increase in wages and for certain modifications of the rules governing their employment. This concerted movement resulted in conferences held in New York City on March 14, 15, and 25 between representatives of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and a conference committee of managers representing the railroads. At the last of these conferences the representatives of the railroads declined to grant the requests of the engineers either in whole or in part.

The refusal of the railroads to grant the requests of the engineers or any part of them led to a strike vote among the engineers upon the roads concerned.

That strike only involved the engineers and not, as did this one, all kinds of trainmen, and it only involved a portion of the country, not all of the country, as did this one. The committee met and investigated. Now, let me read to my friends upon the other side a part of its report, which is signed by Charles R. Van Hise, chairman; Oscar S. Straus, Frederick N. Judson, Otto M. Eidlitz, Albert Shaw, and D. Willard. I believe nearly all of the gentlemen named are good Republicans, and they were all picked by a Republican President. Say these gentlemen:

Never in the history of the United States has there been a concerted strike on all the railroads of a great section of the country. The strikes have usually been upon individual roads, although in some cases strikes have taken place upon a number of roads at the same time. The present arbitration, involving as it does, a concerted movement affecting 52 railroads, is therefore a new phase of development.

Mark you, this strike was limited to 52 railroads and to the eastern section of the country, while the strike which we escaped the other day was to embrace the United States from ocean to ocean and from Canada to Mexico. I continue reading as follows:

On January 27, 1912, the locomotive engineers made uniform requests upon all the railroads in the eastern district. The railroads affected by these demands had in 1910 an aggregate of 66,876 miles of main track, as compared with 266,185 for the whole United States, or 25⅒ per cent of the total mileage.

So these gentlemen were dealing with a question but one-fourth as large as the one which presented itself to us the other day.

The report continues:

These railways represent nearly 40 per cent of the aggregate revenues and expenses of all the railways of the United States, from 42 to 47 per cent of the traffic, something over 40 per cent of the total number of employees, of the number of engineers, and of the compensation of these employees. The population of the great region immediately affected by this movement is over 38,000,000, as compared with approximately 54,000,000 for the remainder of the country, or about 42 per cent of the total population. If we assume that the wealth of the region is in proportion to the amount of railroad traffic and to the density of population, it may be fairly concluded that the territory affected by this demand represents at least four-tenths of the wealth of the country.

As we have seen, the managers, after several conferences with the locomotive engineers, refused to accede to the requests of the engineers. The question of a strike was then submitted to the men. The vote showed 93.3 per cent of the men in favor of a strike, provided a satisfactory settlement could not be made. All that was necessary for a strike to take place was the assent of the grand chief engineer in conjunction with the general committees of the different railroads. This assent is necessary, for if a strike is voted by the members of the brotherhood the grand chief has the veto power.

At the hearings of the arbitration it seemed to be the opinion of the parties concerned that if the engineers had declared a strike it would have effectively tied up the railroads in the eastern district.

An effective strike on these railroads, extending through an area that includes all of New England, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Ohio, Indiana, the lower peninsula of Michigan, much of Illinois, and a small part of West Virginia would have had most disastrous effects upon the commerce and industry of this entire region, to say nothing of its effects on the remainder of the country. Indeed it would be difficult to exaggerate the seriousness of such a calamity. While no statistics on the subject are available it is safe to say that the large cities of the East, if the strike had taken place, would have found their supply of many articles of food exhausted within a week. Of so important a commodity as milk the cities have not usually more than a day's supply. Many of the people in the cities would therefore have been short of food if the strike had taken place.

Assuming that no damage were done to their property, the loss to the railroads through cessation of business would have been enormous. The total operating revenues of the 52 railroads concerned amount to over $20,000,000 a week, and the net operating revenue to nearly $7,000,000 a week. The loss to the engineers would likewise have probably run into the millions. Their present pay roll amounts to over $800,000 per week.

"But the loss to the public would have been vastly larger than that of both parties to the conflict. Of necessity, building operations and many other lines of employment would have ceased in whole or in part; for not only are the people of the great cities dependent upon the railroads for their daily food supply, but the great industries depend on the railroads daily for their materials, and a week's failure on the part of the railroads to deliver materials to the manufacturers would have made it necessary for many to shut down, even if the owners had wished to continue them in operation. But in any case many of the owners would have been compelled to shut down their plants, inasmuch as they could not afford to continue manufacturing articles of commerce which they had no means of transporting to the places of sale.

"It thus appears if a strike of railroad employees were successful in stopping traffic, its effects upon the industry of the country would be analogous to those of a general strike, simply because a great number of other industries could not continue if the railroads ceased to operate. Such a strike would have at least a partial effect of a universal strike, forced upon the public, and even the willing workers in other branches of industry. In certain general strikes of some foreign countries there have been exceptions made of certain employments necessary to human existence, but in a suspension of business through stoppage of all transportation there would be no exception.

A case in the United States somewhat analogous to a railway strike for an entire region was the anthracite coal strike in 1902, where the stoppage of coal supply to a great commercial and manufacturing interest was deemed a calamity which compelled the intervention of the President of the United States. However, the stoppage of the anthracite coal supply was not nearly so serious as would be the stoppage of railway traffic, for bituminous coal can in an emergency in large measure take the place of anthracite; but there is nothing under modern conditions that can take the place of the railroads for transportation.

In short, a general strike on the railroads for a great section of the country would have paralyzed the industries of that section, and even if food were obtainable millions of laboring people would have felt the pinch of want.

Those who opposed this measure the other day voted to impose "the pinch of want" upon millions of laboring people; those who criticize us now for averting that dire calamity criticize us because we saved the people from want and misery.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the Senator from Missouri might well refer to the fact, in connection with the statement which he has just made, that four or five days prior to the time when this strike was to go into effect the great railroad systems of the country laid an embargo upon the amount of foodstuffs which could be transported. I think that was done as early as the day after the strike order was promulgated, which, of course, meant suffering and starvation to the great communities of the country, and which had as much to do, if not more, with aggravating the situation and making some action absolutely essential as did the threatened strike itself.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator; but let me ask him if the policy of shutting off food supplies to the cities by the railway presidents does not in some respects remind him of the policy of a certain nation that has sought to compel another nation to surrender by shutting off its food supply?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think that one purpose of the embargo was to force a public sentiment against the demands of the brotherhoods, and at the same time to bring about those conditions which they were declaring to be the result of a continued insistence by the brotherhoods upon an eight-hour day.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator. I continue reading:

If a strike of the character indicated lasted only for a single week—

Say these eminent gentlemen who were appointed by a Republican President—the suffering would have been beyond our power of description; and if it had continued for a month the loss, not only in property but in life, would have been enormous.

Those who voted not to settle this strike, the other day, not to end it, took the chance of voting the death of hundreds or thousands of innocent people. I continue the reading:

Also, as usual in such cases, the disaster would have fallen most heavily upon those least able to bear it. While the rich might have felt themselves poorer because of depleted bank accounts, they would have had sufficient for the necessities of life. The middle classes would have been injured financially, but still they could have subsisted. The working classes would have suffered acutely. They would have been the ones to feel soonest, longest, and most intensely the unspeakable calamity of a general railroad strike.

At first thought it may appear that this picture is overdrawn. But it should be remembered that never has a railroad strike affected an entire region of the United States. There have been strikes on particular railroad systems. In such cases the neighboring roads took care of the more pressing necessities of the great terminal centers, and there was no acute suffering except at minor points served exclusively by one railroad system.

A general strike for the eastern territory would put the Eastern States in much the same situation as France was placed two years ago, when there was a general strike on the railroads of that country.

Which, by the way, was ended by ordering every railway man to mobilize as a soldier, and in that way they ran the railroads of France—a thing that can not be done here.

Mr. President, what state would we have been in at this blessed hour had the strike not been averted. If it had not been for our action, the strike would now have been three days in full operation. I affirm that the railroads would already have lost more money themselves by that stoppage and by the damages that would have been incident to it than would pay the increased wage for the next 10 years.

I talked with an old railroad builder only last night, a man who has constructed a system of road many thousands of miles in length. He told me that the railroads could not cease operation for a single day without it costing them more loss than would pay the additional wage of the men for a year's time, and that, if it were to stop for five days, the loss would be so great to the railroads that it would pay the additional wages of the men for the next five years. He went on to explain why, and cited the disruption of business, the waste of rolling stock, the damage suits that would pile mountain high, the general paralysis of the business of the country that would be bound to reflect itself back upon the railroads even when transportation was restored, and a multitude of other reasons that I can not pause to state.

But if this be true as to the railroads, what would have been the loss to the men? Their wages would have stopped, and I have no doubt—I know—that a week's loss of labor to these men would amount into the millions.

But what about the public? Do I exaggerate when I say that you can not have a strike in the United States that ties up all lines of railroad for three days' time without it costs the people of this country more than $100,000,000? I believe it would cost $500,000,000; and every man who reflects on it will more and more come to the conclusion that those figures are moderate, that they are understated instead of overstated.

Let us see: Here is a train loaded with live stock which has started from a western point to an eastern terminal. It is stopped halfway and put on a sidetrack. Here is not one train, but there are hundreds—and I presume it would not be an exaggeration, perhaps, to say thousands—of such trains containing live stock or containing perishable goods of all kinds and varieties. All that freight would be subject to waste, deterioration, or to destruction. Here are 10,000 buildings on which there ought to be employed a million hammers working in the art of construction, but now one material or another can not come, and the result is that every hammer has to cease making the music of industry. Here are a million spindles, but the railroads can not deliver some necessary article and the mills must stop. The idle workmen and workwomen march out of the doors of the factory and begin to be consumers instead of producers. Here are the roaring furnaces of the steel mills, where men work three shifts a day, and have been making so much money for their employers, if not for themselves, that the rotten stock of the Steel Trust, the watered stock of the Steel Trust, went above par the day after the strike was called off. Its stock would have gone, probably, to 20 cents if the strike had come. I care little for the big steel company, but I care a lot for the thousands of men who work for it.

Their work would necessarily have ceased. The grain of the farmer in transit would either have rotted on the sidetracks or would have had to be stored at great expense. The fat cattle, prime and ready for shipment, would have had to be kept at an expense and would have deteriorated. Likely enough the market would also break. Even the eggs and butter of the farm could not get to the consumer.

But, Mr. President, on top of that, what? On top of that what would have become of the people of the great congested centers of this country? Stop every train going into New York City, and you have starvation in some degree started within 24 hours. Continue that stoppage for a week, and you would have death and pestilence. Stop the milk trains going into New York City for 24 hours, and you have the pale lips of babes crying for sustenance and the ghost of dissolution standing over the cradle. Stop shipments into New York, and you find the prices raised, doubled, trebled, quadrupled upon every necessity of life that men eat. The poor man with limited means and the woman who makes her living by her hard toil would eat less or not eat at all. Stop the railroads of this country for 36 hours, and the great city of Chicago would be in but little better condition than the city of New York. The cities of Pittsburgh, of Philadelphia, of Cincinnati, of Cleveland, all our major cities, would witness within a few hours' time shortage of food; and within a few hours' more time the pinch of hunger would be gripping the stomachs of some, and those who needed fresh food and fresh vegetables would begin to languish and death, maybap pestilence, would begin its awful march, first through the ranks of the poor and later perhaps would reach up its skeleton hand to touch the roses in the cheeks of the children of the rich.

And you voted to bring this on the people. You voted that there should not be a hand raised or a law written. You wanted to investigate while the house was burning down, while the fire of the fuse was slowly eating its way along to the powder; you wanted to stop and take no responsibility of action. I hold in utter contempt the man who was unwilling to take the responsibility himself, who had no policy of his own except the policy of sitting still or standing pat, a habit that is well formed on the other side of this Chamber, and having occupied that unenviable position, now turns to attack the party that met a desperate issue by the best plan that has been suggested by any man, either inside or outside of Congress.

I notice that our friend Hughes goes around the country talking in his hieroglyphics, generally so conspicuous for their clarity, that I observed the other day—I believe it was in the Washington Post—a headline stating "It is thought Mr. Hughes refers to the strike legislation." "It is thought he refers to it." Truly here is direction indeed. This bold and gallant chieftain talks so indirectly that a smart newspaper headliner, after he has read what he had said, can only say "it is thought or suspected" that he refers to something, but, as near as I can interpret his riddles, as near as I can follow his shadow dance, as near as I can make out what he is driving at, he means that we did something wicked to pass legislation "under coercion."

I have already answered that. There was no coercion in it by any man. There was the necessity for immediate action created by a condition that confronted us. "It was a condition, not a theory."

What would he have done if he had been President now? You can not get this thing out in the nebulous belt, gentlemen. This is a thing of the earth, earthy—an exceedingly substantial and practical fact. What would Brother Hughes have done if he had been President of the United States and this very condition had confronted him?

I will tell you what he might have done. He might have called out the Army and Navy of the United States; and he might have seized all these railroad men and put them in jail, and then he would not have had anybody to run the trains. He might have strung soldiers along the tracks, and said: "When the train goes by here, any man who interferes shall be shot at sight"; but what then? There would have been nobody to run the trains, or not sufficient numbers, because, if you took the 450,000 trainmen out of the service, there would be no 450,000 men to take their places.

What could have happened? We could have had the strike. We could have had the usual proceedings of strike breaking, the efforts of the presidents of these railway companies to get men to take the places of the men discharged, the gathering up of the old "scab" labor that has been turned out for one cause or another. Then assume that the whole force of the Army was brought to bear to protect it. How many months would it have been, how many years would it have been, until transportation was really restored to its normal condition? How many hundreds of millions of dollars would that have cost the people of the United States—the innocent bystander? What would Hughes have done?

But what is the use of asking what Hughes would have done? A lot of newspaper men asked him, a good while ago, what he would have done in this, that, or the other case, all of them pertinent to the present campaign. They have been no more able, these smart newspaper men—and they are about the smartest fellows in the world—to get Brother Hughes to locate himself so that they can tell what his position is with reference to any of those questions than the Irishman was able to put his thumb upon the evasive flea in the dark night.

I say again, what would he have done? Oh, boldly he would have stood, I suppose, and while he stood the country could have starved.

What are the effects necessarily flowing from just this thing I am discussing? Why, Mr. President, here is a copy of a telegram I want to put in the RECORD. It is not the telegram of a man who seeks an opportunity to turn his men out of employment. It is the telegram of one man who has made money and who has been willing to divide it with other people:

DETROIT, MICH., September 1, 1916.

The PRESIDENT:

The moment it is positively known that a strike will become effective on railroads the Ford Motor Co. will of absolute necessity shut down its factory and all its assembling plants throughout the country, and every man of its more than 49,000 workers will have to go off the pay roll. Our business is so organized that the supplies and product must be kept moving constantly. We can not move a day without railroad service. We are making 2,200 cars a day. The materials must be moved in and cars out. I sincerely hope something can be done to avert the strike. Your efforts are appreciated here and should be commended by every citizen in the country.

HENRY FORD.

Forty-nine thousand men to go out of employment in one institution, and that even before the hour fixed by the strike! Let your imaginations now run riot; give to them every impetus and power you may be able to put back of them; yet the imagination of men can not portray the calamity which we escaped.

There is a telegram here which throws just a little side light upon this matter. It is addressed to the President. I get it out of a newspaper:

GRAND JUNCTION, COLO., September 5, 1916.

The PRESIDENT:

Hundreds of fruit growers in this country who had thousands of cars of fruit ready to market, and on which their living expenses for the next year depended, give you full credit for preventing them from suffering a terrible loss had the railroad strike not been averted. This community alone—

Grand Junction, Colo., a small place—

This community alone could easily have lost a million dollars and suffered the worst business disaster in its history. Not only the fruit growers but citizens of all classes are grateful to you and congratulate you upon the success that crowned your firm, conscientious, and determined efforts to avert this great national calamity.

WALTER WALKER,
Editor Daily Sentinel.

Mr. President, there are times when wise and patriotic men do the thing that is necessary to avert a calamity, and they do not stop to haggle about just how it is going to be done. They can settle that afterwards. If there is a bombshell thrown through your roof, and it is about to explode and kill your family, and you have time enough to reach over and pitch it out of the window, you do it, and you do not stop to raise the window in order to save a 15-cent pane of glass. You get the bomb outside. If your house is on fire, and you need water to put it out, you do not stop to investigate whether or not it is going to injure your clothing, or whether it is going to discommode somebody else if you draw a pail of water to throw on the flames. If you have any sense on earth, you get the bucket of water and ask permission from your neighbor afterwards. When a storm is raging, you undertake to save that which can be saved, and after the storm is over you then sit down to deliberate about cyclone cellars for the future.

But not so with these men who would make politics out of anything, who would have willingly produced a strike if they had thought it would make a few votes for their party. Not so with them. They solemnly meet in party caucus, or party conference, or whatever you call it; they meet to determine a party policy. A crisis was before the Nation. It was impending. It was about to fall upon us. If it did fall the devastating effect would be felt for years to come, and ghastly horror would result in the land. With that situation before them, they came forward and said: "We have nothing to suggest except that we are 'agin'' whatever you gentlemen are going to do." That, we are told, is to be the political issue of the campaign.

I read from the Washington Herald of September 7:

G. O. P. WILL WAR ON EIGHT-HOUR LAW—LEADERS DECIDE TO MAKE ISSUE OF "RAISED-WAGE ACT."

NEW YORK, September 6.

Hughes's presidential campaign directors will appeal to voters to repudiate the Adamson labor act, not as an eight-hour law, but as a raised-wage law.

After a conference to-day between Chairman WILLCOX, Senators WEEKS, WARREN, and OLIVER, of Pennsylvania, and National Committeeman Parsons, the plans of the attack on the railroad legislation were outlined.

Senator WEEKS said:

"We are going to make a big issue of this misnamed eight-hour law. We call it the raised-wage law. We shall ask the voters to say whether they approve of a group of men headed by the President forcing Congress to enact a law suddenly framed, with but a few days' consideration, and without the slightest investigation as to whether it is desirable.

"Not in 12 years of public life have I received so many protests against any one measure. I have fully a thousand messages. Those in favor of the Adamson Act all came from labor unions in practically the same language as if they had been written by Samuel Gompers himself. Those in opposition came from business men and employers who are to derive no benefit from the law."

Of course I can understand why any of these distinguished gentlemen would not be much pleased with messages coming from union labor men, because, if I know anything about their record, they have represented in the Congress of the United States every day they have been here not human beings but dollars; not things that are sentient, that feel and think, but things that clink and chime and make the music that tickles the auditory nerve that connects their pockets.

Of course that element of the Republican Party has always held that the business of government is to take care of big business and let big business take care of the people. Of course that element of the Republican Party has always and at all times, in season and out of season, taken its inspiration from those great institutions that furnish the fat for elections to a political committee, and take the fat out of the people after the elections to reimburse themselves for expenditures. Of course one of the chief apostles of that kind of thought, the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], necessarily is naturally found here to-day in opposition to the corrupt practice that proposes to cut off a source of political revenue, and at the same time to separate that element of his party to which he belongs from the source of its political inspiration.

On August 29 I reviewed briefly the position taken by Mr. Roosevelt on our European policy, and undertook to show that Mr. Hughes indorses that position. Since the date of that speech both of these eminent gentlemen have been talking.

I now present cumulative evidence, and offer a few observations upon the theme, "Blood is thicker than water."

Theodore Roosevelt, speaking in Maine (Lewiston) on August 31, said:

It is our high and solemn duty, both to prepare our own strength so as to guarantee our own safety, and also to treat every foreign nation, in any given crisis, as its conduct in that crisis demands. The citizen who does not act so and who endeavors to shape America's policy in the interest of the country from which he or his ancestors have sprung is no true American and has no moral right to citizenship in this country.

Any attempt to organize American citizens along politico-racial lines is a foul and evil thing. Any organization of American citizens which acts in the interest of a foreign power is guilty of moral treason to the Republic. It is because of such action that I condemn those professional German-Americans who in our politics act as servants and allies of Germany, not as Americans interested solely in the honor and welfare of America; and I would condemn just as quickly English-Americans or French-Americans or Irish-Americans who acted in such manner.

Since 1912 we have had four years of a policy which has been an opiate to the spirit of idealism. It has meant the relaxation of our moral fiber. Horror of war, combined with sordid appeal of self-interest and fear, has paralyzed the national conscience. We have been told that even as between Belgium and Germany we should be neutral not only in act but in sympathy.

His (Wilson's) task was not an especially difficult or dangerous task; but it needed a brave heart and a steady hand. Under his lead America could and should have put itself at the head of all the neutral nations, by its example, if not by direct diplomatic agreements, in demanding that the war should be conducted in accordance with the usage of civilized nations, that international law should be observed, that the rights of neutrals and noncombatants should be respected.

If this spirit had animated our administration, there would probably have been no invasion of Belgium, no fears of a like fate to terrorize other smaller nations, no torpedoing of merchant vessels, no bombarding of churches and hospitals, no massacring of women and children, no murder of Miss Cavell, no attempted extermination of the Armenians and Syrian Christians. We can not undo what has been done. But we can repudiate what has been done. We can regain our own self-respect and the respect of other nations for this country. We can put in power an administration which will throughout its term of power protect our own citizens and live up to our national obligations.

As between Mr. Hughes and Mr. Wilson, who can doubt which is the man who will with austere courage stand for the national duty?

We have against him (Wilson) in Mr. Hughes a man whose public life is a guaranty that whatever he says he will make good, and that all his words will be borne out by his deeds.

Mr. Hughes on the following day, September 1, read the speech and wired Roosevelt as follows:

KANSAS CITY, September 1, 1916.

The Hon. THEODORE ROOSEVELT:

I heartily congratulate you on the speech at Lewiston and warmly appreciate your effective support.

CHAS. E. HUGHES.

That same day in his address at Kansas City he referred to Roosevelt as "That stalwart American who woke the country," and aped Roosevelt by saying, "We want deeds to match words. We want a new tone in our life. I am not one of the kind that is too proud to fight." The following day in St. Louis he stated that he knew what was in Roosevelt's Maine speech and indorsed every word of it.

BLOOD IS THICKER THAN WATER.

The foregoing quotations show that Roosevelt continues to denounce our German-American citizens, those thousands of men and women whose parents were born in Germany and who sympathize with the Fatherland because the blood of the Teutonic race is in their veins. This sympathy is not a "foul and evil thing," but is natural and human, and it courses just as strong in British blood as in German, perhaps a little stronger at times. An investigation will show that practically all the Germans who immigrate to this country renounce their old allegiance and become naturalized citizens of the United States, while, on the other hand, excluding the Irish, who have never been much in love with England, a large percentage of the people coming from Britain proudly retain and proclaim their British citizenship.

The Republican presidential candidate springs from the most loyal of British stock, the Welsh. His father, Rev. David Charles Hughes, came to this country from Wales in 1855, barely seven years before the birth of the son. In the controversy now going on between Germany and England it is as natural for Mr. Hughes to sympathize with England as it is for a son or daughter of a German immigrant to sympathize with that country which they still lovingly refer to as the Fatherland. Indeed, it is natural that Mr. Hughes should put the stamp of his approval upon all that Roosevelt, the hater and traducer of German-American citizens, utters. It is not remarkable that he should wire Roosevelt, indorsing the Maine speech and thanking him for it.

Mr. President, I have replied to criticisms of the Democratic administration for enacting an eight-hour law applicable to men engaged in the hazardous business of railroading. I have called attention to the fact that every man on the other side of the Chamber who was present, with the single exception—an exception I did not make, but I now make it—of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], voted against the eight-hour proposition. I repeat, because it is a matter in point, that the law applied only to men engaged in the hazardous business of running trains.

I desire, in connection with those remarks, to read from a document that four short years ago was the law and gospel of the great Progressive Party. It was the doctrine upon which the great Progressive leader of that time stood, and upon which he made his campaign. I read from the Progressive platform adopted in 1912:

The supreme duty of the National Government is the conservation of human resources through an enlarged measure of social and industrial justice. We pledge ourselves to work unceasingly in State and Nation for:

Effective legislation looking to the prevention of industrial accidents, occupational diseases, overwork, involuntary unemployment, and other injurious effects incident to modern industry.

The fixing of minimum safety and health standards for the various occupations and the exercise of the public authority of State and Nation, including the Federal control over interstate commerce and the taxing power to maintain such standards.

The prohibition of child labor.

Minimum wage standards for working women, to provide a "living wage" in all industrial occupations.

The general prohibition of night work for women and the establishment of an eight-hour day for women and young persons.

One day's rest in seven for all wageworkers.

The 8-hour day in continuous 24-hour industries.

The abolition of the convict contract-labor system; substituting a system of prison production for governmental consumption only and the application of prisoners' earnings to the support of their dependent families.

Publicity as to wages, hours, and conditions of labor; full reports upon industrial accidents and diseases, and the opening to public inspection of all tallies, weights, measures, and check systems on labor products.

Standards of compensation for death by industrial accident and injury and trade disease which will transfer the burden of lost earnings from the families of working people to the industry and thus to the community.

The protection of home life against the hazards of sickness, irregular employment, and old age through the adoption of a system of social insurance adapted to American use.

The development of the creative labor power of America by lifting the last load of illiteracy from American youth and establishing continuation schools for industrial education under public control and encouraging agricultural education and demonstration in rural schools.

The establishment of industrial research laboratories to put the methods of discoveries of science at the service of American producers.

We favor the organization of the workers, men and women, as a means of protecting their interests and of promoting their progress.

Mr. President, what has become of the sacred principles of the Bull Moose Party? When we voted on the eight-hour law, where were the Senators who in 1912 subscribed to the Progressive platform which expressly advocated the fixing of an eight-hour day in occupations that are continuous during the 24 hours? That exactly fits the railroads. The case we had before us came exactly within the terms of the plank to which the Bull Moose Party in 1912, without investigation, I presume—for that was the complaint the other day—unhesitatingly committed itself, and upon which it made its compaign to the people of the United States.

Now, when the Democratic Party, in the presence of a great crisis and emergency, in order to prevent infinite damage to the people of this country, adopted an eight-hour day strictly in line and conformity with the plank of the Bull Moose platform, you hear every Bull Mooser in the Senate roaring almost as loudly as they did when Roosevelt betrayed them into the hands of the standpatters.

I want the country to understand how completely these gentlemen have now taken the back track; that is, how completely some of them have taken the back track. It is still to be hoped that there are in the country some real Bull Moosers who believed in this platform who will stand by the Democratic Party for enacting the eight-hour day applicable to railroad employees.

Mr. President, while I am on my feet I want to ask leave to put in the RECORD some documents.

I ask to put into the RECORD the veto message of Gov. Hughes, of New York, dated June 11, 1907, in which he vetoed the 2-cent railroad fare bill of that State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Without objection, that will be included.

The matter referred to is as follows:

PROVIDING FOR A MAXIMUM RAILWAY PASSENGER FARE, WITH CERTAIN EXCEPTIONS, OF 2 CENTS PER MILE.

STATE OF NEW YORK, EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Albany, June 11, 1907.

To the Assembly:

I return herewith, without my approval, Assembly bill No. 2269, entitled "An act to amend the railroad law, in relation to rates of fare."

This bill with specified exceptions provides for a maximum passenger fare of 2 cents per mile upon the railroads in this State. Steam railroads less than 150 miles in length which are not within the counties of New York and Kings (or within the limits of an incorporated city) are permitted a higher maximum charge of 3, 4, and 5 cents a mile, according to the length of line, unless through consolidation, lease, or control they form a part of a system whose combined lines exceed 150 miles, in which case the provision for a maximum rate of 2 cents a mile is applicable.

The passage of the bill was not preceded by legislative investigation or suitable inquiry under the authority of the State. Nor is the fixing of this rate predicated on reports or statistics officially collated which would permit a fair conclusion as to the justice of its operation with reference to the railroads within its purview. It plainly reflects dissatisfaction with existing conditions and an effort to provide a remedy through arbitrary action. It seems largely to have been the result of annoying requirements and discriminations in connection with the sale of mileage books on certain roads.

The bill represents a policy seriously mistaken and pregnant with disaster. It is of the utmost importance that the management of our railroad corporations should be subject to strict supervision by the State and that regulations compelling the observance of the law and proper and adequate service should be rigidly enforced. It is the duty of these corporations to provide transportation of passengers and goods at reasonable rates, and the State should compel the performance of this obligation.

But injustice on the part of railroad corporations toward the public does not justify injustice on the part of the State toward the railroad corporations. The action of government should be fair and impartial, and upon this every citizen, whatever his interest, is entitled to insist. We shall make matters not better but worse if to cure one wrong we establish another. The fact that those in control of railroad corporations have been guilty of grossly improper financiering and of illegal and injurious discriminations in charges points clearly to the necessity of effective State action, but does not require or warrant arbitrary reprisals. In dealing with these questions democracy must demonstrate its capacity to act upon deliberation and to deal justly.

It is of the greatest importance not only that railroad corporations should be compelled to respect their public obligations, but also that they should be permitted to operate under conditions which will give a fair return for their service. Upon this depends not simply the security of investors but the security of their employees and the protection of every form of industry and commerce through the maintenance and extension of necessary transportation facilities. Nothing could be more opposed to the interests of the community as a whole than to cripple transportation corporations by arbitrary reduction of earnings. It may be said that a 2-cent passenger rate is not so extreme as to have a very injurious result. But this is a debatable question. Large and prosperous suburban communities have been built up through the offer of commutation rates much less than the proposed maximum. Upon the maintenance of these rates many thousands of our citizens rely. Considerable differences exist between the railroad corporations with respect to the territory they serve and the cost of service, and it is manifest that what would be fair for one might be far from fair for another. An arbitrary dislocation of tariffs by the fiat of the legislature without investigation is a matter of serious concern. The best that could be said for such legislation would be that it should be regarded as an isolated case and not as a precedent. For if flat freight rates, either for all commodities or for different kinds of commodities were similarly to be fixed by the legislature without investigation or proper ascertainment of their justice our railroad business and our industrial and commercial interests would be thrown into confusion.

I do not mean to be understood as saying that a maximum 2-cent passenger rate would be unreasonably low. It might be high enough in many cases. Possibly it would be high enough in all cases. I fully appreciate the fact that those who have promoted this bill believe that such a rate would be fair. But I deem it most important that the policy of dealing with matters of this sort arbitrarily, by legislative rule of general application without reference to the demands of justice in particular cases, should be condemned. Every workingman, every tradesman, and every citizen believing himself to have aught at stake in the prosperity of the country should determinedly oppose it. For it not only threatens the stability of business enterprise which makes our prosperity possible, but it substitutes unreason for sound judgment, the ill-considered demands of resentment for the spirit of fair play, and makes impossible patient and honorable effort to correct abuses.

There is a better way. It has already been pointed out in the legislation of this State. It is practically impossible, in view of the nature of the problems and the many questions requiring consideration for the legislature to deal directly with railroad rates in a satisfactory manner. Where a matter requires investigation in order that a just result may be reached, the obvious course is to create a body which can investigate, with expert assistance, as summarily as possible, and which shall have adequate power to make appropriate orders. Such a body has been created in this State through the public-service commission law recently enacted.

Provision is made for inquiry into matters of freight rates and passenger fares and for the fixing of such rates as shall be found just and reasonable. If a passenger rate of 2 cents a mile is just and reasonable it can be fixed; if it is not just and reasonable it should not be fixed.

It will be said that this requires time and investigation. But it will not require any longer time or any more protracted investigation than are necessary to reach a right result. The interests of the country are so great and our individual interests are so closely interwoven that it is to the highest degree dangerous to give encouragement to the spirit of impatience with the orderly processes of inquiry.

It may also be said that many other States have adopted similar legislation. If the principle of that legislation be sound, we could readily follow the precedent; but if it be unsound, there is the greater reason why it should not be followed. The State of New York has provided machinery to settle these questions justly to all with as much dispatch as possible. It is to the interest of all that this machinery should be made as perfect and efficient as possible. It is to the interest of none that it should be discarded because of preference for arbitrary legislative action.

If this bill were to become a law, it would most probably lead in many cases—on account of pretended or real necessity—to economies in service and to readjustment of rates now lower, to the annoyance and injury of considerable numbers of the traveling public for which the gain to others would not necessarily compensate. Again, the validity of such a statute would most certainly be contested in protracted litigation, the result of which, to say the least, would be in doubt. At a critical time, when the interests of all demand that reason and judgment should control in dealing with such matters, we should have abandoned our true line of action and facilitated still wider departures.

I therefore disapprove this bill.

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

Mr. REED. I ask to print in the RECORD as part of my remarks the veto message of Gov. Hughes, dated June 15, 1907, in which he vetoed the full-crew train bill when passed by the General Assembly of New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

The matter referred to is as follows:

PROVIDING FOR ADDITIONAL BRAKEMEN FOR FREIGHT TRAINS.

STATE OF NEW YORK, EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Albany, June 15, 1907.

To the Assembly:

I return herewith, without my approval, Assembly bill No. 455 (Senate reprint No. 1338), entitled, "An act to better protect the lives of railroad employees."

This bill provides that it shall be unlawful for any railroad company in the State of New York "that runs more than four freight trains in 24 hours" to run over any part of its road outside of yard limits any freight train composed of more than 20 cars with less than a full crew of six persons, to wit, one engineer, one fireman, one conductor, and three brakemen; or a light engine without cars without a crew composed of one engineer, one fireman, one conductor or flagman, when running a distance of 10 miles or more from starting point.

According to present practice freight trains are very generally operated with a crew of five persons, and the object of this bill is to compel the employment of an additional brakeman. The necessity for this is said to lie in the fact that without three brakemen the freight trains are insufficiently manned, and that firemen are compelled to leave their places in all kinds of weather to throw switches when the two brakemen are required respectively to go ahead of and behind the train.

This bill, however, upon the facts developed before me upon the hearing and undisputed, is clearly unconstitutional. Such a measure should define the service required with suitable reference to circumstances and conditions so that the law would apply in proper cases and not otherwise. The bill takes no account of the differences between the different roads and parts of roads, in trackage and switching facilities, and of the fact that what may be necessary in the case of some railroads may be wholly unnecessary in others. In the case of the New York Central Railroad it was shown that the trackage and switching facilities on its main lines were of such a character as to make unnecessary the employment of a third brakeman in accordance with the provisions of the bill. This was frankly conceded by supporters of the bill.

To require the expenditure of a very large amount of money (estimated at several hundred thousand dollars annually) without necessity for the outlay, is simply arbitrary exaction and a taking of property without due process of law. The bill does not refer its requirements to any proper standard of necessity or provide any criterion by which its proper application under varying conditions is to be determined. It contains an absolute requirement which upon the facts conceded before me can not be justified.

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

Mr. REED. I ask to put into the RECORD as part of my remarks the opinion in the case of Lawlor against Loewe, generally known as the Danbury Hat case, which is printed in volume 225 of the United States Supreme Courts Reports, beginning at page 522, the opinion being by Mr. Justice Holmes and concurred in by Mr. Justice Hughes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court.

This is an action under the act of July 2, 1890, chapter 647, section 7, Twenty-sixth Statutes, pages 209 and 210, for a combination and conspiracy in restraint of commerce among the States, specifically directed against the plaintiffs (defendants in error), among others, and effectively carried out with the infliction of great damage. The declaration was held good on demurrer in Loewe v. Lawlor (208 U. S., 274), where it will be found set forth at length. The substance of the charge is that the plaintiffs were hat manufacturers who employed nonunion labor; that the defendants were members of the United Hatters of North America and also of the American Federation of Labor; that in pursuance of a general scheme to unionize the labor employed by manufacturers of fur hats (a purpose previously made effective against all but a few manufacturers), the defendants and other members of the United Hatters caused the American Federation of Labor to declare a boycott against the plaintiffs and against all hats sold by the plaintiffs to dealers in other States and against dealers who should deal in them; and that they carried out their plan with such success that they have restrained or destroyed the plaintiffs' commerce with other States. The case now has been tried, the plaintiffs have got a verdict, and the judgment of the district court has been affirmed by the circuit court of appeals. (209 Fed. Rep., 721; 126 C. C. A., 445.)

The grounds for discussion under the statute that were not cut away by the decision upon the demurrer have been narrowed still further since the trial by the case of Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Association v. United States. (234 U. S., 600.) Whatever may be the law otherwise, that case establishes that, irrespective of compulsion or even agreement to observe its intimation, the circulation of a list of "unfair dealers," manifestly intended to put the ban upon those whose names appear therein, among an important body of possible customers combined with a view to joint action and in anticipation of such reports, is within the prohibitions of the Sherman Act if it is intended to restrain and restrains commerce among the States.

It requires more than the blindness of justice not to see that many branches of the United Hatters and the Federation of Labor, to both of which the defendants belonged, in pursuance of a plan emanating from headquarters made use of such lists, and of the primary and secondary boycott in their effort to subdue the plaintiffs to their demands. The union label was used and a strike of the plaintiffs' employees was ordered and carried out to the same end, and the purpose to break up the plaintiffs' commerce affected the quality of the acts. (Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U. S., 274, 299.) We agree with the circuit court of appeals that a combination and conspiracy forbidden by the statute were proved, and that the question is narrowed to the responsibility of the defendants for what was done by the sanction and procurement of the societies above named.

The court in substance instructed the jury that if these members paid their dues and continued to delegate authority to their officers unlawfully to interfere with the plaintiffs' interstate commerce in such circumstances that they knew or ought to have known, and such officers were warranted in the belief that they were acting in the matters within their delegated authority, then such members were jointly liable, and no others. It seems to us that this instruction sufficiently guarded the defendants' rights, and that the defendants got all that they were entitled to ask in not being held chargeable with knowledge as matter of law. It is a tax on credulity to ask anyone to believe that members of labor unions at that time did not know that the primary and secondary boycott and the use of the "We don't patronize" or "Unfair" list were means expected to be employed in the effort to unionize shops. Very possibly they were thought to be lawful. (See Gompers v. United States, 233 U. S., 604.) By the constitution of the United Hatters the directors are to use "all the means in their power" to bring shops "not under our jurisdiction" "into the trade." The by-laws provide a separate fund to be kept for strikes, lockouts, and agitation for the union label. Members are forbidden to sell nonunion hats. The Federation of Labor, with which the hatters were affiliated, had organization of labor for one of its objects, helped affiliated unions in trade disputes, and to that end, before the present trouble, had provided in its constitution for prosecuting and had prosecuted many what it called legal boycotts. Their conduct in this and former cases was made public especially among the members in every possible way. If the words of the documents on their face and without explanation did not authorize what was done, the evidence of what was done publicly and habitually showed their meaning and how they were interpreted. The jury could not but find that by the usage of the unions the acts complained of were authorized, and authorized without regard to their interference with commerce among the States. We think it unnecessary to repeat the evidence of the publicity of this particular struggle in the common newspapers and union prints, evidence that made it almost inconceivable that the defendants, all living in the neighborhood of the plaintiffs, did not know what was done in the specific case. If they did not know that, they were bound to know the constitution of their societies, and at least well might be found to have known how the words of those constitutions had been construed in the act.

It is suggested that injustice was done by the judge speaking of "proof" that in carrying out the object of the associations unlawful means had been used with their approval. The judge cautioned the jury with special care not to take their view of what had been proved from him, going even farther than he need have gone. (Graham v. United States, 231 U. S., 474, 480.) But the context showed plainly that proof was used here in a popular way for evidence and must have been understood in that sense.

Damages accruing since the action began were allowed, but only such as were the consequence of acts done before and constituting part of the cause of action declared on. This was correct. (New York, Lake Erie & Western R. R. v. Estill, 147 U. S., 591, 615, 616.) We shall not discuss the objections to evidence separately and in detail, as we find no error requiring it. The introduction of newspapers, etc., was proper in large part to show publicity in places and directions where the facts were likely to be brought home to the defendants, and also to prove an intended and detrimental consequence of the principal acts, not to speak of other grounds. The reason given by customers for ceasing to deal with sellers of the Loewe hats, including letters from dealers to Loewe & Co., were admissible. (3 Wigmore, Evidence, sec. 1729, 2.) We need not repeat or add to what was said by the circuit court of appeals with regard to evidence of the payment of dues after this suit was begun. And in short neither the argument nor the perusal of the voluminous brief for the plaintiffs in error shows that they suffered any injustice or that there was any error requiring the judgment to be reversed.

Judgment affirmed.

Mr. REED. I ask to put into the RECORD the veto message dated January 5, 1910, of Gov. Hughes, of New York, in which he vetoed the income-tax amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

The matter referred to is as follows:

IN SENATE,

January 5, 1910.

SPECIAL MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR SUBMITTING TO THE LEGISLATURE CERTIFIED COPY OF A RESOLUTION OF CONGRESS ENTITLED "JOINT RESOLUTION PROPOSING AN AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES."

STATE OF NEW YORK,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Albany, January 5, 1910.

To the Legislature:

I have received from the Secretary of State of the United States a certified copy of a resolution of Congress entitled "Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States," and in accordance with his request I submit it to your honorable body for such action as may be had thereon.

The amendment proposed by this joint resolution, adopted by two-thirds of both Houses of Congress, is as follows:

"ART. XVI. The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States and without regard to any census or enumeration."

The power to lay a tax upon incomes, without apportionment, was long supposed to be possessed by the Federal Government and has been repeatedly exercised. Such taxes were laid and paid for the purpose of meeting the exigencies caused by the Civil War.

In 1895, in the case of Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. (158 U. S., 601), the United States Supreme Court decided that taxes on the rents or income of real estate, and taxes on personal property or on the income of personal property, are direct taxes and hence under the Constitution can not be imposed without apportionment among the several States according to their respective populations.

It was not the function of the court, and it did not attempt, to decide whether or not a Federal income tax was desirable. It simply interpreted the Constitution according to the judgment of the majority of its members and left the question of the advisability of conferring such a power upon the Federal Government to be determined in the constitutional method.

The limitations so placed upon the Federal taxing power are thus described by Mr. Justice Harlan in his dissenting opinion:

"Any attempt upon the part of Congress to apportion among the States, upon the basis simply of their population, taxation of personal property or of incomes, would tend to arouse such indignation among the freemen of America that it would never be repeated. When, therefore, this court adjudges, as it does now adjudge, that Congress can not impose a duty or tax upon personal property, or upon income arising either from rents of real estate or from personal property, including invested personal property, bonds, stocks, and investments of all kinds, except by apportioning the sum to be so raised among the States according to population, it practically decides that, without an amendment of the Constitution—two-thirds of both Houses of Congress and three-fourths of the States concurring—such property and incomes can never be made to contribute to the support of the National Government." (Id., pp. 671, 672.) * * *

"Incomes arising from trades, employments, callings, and professions can be taxed, under the rule of uniformity or equality, by both the National Government and the respective State governments, while incomes from property, bonds, stocks, and investments can not, under the present decision, be taxed by the National Government except under the impracticable rule of apportionment among the States according to population. No sound reason for such a discrimination has been or can be suggested." (Id., p. 680.)

I am in favor of conferring upon the Federal Government the power to lay and collect an income tax without apportionment among the States according to population. I believe that this power should be held by the Federal Government so as properly to equip it with the means of meeting national exigencies.

But the power to tax incomes should not be granted in such terms as to subject to Federal taxation the incomes derived from bonds issued by the State itself, or those issued by municipal governments organized under the State's authority. To place the borrowing capacity of the State and of its governmental agencies at the mercy of the Federal taxing power would be an impairment of the essential rights of the State which, as its officers, we are bound to defend.

You are called upon to deal with a specific proposal to amend the Constitution, and your action must necessarily be determined not by a general consideration of the propriety of a just Federal income tax, or of giving to the Federal Government the power to lay such a tax, but whether or not the particular proposal is of such a character as to warrant your assent.

This proposal is that the Federal Government shall have the power to lay and collect taxes on incomes "from whatever source derived."

It is to be borne in mind that this is not a mere statute, to be construed in the light of constitutional restrictions, express or implied, but a proposed amendment to the Constitution itself, which, if ratified, will be in effect a grant to the Federal Government of the power which it defines.

The comprehensive words "from whatever source derived," if taken in their natural sense, would include not only incomes from ordinary real or personal property, but also incomes derived from State and municipal securities.

It may be urged that the amendment would be limited by construction. But there can be no satisfactory assurance of this. The words in terms are all inclusive. An amendment to the Constitution of the United States is the most important of political acts, and there should be no amendment expressed in such terms as to afford the opportunity for Federal action in violation of the fundamental conditions of State authority.

I am not now referring to the advantage which the States might derive from the exclusive power to tax incomes from property, or to the argument that for this reason the power to tax such incomes shall be withheld from the Federal Government. To that argument I do not assent.

I am referring to a proposal to authorize a tax which might be laid, in fact, upon the instrumentalities of State government. In order that a market may be provided for State bonds and for municipal bonds, and that thus means may be afforded for State and local administration, such securities from time to time are excepted from taxation. In this way lower rates of interest are paid than otherwise would be possible. To permit such securities to be the subject of Federal taxation is to place such limitations upon the borrowing power of the State as to make the performance of the functions of local government a matter of Federal grace.

This has been repeatedly recognized. In the case of The Collector v. Day (11 Wall., p. 127), decided in 1870, the United States Supreme Court said:

"It is admitted that there is no express provision in the Constitution that prohibits the General Government from taxing the means and instrumentalities of the States, nor is there any prohibiting the States from taxing the means and instrumentalities of that Government. In both cases the exemption rests upon necessary implication and is upheld by the great law of self-preservation, as any government whose means employed in conducting its operations, if subject to the control of another and distinct government, can exist only at the mercy of that government. Of what avail are these means if another power may tax them at discretion?"

In the case of Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. (157 U. S., pp. 584–585), Chief Justice Fuller said, referring to the tax upon incomes from municipal bonds, one of the matters there involved:

"A municipal corporation is the representative of the State and one of the instrumentalities of the State government. It was long ago determined that the property and revenues of municipal corporations are not subjects of Federal taxation. * * * But we think the same want of power to tax the property or revenues of the States or their instrumentalities exists in relation to a tax on the income from their securities."

In the same case, Mr. Justice Field said (id., p. 601):

"These bonds and securities are as important to the performance of the duties of the State as like bonds and securities of the United States are important to the performance of their duties, and are as exempt from the taxation of the United States as the former are exempt from the taxation of the States."

And the learned justice added, quoting from United States v. Railroad Co. (17 Wall., pp. 322, 327), as follows:

"The right of the States to administer their own affairs through their legislative, executive, and judicial departments in their own manner through their own agencies, is conceded by the uniform decisions of this court, and by the practice of the Federal Government from its organization. This carries with it an exemption of those agencies and instruments from the taxing power of the Federal Government. If they may be taxed lightly, they may be taxed heavily; if justly, oppressively. Their operation may be impeded and may be destroyed, if any interference is permitted. Hence, the beginning of such taxation is not allowed on the one side, is not claimed on the other."

While the justices of the court in the Pollock case differed in opinion upon the question whether a tax upon income from property was a direct tax and as such could not be laid without apportionment, they were unanimous in their conclusion that no Federal tax could be laid upon the income from municipal bonds. Mr. Justice White, who dissented in the Pollock case with regard to other questions, as to this said (157 U. S., on p. 652):

"The authorities cited in the opinion are decisive of this question. They are relevant to one case and not to the other, because, in the one case, there is full power in the Federal Government to tax, the only controversy being whether the tax imposed is direct or indirect; while in the other there is no power whatever in the Federal Government, and, therefore, the levy, whether direct or indirect, is beyond the taxing power."

It is certainly significant that the words "from whatever source derived," have been introduced into the proposed amendment as if it were the intention to make it impossible for the claim to be urged that the income from any property, even though it consist of the bonds of the State or of a municipality organized by it, will be removed from the reach of the taxing power of the Federal Government.

The immunity from Federal taxation that the State and its instrumentalities of government now enjoy is derived not from any express provision of the Federal Constitution, but from what has been deemed to be necessary implication. Who can say that any such implication with respect to the proposed tax will survive the adoption of this explicit and comprehensive amendment?

We can not suppose that Congress will not seek to tax incomes derived from securities issued by the State and its municipalities. It has repeatedly endeavored to lay such taxes and its efforts have been defeated only by implied constitutional restriction which this amendment threatens to destroy. While we may desire that the Federal Government may be equipped with all necessary national powers in order that it may perform its national function we must be equally solicitous to secure the essential bases of State government.

I therefore deem it my duty, as Governor of the State, to recommend that this proposed amendment should not be ratified.

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

(From N. Y. Senate docs., 133d sess., 1910, vol. 1, No. 3.)

Mr. REED. I ask to put into the RECORD the veto message of Gov. Hughes in which he vetoed the bill which reduced charges upon street railways to 5 cents unless the public-service commission should see fit to give permission to raise the price above 5 cents. The message is dated May 23, 1908.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From public papers of Gov. Hughes, 1908, p. 93.]

Providing for a 5-cent fare on railroads, other than a steam or trunk line, within any city or village, unless the public-service commission gives its consent to an additional fare.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Albany, May 23, 1908.

Memorandum filed with assembly bill No. 1603, entitled "An act to amend the railroad law in relation to the rate of fare."

Not approved.

This bill provides, in effect, that no railroad (other than a steam or trunk line railroad) shall charge more than 5 cents for any continuous ride on the lines operated or controlled by it within any city or village, unless the public-service commission shall give its consent to an additional fare.

It is plainly intended to affect charges over existing lines. It establishes a maximum rate of 5 cents without regard to the length of the route or the reasonableness of such a fare. In other words, it is an arbitrary maximum imposed by legislative fiat. But it is clear that if the rate is not a reasonable one and if the requirement would operate as a confiscation of the company's property, the legislature can not impose it. The attempt to enforce such a rate under such circumstances would be abortive, as a successful appeal could be made to the courts. It is idle to suppose that the companies can be compelled to reduce their fares to 5 cents merely because the legislature says so.

Whether a 5-cent fare is a fair one depends upon facts and not upon sentiment, desire, or prejudice. Whether the result be agreeable or disagreeable, it inevitably will be reached only after the facts have been ascertained and considered. Justice requires this, and under the Constitution the requirement will be enforced.

The proper way to deal with these matters is to provide for investigation in which the whole subject can be considered, specious claims sifted out, and a result just both to the corporations and to the public arrived at.

It may be said that the provisions of this bill with regard to the Public Service Commission has this effect. But this is not the case. The bill provides for a flat rate of 5 cents unless the commission consents to a higher fare. It does not provide that the commission shall ascertain or fix a just and reasonable rate or that an increase shall be allowed because it is just and reasonable. Evidently the bill was drawn not to give the commission power to fix a just and reasonable rate but to fix a rate by statute with a provision for appeal from the legislature to the commission and without any proper indication of the conditions under which the appeal is to be heard.

This can only result in confusion, affording, as it would, opportunity for protracted litigation over the validity of such a statute and postponing the proper settlement of the real question involved.

It is highly important that we should have transportation in our cities at the lowest fair rates. It is desirable that in New York City there should be low rates from the congested quarters to the breathing spots in the outlying districts and by the sea. The sure way and the only way to make real progress in this direction is through the ascertainment of the essential facts and the making of reasonable rates in accordance with the facts. This bill is wrong in principle and is not adapted to secure the desired result. I can not approve it.

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

Mr. REED. In the light of these vetoes, I am wondering how long it would have taken him, if he had been President, to have made up his august mind as to the kind of legislation that ought to be enacted to settle this strike question, and how many long months the country would have suffered, and just how much it would have cost us to have had Hughes President instead of Woodrow Wilson.

There is one thing further I want to put in the RECORD, not because I indorse it, but because it is a very interesting contribution by an eminent lawyer—an article dealing with the legal phases of the child-labor law, by Mr. Fauntleroy, of St. Louis.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The proposed enactment by Congress of a Federal law for the regulation of child labor in the several States would be a palpable violation of the Constitution of the United States. In fact, it would be revolutionary. I am heartily in favor of a strict regulation of child labor which would protect the health and welfare of all young children, but it is a right and duty that belongs only to the State governments. To allow the Federal Government to intervene in such matters would be to destroy the fundamental principles of our Government.

The regulation of child labor is a matter of internal-police power, and it is kindergarten constitutional law that the police powers are original inherent rights that belong only to the several States of this Union.

In the License Cases, reported in 5 Howard 504, the Supreme Court of the United States said: "But what are the police powers of a State? They are nothing more or less than the powers of government inherent in every sovereignty to the extent of its dominions." In the case of Moore v. State of Illinois, reported in 14 Howard 15, the Supreme Court of the United States, in their opinion written by Justice Grier, of Pennsylvania, said: "The power to make municipal regulations for the restraint and punishment of crime, for the preservation of the health and morals of her citizens, and for the public peace has never been surrendered by the States, or restrained by the Constitution of the United States."

Knowing full well the utter unconstitutionality of this proposed Federal law, on account of its being a usurpation of the police powers of the States, its advocates have attempted to disguise it under the pretended application of the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution.

Appending the word interstate to a law which is merely a usurpation does not give it any validity. Chief Justice Marshall, Chief Justice Chase, one of the founders of the Republican Party, and an orthodox Hamiltonian, and Chief Justice Waite, appointed by Gen. Grant, and also an orthodox Hamiltonian, have all said in delivering their opinions for the Supreme Court of the United States that the Federal Government is one of delegated, limited, and enumerated powers, and that the Government must look to the Constitution to find out what its powers can be. Its powers being all delegated, it has no inherent powers. Implied powers are not inherent powers. Any law passed by Congress in violation of the Federal Constitution is ultra vires.

There is nothing unhygienic or defective in the goods made by child labor. The attack is not made on the goods but on the employers of the makers of the goods. These goods in nowise endanger the health of the people of the several States of this Union. Their manufacture injures the health and education of the children who help to make them, but these matters are under the control of the States of which the children are residents, and not of the General Government.

The hypocrisy of the advocates of this proposed law is transparent. They are appealing to the sympathy of mankind for children, and are keeping arguments concerning interstate commerce in the background. They do this in order to get votes, because they know unless they do so they will fail.

The origin of this attempted law is the jealousy of the manufacturers of one State of those of another.

Every trust and monopoly in the United States has its headquarters either in Boston or New York. Lord Chief Justice Popham, of England, said monopoly was against common law and common right. The statutes of every State of this Union, as well as of the United States, make monopoly a public offense. Let some one introduce into Congress a bill forbidding the transportation through and sale in the United States of any article manufactured by a trust or monopoly and you will then hear a howl go up from Boston to Chicago, and this unconstitutional child-labor law will then die an early death. All centralizers and admirers of Chief Justice Marshall say that the greatest decision he ever rendered was McCulloch v. State of Maryland.

In that decision he says: "No political dreamer was ever wild enough to think of breaking down the lines which separate the States and of compounding the American people into one common mass."

As late as the year 1909 the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Keller v. United States, reported in 213 United States, 138, in an opinion written by Justice Brewer, an orthodox Republican and Hamiltonian, said: "To exaggerate in the one direction and restrict in the other will tend to substitute one consolidated government for the present Federal system. We should never forget the declaration in Texas v. White (7 Wall., 700), that the Constitution in all its provisions looks to an indestructible Union composed of indestructible States."

Thomas Jefferson, the master of the science of government, said, in his famous first inaugural address: "What I deem the essential principles of our Government and, consequently, those which ought to shape its administration, are the support of the State governments in all their rights as the most competent administrations for our domestic concerns and the surest bulwarks against antirepublican tendencies, and the preservation of the General Government in its whole constitutional vigor as the sheet anchor of our peace at home and safety abroad."

Do the American people wish to see our Federal Government turned into a centralized bureaucratic despotism?

CORNELIUS H. FAUNTLEROY.

ST. LOUIS.

Mr. REED. I also ask permission to insert in the RECORD, without reading, as a part of my remarks, an article by Mr. Benson.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

The matter referred to is as follows:

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

[By Allan L. Benson.]

We shall see, if we scrutinize the facts carefully, that the Republican Party this year has the same claim to the support of 90 per cent of the American people that a chicken hawk has to the support of chickens. A political party must be judged by its candidates, its platform, and the men who make its candidates and its platform. Judged by these standards, the Republican Party this year is particularly bad. Its candidates are the life-long servants of the plutocracy. Its platform is the last word in insincerity, hypocrisy, and rapacity. The men who made the candidates and the platform are the sort of men who like such candidates and such a platform. Roosevelt is thrown in as a supporter for good measure. Without Roosevelt, the element of insincerity in the Republican campaign could hardly have escaped observation. With Roosevelt, it blazes up like a burning haystack at midnight.

Mr. Hughes is the stalking horse of a group of bad men. It is the purpose of these men to throw this country on its back and pick its pockets. They have chosen Mr. Hughes to assist them because Mr. Hughes has, among persons who do not know him, a good reputation. It has always been the good fortune of Mr. Hughes to escape the censure that he deserved and received praise to which he was not entitled. As an ideal candidate of the grabbing class, he also has about him a certain air of religion. A religious atmosphere is a political asset. Mr. Hughes is not only the son of a Baptist clergyman, but in years gone by, he was the superintendent of the Sunday school of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church to which the Rockefellers go to meet God. Mr. Hughes's respectability is further enhanced by the fact that to him still clings something of the aroma of the United States Supreme Court. Mr. Taft once said that, of all men, a judge occupied a position most like that of God. What wonder then that millions of the unthinking believe the Republican candidate for the Presidency to be a particularly suitable person to lead the fight in American against intrenched wrong?

It may surprise such kindly gentlemen to be told that Mr. Hughes is and always has been a fighter on the side of intrenched wrong. At the beginning of his career as a lawyer, he deliberately chose to support money as against men. Now money is supporting him.

Suppose we consider the concrete facts upon which these statements are based. Mr. Hughes, after his graduation from college turned to the study of the law. Desiring to enter the office of a firm of lawyers, he chose the office of Chamberlain, Carter & Hornblower, of New York City. Hornblower was a celebrated corporation lawyer, the New York Central Railroad Co. being one of his clients. He was also, and had been since 1880, an attorney for and one of the trustees of the New York Life Insurance Co., and as such trustee was the head of the committee that approved the "yellow-dog" fund with which the company molded legislation at Albany to its will. Mr. Hughes married the daughter of Mr. Carter, the senior member of the firm.

Mr. Hughes was admitted to the bar in 1884 and in 1888 became a member of the firm, the name of which was changed to Carter, Hughes & Cravath. Mr. Cravath is and for a generation has been one of the most eminent of corporation lawyers. Thomas F. Ryan was then building his great fortune, and Cravath helped him.

Mr. Hughes had not long been a member of the firm when a big case came his way. It concerned the question as to whether the electric light companies should obey the State law which required them to put their wire under ground. Mr. Hughes said they should not. A good many firemen had been electrocuted by the wires. The legislature had been moved to enact the law only because of the deep indignation of the people. Yet Mr. Hughes lent whatever powers he had to keep the wires where they were. Property rights were at stake. Property rights must be defended. The court thought so, too, and decided against the city. The city appealed to a higher court which reversed the decision, and incidentally placed the following blister upon the back of Mr. Hughes and his associates:

"When it is apparent," said the higher court, "as in the case at bar, that the condition of the wires is such that they are dangerous to human life, and that any passer-by, without negligence on his part, is liable to be struck dead in the street, can it be said for a moment that the public authorities have no power to abate this nuisance and protect the lives of its citizens?"

The court also added that the companies "are without excuse, and when they claim that the destruction of these instruments of death * * * is an invasion of the rights of property, such claim seems to proceed upon the assumption that nothing has a right to exist except themselves."

Charles Evans Hughes was in favor of corporate wealth then; that was in 1889. Where does corporate wealth stand now as to Charles Evans Hughes?

Read something recently written that was not intended for the public. Read what the New York stockbrokers who receive the service of Paine, Webber & Co. were told about the middle of July. This is the way the railway interests regard the candidacy of Mr. Hughes:

"In addition to the ordinary considerations of values, there has arisen a particularly favorable element in the Republican candidacy of Mr. Hughes. His attitude toward the railroads in the past has been extremely reassuring and there is slight reason to doubt that his election would be followed by such constructive action as would seem most desirable to all who are interested in railway investments."

Does Wall Street's memory go back to the electric light suit of 1889 and all that lies between? It does. Is the class for which he was then for him now? It is. I have a means of getting information direct from Wall Street. In July information came to me that Wall Street regarded the election of Hughes as a certainty, and boasted that within a year from his inauguration we should be at war with Mexico. The "Street"—which means Rockefeller and Morgan—intends to put behind the Hughes campaign all the money it needs. Wall Street believes money settles all political questions. Wall Street is right. When men will not think, money talks. The men of America seldom think. They are too busy working for a bare living. Furthermore, too little that is worth thinking about is put before them in print. Wall Street sees to that. The capitalist interests, through the press, always obscure real issues and trump up fraudulent ones. Why should not money decide the election? It always has. The great capitalists, under President Wilson, have prospered wonderfully, not because of anything he has done, but because of what he has not done. If Mr. Wilson were to be reelected, the grafting game would still be good. Wall Street believes that if Mr. Hughes were to be elected the grafting game would be a great deal better. If the great capitalists care to put up enough money, they can unquestionably "put Hughes over." We shall know after election precisely to what extent the great capitalists preferred Hughes to Wilson.

* * * * * * *

The fact that railway interests are using the Hughes candidacy to bull the market for railway stocks is therefore an indication of the unusual friendship that Mr. Hughes has shown for the railroads. Need we be in the dark as to the facts? Not at all. What did Mr. Hughes do when, as governor of New York, the legislature enacted a law limiting to 2 cents a mile the sum that any railway operating within the State might charge for hauling a passenger? He promptly vetoed the bill. Why? The reason he gave was that he did not believe the legislature had sufficiently investigated the question to enable it to say that 2 cents a mile was enough. He did not assert that he knew 2 cents a mile to be too little. Instead of approving the bill and putting upon the railroads the burden of proving that 2 cents a mile was not enough, he vetoed it and put upon the people the burden of proving that more than 2 cents a mile was too much. The burden is there yet. The people are loosely knit together and slow to act. The railway interests are closely knit together and act swiftly. The railway interests are now acting to bring about the election of Hughes. As the stock market bulletin says of Hughes: "His attitude toward the railroads in the past has been extremely reassuring, and there is slight reason to doubt that his election would be followed by such constructive action as would seem most desirable to all who are interested in railway investments."

Glanced at as mere lines of type, this is but a fine flow of language. Considered closely, it is more. What do investors in railway securities consider "most desirable"? Does the word "dividends" constitute an answer? If so, upon what do higher dividends depend? Can they depend upon anything else—the volume of traffic being constant—than higher freight and passenger rates? The railway interests can not expect the election of Hughes to increase traffic, which has already reached the physical capacity of the roads. Stripped down to plain English, then, the railway interests believe the election of Hughes would cause higher passenger and freight rates.

Is this an unwarranted assumption? If you believe it is, look at the Republican platform. A paragraph about which not much will be said during the campaign reads as follows:

"The entire transportation system of the country has become essentially national. We therefore favor such action by legislation or, if necessary, through an amendment to the Constitution of the United States as will result in placing it exclusively under Federal control."

Do you observe the word "exclusively" near the end of the last sentence? The railroads want no more meddling with their affairs by States. All corporations welcome the States when they can hide behind them. All corporations desire to hamstring the States when the States are more responsive than the Congress to the popular will. The railroads, believing it would be easier to control one Congress than 48 State legislatures, now want the legislatures to be deprived of their power to legislate in railway matters. The railway gentlemen are not to be blamed for their ability to see upon which side their bread is buttered. But what shall we say of the people if they butter the bread of railway shareholders by voting for Hughes?

The great corporations are quite right in turning from Mr. Wilson, who has served them tolerably well in many instances, to Mr. Hughes, who would doubtless serve them much better in each instance. When Mr. Hughes was governor of New York he heard that Congress had submitted to the State legislatures for ratification a proposed amendment to the Constitution authorizing the taxation of incomes. Mr. Hughes straightway got into action. With a magnifying glass of exceedingly high power, he discovered a flyspeck upon the proposed amendment. In a lengthy message to the legislature he called attention to the words "from whatever source derived" in the proposed amendment. These words, he said, would give the National Government power to impose what would amount to a tax upon State bonds by compelling the holders of such bonds to pay a tax upon the interest received. Mr. Hughes tried hard to make his flyspeck appear to be a mountain, but failed. More than three-fourths of the State legislatures brushed his quibbling aside. Still Mr. Hughes tried, and his effort stands to his credit in Wall Street to-day.

Mr. Hughes, when he became governor of New York, found the people in ugly mood toward the great corporations. Mr. Hughes kindly offered a remedy. The transportation, light, power, telegraph, and telephone companies would be placed under State control. One public-service commission would keep the corporations in the city of New York in order. Another public-service commission would keep its heel on the corporations in the rest of the State.

These public-service commissions have been in existence ever since Mr. Hughes's time. They have yet to perform the act for which Mr. Hughes said he intended them. The governor nominates them, the senate confirms them, and the corporations rule them. They have fallen so low in public esteem that none will do them honor. The same plan has been tried in New Jersey with the same result. Instead of putting the corporations in their place and keeping them there, the corporations put the commissioners in their place and keep them there. What Mr. Hughes appeared not to think of has happened—the corporations control the commissions. The corporations are so fond of the commissions that Mr. Hughes created to "control" them that they placed a section in the proposed new constitution for New York in which public-service commissioners were made constitutional officers, and therefore unremovable by the governor or the legislature. This constitution, it may be remembered, when submitted in 1915 to the people for approval, was defeated by a majority of about 500,000. Yet many people believe that the Hughes public-service commission idea constitutes one of the reasons why he should be elected President of the United States.

Another jewel in the Hughes crown is the fact that he helped to do away with race-track gambling in the State of New York. He is entitled to credit for that. Some gambling continues, but that is the fault of the district attorneys who fail to proceed against the gamblers and the governor who fails to remove the district attorneys rather than the fault of Hughes. But why reward with the Presidency a man who honestly tried to do away with race-track gambling in New York? Has the Presidency become so cheap as that? Race-track gambling has been done away with in a number of States. Does anyone know the names of the governors who were in at the finish? Has anyone suggested that any of them be elected President? But did any of them also veto a 2-cent fare bill, and sting his State with a public-service commission that the corporations liked and the people detested?

But what about Mr. Hughes's part in the insurance investigation a dozen years ago? Well, what about it? What did he do?

Here is what Hughes did. He cross-examined the witnesses by asking questions suggested to him by an actuary. The insurance business is a highly technical subject. Hughes knew nothing in particular about it. An actuary coached him all the way. I doubt if Hughes knew exactly what he was doing some of the time. I am compelled to believe this in order to believe him honest. This is why: While the investigation was proceeding an official of one of the great companies whom I had long known in a friendly way said to me: "Hughes always stops when to press his questions a little further would bring out matters that none of the insurance companies want known."

Hughes's work as an investigator of the insurance companies probably did some good. I say "probably," because it is unlikely that anything of whien so much has been made was entirely useless. But the value of the work was unquestionably much overestimated. The great fact is that the insurance companies are still charging too much for insurance, the policyholders are paying the money, and the companies are getting it. Besides this fact all others are of little consequence. The insurance companies are so tremendously powerful financially that if Hughes had really hurt them they would never have forgiven him. What insurance magnate is fighting Hughes now for what he did in 1905? Let Hughes or any of his friends name one.

The fact is that the men of greatest wealth are solidly lined up behind Hughes. If we were to believe newspaper reports, perhaps we should have to make an exception of John D. Rockefeller, jr. The younger Rockefeller, according to the newspapers, has announced that he favors the reelection of Mr. Wilson.

I suspect that young Mr. Rockefeller is trying to hurt Wilson by tainting him with the Rockefeller indorsement. If young Mr. Rockefeller is against Hughes, he has changed since 1906, when he contributed $2,500 to help elect Hughes governor of New York. Rockefeller and Hughes are both Baptists, and, as already stated, Hughes was once the Sunday-school superintendent in Rockefeller's church. Before Hughes went to Washington to live he and young John D. Rockefeller were frequently seen together in New York, and their actions indicated that they were warm friends.

But there are other reasons for believing that Mr. Hughes has not been deserted by the Rockefellers. Mr. Hughes chose for his campaign manager Mr. William R. Willcox. Mr. Willcox married into the Havemeyer family. Wall Street understands that he is private counsel for the Consolidated Gas Co., of New York. The Consolidated Gas Co. is a Rockefeller institution. It is the understanding in Wall Street that Mr. Willcox is very close to the Standard Oil interests.

Hughes and the great corporations have ever worked hand in hand, he helping them and they helping him. When he was governor of New York he vetoed a bill to reduce the fare from New York City to Coney Island from 10 to 5 cents. Also, during his term of office, a great many residents of New York petitioned him to remove District Attorney Jerome, who having been elected to office to prosecute the traction looters failed to do so. Hughes ignored the petitioners and permitted Jerome to remain in office. The people themselves, however, never forgave Mr. Jerome, their fallen idol.

The great capitalists evidently believed Hughes would be the kind of governor he was, as they contributed heavily to bring about his election in 1906. J. P. Morgan & Co. gave $20,000. Levi P. Morton gave $20,000 more. Andrew Carnegie, John D. Rockefeller, jr., H. B. Hollins, and E. M. Wells each gave $5,000. J. & W. Seligman and Kuhn, Loeb & Co. were among those who gave $2,500 each. Charles M. Schwab, Edwin Gould, Jacob Schiff, William H. Moore, and Adolph Lewisohn gave $2,000 each. The whole fund amounted to $313,923.

So far as known no labor union contributed a dollar to this fund. If any labor union did contribute a dollar, it did not succeed in weaning Hughes away from his Wall Street leanings. When Hughes became an associate justice of the United States Supreme Court he concurred in the decision that threatened to take away the homes of the striking Danbury hatters and turn them over to their employers. All that Hughes could do to take away the homes of these old men he did. The homes were saved only because organized labor raised a fund to save them.

It would therefore be risky to say of Hughes, as we sometimes say of a candidate, that he is better than the platform of his party. The Republican platform is exceedingly bad, but it is doubtful if it is so bad as that. Hughes is bad, not only because of his associations and his record, but because of the shameless insincerity with which he is trying to displace Wilson. He appears to be willing to do or say anything to get votes. If Democratic demagogues wave the flag, Hughes tries to wave it a little harder. When the Progressive Party went to pieces Hughes welcomed its traitor leader and sent a letter to the rank and file of the party urging them to "forget past differences" and come back to the Republican Party.

What a monstrous appeal! How can the Progressives, if they are honest—which most of the rank and file are—forget past differences? Those differences were differences of principle. They are as glaring now as they were in 1912. The Republican Party this year is in the hands of the same sinister interests that controlled it four years ago. If there were reasons why honest Republicans should quit the party in 1912, each of those reasons still exists. Yet Mr. Hughes insults honest Progressives by asking them to "forget past differences," thereby assuming that they left the Republican Party not on principle, but because of some miserable differences with its leaders. Mr. Roosevelt, having left the Republican Party to punish it, went back to it when he believed it had been punished enough. If every other Progressive were as shifty, selfish, and politically fraudulent as Mr. Roosevelt, the appeal of Mr. Hughes to "forget past differences" might be expected to have great effect. The Hughes appeal will have no effect among Progressives that are both intelligent and honest—and there must be many such.

Mr. Hughes betrayed his insincerity shortly after his nomination when he declared that every intelligent person knew that the present prosperity was destined to be short-lived.

I agree with Mr. Hughes that Mr. Wilson and his party did not bring the improved business conditions that exist. As to how long these conditions will remain, I do not know. Neither does Mr. Hughes know. If there is anything that neither Republicans nor Democrats know how to get or how to keep, it is improved business conditions. Business went to smash in 1907 under a Republican President. Another Republican President, Mr. Taft, was elected to make business good, but in four years he failed to do it. Then a Democratic President was elected to make business good. Mr. Wilson, in my opinion, is exceptional among Presidents for the fidelity with which he has proceeded to carry out the platform promises of his party. How worthless were these promises may be judged from the fact that notwithstanding Mr. Wilson's "achievements" business in this country was exceedingly bad until the European war dumped so much money into America that business had to revive.

The insincerity of Hughes's criticism of the temporary nature of the present "prosperity" is that he holds out the hope that if the country were to turn to him and his party such "prosperity" would become permanent. The Republican Party in 1904 did not know how to keep prosperity, or it would not have permitted the panic of 1907. The Republican Party in 1908 did not know enough to bring prosperity, or it would not have permitted the administration of Taft to pass without any prosperity. What has the Republican Party learned about prosperity since 1908?

The Republican platform opens with an attack upon Mr. Wilson's foreign policy, particularly as it pertains to the European war and the rights of neutrals. Mr. Hughes will not seriously contend that this even remotely touches the subject of prosperity.

The next paragraph has to do with Mexico. As an example of studied hypocrisy this paragraph could not well be excelled. The Republican Party has the audacity to "sympathize" with the people of Mexico because they have for three years been plagued with "bandits." The Republican gentlemen seem not to know that the Mexican people have for three years been making a tremendous effort to recover their land and other resources that American and other capitalists have obtained by means mostly fraudulent. The Republican gentlemen seem not to know that such banditti as have arisen are but the inevitable results of civil war in such a Nation. The hypocrites who wrote this plank denounce "the indefensible methods of interference" employed by the Wilson administration, and in the next breath pledge their aid "in restoring order and maintaining peace in Mexico."

Farther than that hypocrisy and cold cunning can not go. They are the last words in their line. And they have nothing to do with the matter of bringing prosperity to America and keeping it.

The platform next indorses the Monroe doctrine, but it indorses it no more strongly than does the Democratic platform. The Monroe doctrine can hardly be said to have anything to do with prosperity, and if it had, Mr. Hughes has nothing to teach Mr. Wilson about it.

Then comes a hypocritical line about "drawing more and more closely" the business relations between the United States and Latin America. If Latin America is any judge of American treatment of her, the line that American business men mostly try to draw about her is the noose. At any rate, the paragraph has nothing to do with prosperity.

The Republican platform stands for the retention of the Philippines, at least until about the time that Gabriel blows his trumpet. The Democratic Party in 1912 took the opposite view but broke its promise, and this year drops the subject, which is practical acquiescence in the Republican demand. Nor does this show how to hold prosperity.

The Republican platform is for "an adequate Army and Navy." So is the Democratic platform. The Republicans demand a higher tariff. So do the Democrats. The Republican Party demands "rigid supervision of corporations." Oh, how the corporations fear the Republican Party!

The Republican and the Democratic platforms both indorse woman suffrage, while leaving it to the women to go about the hardest way to get it, and the Republican platform has this gem:

"We pledge the Republican Party to the faithful enforcement of all Federal laws passed for the protection of labor."

There are no Federal laws in the interest of labor that amount to anything, and those that amount to nothing apply, for the most part, only to Federal employees and the District of Columbia. These laws the Republican Party pledges itself to enforce!

So the platform goes. The remainder of it has to do only with minor matters which have absolutely nothing to do with prosperity. Yet Mr. Hughes has the audacity to criticize Mr. Wilson because the present improved conditions are only temporary! When men of less renown than Mr. Hughes employ such cheap devices unkind persons sometimes call them demagogues. What can Mr. Hughes bring forward to prove he is not a demagogue? If he has proof he should submit it. If he knows how to bring and keep prosperity he knows more than his party has demonstrated up to this time that it knows. If he knows no more about the matter than Mr. Wilson and the Democratic Party know common honesty should prevent him from scoring the President and holding out false hope. If Mr. Wilson is politically wise he will rub this subject in Mr. Hughes's face at every opportunity this fall. He will make Mr. Hughes tell what he knows about bringing and keeping prosperity, or he will make him admit, at least by his evasion of the issue, that he is something of a mountebank.

Mr. Hughes and his platform should command, on their merits, the solid millionaire vote. They should command nothing else. An American farmer or an American wageworker who votes the Republican ticket will thereby demonstrate his inability to tell his own interests from the interests of those who are robbing him. Yet the power of the great capitalists of America is so great that they will induce millions to vote the bread out of their own mouths!

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I have been suspicious at times that there was a filibuster in process of operation against the corrupt-practices bill. I confess that it is sometimes difficult for me to distinguish a filibuster, but I have my suspicions about this one. I want to say, however, that in the brief remarks I am about to make I am in no way trying to assist the filibuster against the corrupt-practices act, because I thoroughly believe in a corrupt-practices act, and hope that we may pass one at this session, though my hope is growing less. I think those upon this side who are filibustering, if they are, against the corrupt-practices bill, if the filibuster is directed against any corrupt-practices bill, are making a very great mistake; and I do not for one instant concede that they represent the Republican Party in so doing, or any large element of the Republican Party.

If this bill ought to be amended, both sides ought to meet it in a fair spirit and enact a law that would amount to something, and quit calling each other names. It is a case of the pot calling the kettle black. Both parties have been guilty of spending too much money in elections. We ought to have a corrupt-practices act unless somebody wants to buy the Presidency, and I do not believe that one party wants to buy it any more than the other.

But I did not rise for that purpose. I rose more to a question of privilege.

During my absence from the Senate some days ago the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] said, as appears by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

> It is a curious fact that the State of Iowa is the only one of the States of the Union which showed an actual decrease in population at the last census; and, as I view it, if the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], who has so persistently fought appropriations for rivers and harbors, would study the situation carefully he would see that the future industrial development of his State will be vitally affected by the improvement and use, or the failure to improve and use, the waterways which run from the borders of his State to the waters of the seas.

Mr. President, this was in the nature of a mild rebuke to our State and to some of its representatives, a gentle hint that the State of Iowa would be more prosperous if it joined with the general raid upon the Public Treasury for river and harbor bills, a sort of philosophy that the prosperity of a State had some dependence upon the pork barrel. If it be true, of course, that large appropriations for rivers and harbors bring about great prosperity, and that the failure to secure them operates in the opposite direction, it would be supposed that the State of my good friend from Louisiana would be vastly more prosperous than the State of Iowa, because in securing appropriations I am sure no one is more deft or successful than the able Senator from the State of Louisiana.

It is a curious coincidence that just about the time that my good friend was admonishing us that we ought to join more heartily in securing these appropriations and regretting the decrease in population of our State, a committee from his State was in our State, a few days after that, studying agricultural conditions and studying how Iowa was making such a success of farming. I ask, without reading it, as I do not want to take up unnecessary time, that it be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

LOUISIANA MEN TO VIEW IOWA FARMS.

DES MOINES, August 22.

Louisian agriculturists, business men, and newspaper correspondents will study farm conditions in Iowa from August 30 to September 3, it was announced here to day. The party, which numbers about 100, will visit Waterloo on August 30, coming to Des Moines the next day, going to Ames on September 2, and concluding their stay in the State at Des Moines on September 3.

The purpose of the tour, according to J. Z. George, acting general manager of the New Orleans Association of Commerce, is to study the advanced farming and dairying methods used by the farmers of this section, with a view to using the information in the promotion of scientific farming in the agricultural sections of Louisiana. The tour also includes the States of Illinois, Wisconsin, and Missouri.

Mr. KENYON. It is true, Mr. President, that there was some decrease in population in my State from 1900 to 1910; and I insert in the RECORD without reading, an editorial from Wallace Farmer in relation to that subject. I will say a word about it later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WRONG IDEA OF POPULATION DECREASE.

While there has been much talk about the decrease in population in Iowa from 1900 to 1910, after all there was a falling off of only 7,082, which is very small. This, of course, was in the rural territory, and practically all the States showed a falling off in rural population. The urban population in Iowa gained 19.9 per cent from 1900 to 1910, while the rural population decreased 7.2 per cent. There was a decrease in the number of foreign-born population from 1900 to 1910 of 32,155. The total foreign-born population in 1900 was 305,920 and in 1910 it was 273,765.

Mr. KENYON. The people of Iowa have gone to most of the States of the Union. I know that there are cities in the State of the Senator from Louisiana populated almost entirely by Iowa people. In California every year they hold what is called an Iowa picnic, at which there are registered from 35,000 to 50,000 Iowa people. Our people have gone into the States of the Northwest and have helped to populate them.

Mr. President, it might be inferred from the statement of the Senator that we did not have in Iowa the high degree of prosperity that we should have. I want to insert in the RECORD a short article from the Des Moines Register, showing that in the year 1914 the crops of Iowa amounted to $1,000,000,000, and the dairy products alone amounted to $100,000,000. I will not stop to read this, but assume that it may be printed, without objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, that course will be pursued.

The matter referred to is as follows:

IOWA IN BILLION-DOLLAR CLASS BY HERSELF IN 1914—FARM CROPS ARE WORTH OVER $1,000,000,000, WITH DAIRY PRODUCTS $100,000,000—OTHER STATES DISTANCED—CORN CROP MILLIONS OF BUSHELS AHEAD OF ILLINOIS, THE NEAREST COMPETITOR—WORLD'S DEMANDS LARGE—HAWKEYE PRODUCTS TO COMMAND HIGH PRICES ALL ALONG THE LINE.

Iowa's farm crops this year are valued at more than $1,000,000,000, and the dairy products, poultry, and eggs will yield $100,000,000 additional, according to a statement issued yesterday by Howard N. Whitney, of the Iowa department of agriculture.

This year, in spite of a serious drought during the growing season, Iowa's leadership over other States of the Union as the greatest agricultural Commonwealth is more pronounced than ever. Her corn crop is 74,000,000 bushels greater than that of her nearest competitor for agricultural honors—Illinois. Indiana ranks third in the United States in the number of bushels of corn produced this year, yet Iowa's corn yield is two and one-third times greater than that of Indiana.

HAS LONG LEAD.

"Iowa also has a long lead over the other grain-producing States in her oats crop, which is 27,000,000 bushels greater than that of Illinois, which produced the second largest oat crop," said Mr. Whitney. "This year Iowa's wheat crop, both spring and winter, did not equal that of last year by about 5,000,000 bushels, but prices for wheat are running strong, and this year's wheat crop will undoubtedly be of more money value than that of last year. In 1913 the potato crop was almost a failure, but this year the crop totals over 13,000,000 bushels, which is about the average crop.

"The hay crop, while short in southern Iowa, was good in other parts of the State and totals 3,899,000 tons, valued at $46,788,000. In fact, this year's field crops will be worth more than $1,000,000,000. The dairy products and poultry and eggs will be worth another $100,000,000. If to the field crops and the dairy and poultry products are added the value of live stock on farms the figures would total considerably more than $1,000,000,000.

"WORLD'S FOOD SUPPLY.

"This magnificent contribution to the necessities of life from the fields and herds of Iowa is considered especially fortunate this year, when foreign countries are being devastated by war. Iowa will undoubtedly be called upon to furnish a large per cent of the world's food supply, and will profit accordingly.

"That Iowa should produce a corn crop of 379,000,000 bushels in this last season of unusual drought is significant of the fertility of the soil and the skill of the Iowa farmer. Iowa's corn crop for the last five years has averaged around 350,000,000 bushels, so that this year's crop is above the average, in spite of the fact that corn suffered seriously from the dry weather, especially in southern Iowa.

"GOOD PRICES FOR GRAIN.

"All of the grain crops will bring good prices this year. On October 1 the average farm price for corn throughout the United States was 69 cents, which would make the Iowa corn crop worth $261,510,000. The Iowa oats crop totaled 163,000,000 bushels and would be worth, according to October 1 prices, over $60,000,000. The wheat crop, totaling 14,800,000 bushels, would be worth at October 1 farm prices $13,383,000. The barley crop, totaling 9,980,000 bushels, would be worth $4,990,000, and the rye crop, totaling 1,121,000 bushels, would be worth $885,590. The potato crop, totaling 13,600,000 bushels, would be worth $8,604,000, and the hay crop of 3,889,000 tons would be worth $46,788,000.

"Iowa alone produces more corn than Nebraska, Kansas, and Oklahoma combined. She produces more oats than the total of the three States of North Dakota, South Dakota, and Missouri. In her poultry products she is again far in the lead, and is gaining steadily on New York and Wisconsin in their dairy output.

"Reports from over the State are to the effect that lands are not changing hands as generally as in the seasons past, and there is a big demand for farms to rent. Iowa farmers are in a position to hold their crops for the most advantageous prices, and there is evidence that next spring's prices will be unusually high."

Mr. KENYON. The Monthly Crop Reporter, February 20, 1916, giving the value of the 13 principal crops, gives Iowa $295,202,000, and gives the State of my distinguished friend $71,042,000. It may be remarked, parenthetically, that in the year 1914 Iowa outranked all other States in the Union in the value of crops.

From the same publication, January 1, 1916, I place in the RECORD a statement showing the estimated value of live stock, including horses, mules, cows, cattle, sheep, and swine, in the State of Iowa and the State of Louisiana:

Estimated live stock, Jan. 1, 1916.

	Iowa.	Louisiana.
Horses	$166,320,000	$15,820,000
Mules	6,710,000	12,672,000
Milch cows	81,374,000	10,027,000
Other cattle	104,827,000	7,980,000
Sheep	8,026,000	426,000
Swine	84,342,000	11,307,000
Total	451,599,000	61,368,000

It is sufficient to say that the value of Iowa live stock is approximately $451,599,000 and of the State of Louisiana $61,568,000, and the amount of money deposited in banks is something of a criterion as to the prosperity of a State.

In the State of my distinguished friend the money deposited in the national banks up to June 30, 1915, was $40,337,000; the amount deposited in other banks up to June 30, 1915, was $90,484,000; the amount deposited in national banks up to June 30, 1916, was $55,384,000. The total deposits of the national banks in the whole State of Iowa for the year ending June 30, 1916, was $203,162,000; in other banks, outside of private banks, $364,744,000, making a total of $567,162,744.

There is more money on deposit in the savings banks of Iowa than there is on deposit in the savings banks of all the Southern States combined.

I insert an editorial along this line taken from the Des Moines Register and Leader, which I ask may be incorporated in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Editorial from Des Moines Register and Leader.]

Iowa produces in greater abundance than any spot on earth the raw materials of wealth.

If it were not for the newspapers, Iowa would never know of panics.

It is a very small town in Iowa where the local banks do not hold a million dollars of surplus farm money.

Iowa subscribes for more magazines, pays for more newspapers, maintains more chautauquas and lecture courses, buys more books, rides in new automobiles, and offers a better market for everything that ought to have a market than any equal population on earth.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the fairest land the sun shines on to-day is that imperial domain between the great rivers. Iowa has advanced in the value of its farm land in the last 10 years more than any State in the Union. The production of its lands almost staggers belief. Iowa is first of all the States in the Union in the production of corn; it is first in the production of oats; first in the value of its live stock: first in its eggs and poultry; first in its hogs; first in the value of its horses; second in the production of hay. In the year 1913 Iowa's corn yield amounted to 338,300,000 bushels, and this was a poor year, being 93,721,000 bushels less than was raised in the State in 1912. In the year 1913 Iowa had planted to corn 9,956,000 acres; Illinois had planted to corn in the same year 10,450,000 acres; but Illinois produced some 50,000,000 bushels less of corn on more land, and this year the corn crop alone of Iowa will amount to 365,000,000 bushels.

In the year 1913 Iowa produced 168,360,000 bushels of oats; Minnesota stood second, with a yield of 112,644,000 bushels of oats.

In the year 1913 Iowa produced one-seventh of the total corn crop of the United States and one-tenth of the total corn crop of the world.

The Iowa hens in 1913 laid 1,170,596,792 eggs, and had a three months' vacation in the bargain. Enough eggs placed end to end to reach around the world and half way to the moon. The value of the poultry and eggs in 1913 in the State of Iowa was about $38,000,000. That is more than the sugar-cane production of the State of Louisiana. This is more than the annual output of the gold mines of Alaska. Iowa's poultry, together with the egg crop, in a single year would buy 64,000 automobiles of the Ford variety.

In 1913 Iowa produced one-fourth of the total sweet corn, packed, of the world. Iowa has twice the number of swine of any State in the Union. Iowa people received last year about $28,285,249 for butter made in Iowa. Iowa's apple crop is exceeded only by the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Michigan, and Missouri. Iowa's berry crop is greater in value than that of any State west of the Mississippi River, except Missouri and California.

Iowa has over 95 per cent of its land tillable; its crop in 1914 was worth approximately $1,000,000,000. The crop output of the United States that year was nearly $10,000,000,000. The State of Iowa produced one-tenth of all that wealth.

Iowa has more banks than any other State in the Union, representing deposits of $567,000,000, as I have heretofore said.

Iowa has the lowest per cent of illiteracy of any State in the Union; it has the greatest per capita wealth of any State in the Union; it has the smallest per capita of indebtedness of any State in the Union, amounting to only 3 cents per capita.

A considerable percentage of the Members of Congress, I think of both the House and Senate, were born in Iowa and many of those who could not themselves be born in Iowa went to Iowa to get their wives.

According to the census of 1910 here are the values of the farm lands in a number of States, which I ask may be inserted in the RECORD.

According to the census of 1910 the value of all farm property in the State of—

New Hampshire	$103,704,196
Massachusetts	226,474,0 5
New York	1,451,481,495
Iowa	3,745,860,544
Louisiana	301,220,988

The value of the land in these States, according to the census of 1910, was as follows:

New Hampshire	44,519,047
Massachusetts	105,532,616
New York	707,747,828
Iowa	2,801,973,729
Louisiana	187,803,277

Implements and machinery.

New Hampshire	5,877,657
Massachusetts	11,563,894
New York	83,644,822
Iowa	95,477,948
Louisiana	18,077,053

Value of live stock.

New Hampshire	11,910,478
Massachusetts	20,741,366
New York	183,090,844
Iowa	393,603,196
Louisiana	44,699,485

The average value of land for these various States, according to the 1910 census per acre:

New Hampshire, $13.70, an increase over 1900 of 39.4 per cent.

Massachusetts, average value $36.69, an increase over 1900 of 32.8 per cent.

New York, average value $32.13, an increase over 1900 of 32 per cent.

Iowa, average value $82.58, an increase over 1900 of 127.2 per cent.

Louisiana, average value $17,99 an increase over 1900 of 84.7 per cent.

Average value per farm, 1910 census.

New Hampshire	$3,833
Massachusetts	6,135
New York	6,732
Iowa	17,259
Louisiana	2,499

These figures are all from the census of 1910. Since that time Iowa lands have gone forward by leaps and bounds until today land with no improvement beside a fence is selling in the State of Iowa for $150 per acre, while improved farms are selling from $200 to $300 per acre.

This is the State that my good friend the Senator advises to get prosperity in by securing more money out of the Federal Treasury.

There has never been a complete failure of crops in Iowa. Not only in agriculture is the State progressing, but in manufacture. In 1909 she ranked eighteenth in the States in the Union in manufacturing, but her manufacturing establishments now produce goods that nearly equal the grain production of the State in value each year, so that Iowa is becoming a manufacturing State as well as an agricultural State. There was a slight decrease in poulation, as shown in the last census, a decrease of some 7,000.

It has been questioned whether the census was properly taken, but, in any event, this was confined to the rural districts; rural population everywhere has been decreasing, and as Iowa is, above all else, an agricultural State, it was natural that she should suffer in this respect. The urban population gained 19.9 per cent from 1900 to 1910, while the rural population decreased 7.2 per cent. The lands have become so high that the farmer is unable to buy adjacent lands for his boys, and so sells his farm and goes to a country of cheaper land, but they are already commencing to return, and many are simply trying to save money enough to get back into the old State of Iowa.

I ask to insert as a part of my remarks, without reading, a short article from Dr. Frank Crane, of Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

OUR GOOD OLD IOWA AS DR. CRANE SEES IT.

[By Dr. Frank Crane—Copyright, 1914.]

If Congress were to offer me my choice of any State in the Union as a reward for my worth and modesty, I should say, unhesitatingly, "Give me Iowa."

Because Iowa is the most American State in the Nation.

There are few millionaires, few paupers. No scum, no dregs, to speak of. They are just plain United States folks.

Iowa buys more first-class reading matter than any other State except New York.

Every 10 miles or so in Iowa there is a Chautauqua in the summer time. And where you find Chautauquas you find the people of the western world at their best.

If any foreigner wants to see what a real, genuine, dyed-in-the-wool United Stateser is, let him attend a Chautauqua.

Iowa is the new New England. New England is not New England any more. It is swamped, diluted, and washed out by immigrants.

There is about as much of the old Mayflower stock left in Massachusetts as there is old colonial furniture in Nantucket.

Boston is Irish, Worcester is Swedish, and Lowell is a little of everything.

Iowa is where the New Englanders that had snap have gone to.

In a recent financial paper I note:

That the farms of Iowa are worth more than the farms of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia, South Carolina, Florida, Alabama, Arizona, Utah, Nevada, New Mexico, Montana, and Wyoming combined.

The increase in value of Iowa farm land in the last 10 years is greater than the increase in value of all farm land in Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Nevada, Arkansas, Louisiana, and Oregon combined.

The Iowa corn crop is greater in value than the wheat crop of Canada or Argentine Republic.

The annual corn crop of Iowa is worth more than the annual yield of either iron ore, anthracite coal, petroleum products, or the products of all the gold, silver, or copper mines of the United States.

Iowa farm property is valued at $3,745,000,000.

Iowa farmers own farm machinery valued at $95,447,000.

Value of Iowa cattle $118,884,000.

Value of Iowa horses, $7,551,000.

Value of Iowa swine, $69,693,000.

Value of Iowa mules, $7,551,000.

Value of Iowa sheep, $5,748,000.

Value of Iowa poultry, $23,482,000.

Iowa last year made 93,911,906 pounds of butter in creameries, of which all but 6,978,000 pounds was exported from the State.

Iowa hens produced more wealth than Colorado's mines.

Iowa's per capita wealth, $1,839.

Some State, believe me!

Mr. KENYON. I also ask to insert an article by J. Edward Kirbye.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such will be the order if there be no objection.

The article referred to is as follows:

THE CREED OF IOWA.

[By J. Edward Kirbye.]

I believe in Iowa, beautiful land of open and starlit skies, of opalescent clouds of heat and cold, sunshine and rain which vivifies our splendid soil and makes it respond to the wants of man.

I believe in Iowa beautiful land of limitless prairies with rolling hills and fertile valleys, with winding and widening streams, with bounteous crops and fruit-laden trees, yielding to man their wealth and health.

I believe in Iowa land of agricultural resources almost untold, of limitless opportunities for development of wealth and where the automobile and the latest achievements in the science of farming find a welcome in a hundred thousand homes.

I believe in Iowa, rich in her men and women of power and might. I believe in her authors and educators, her statesmen and ministers whose intellectual and moral contribution is the mainstay of the Republic—true in the hour of danger and steadfast in the hour of triumph.

I believe in Iowa magnet and meeting place of all nations fused into a noble unity Americans all, blended into a free people. I believe in her stalwart sons, her winsome women, in her colleges and churches, in her institutions of philanthrophy and mercy, in her press, the voice and instructor of her common mind and will, in her leadership and destiny, in the magnificence of her opportunity, and in the responsibilities of her citizenship.

I believe in our Commonwealth yet young and in the process of making and palpitant with energy and faring forth with high hope and swift step, and I covenant with the God of my fathers to give myself in service, mind and money, hand and heart to explore and develop her physical, intellectual, and moral resources, to sing her praises truthfully to keep her politics pure, her ideals high, and to make better and better her schools and churches, her lands and homes, and to make her in fact what she is by divine right, the queen of all the Commonwealths.

Mr. KENYON. I wish simply to say in conclusion that I want to invite my distinguished friend to come out to Iowa. We will show him the greatest agricultural college in the world, with 3,000 bright boys and girls learning the science of agriculture; we will show him the greatest agricultural fair of any State in the Union; we will in the summer time pick up a Packard car from one of our prosperous farmers and drive him through miles and miles of fields of corn; we will show him thousands of acres where "Maud Muller on a summer's day" might draw a great inspiration "raking hay"; we will show him magnificent cattle and horses and hogs, chickens, eggs, potatoes, and everything that man might desire to see and know.

James G. Blaine, when once asked by some travelers of foreign nations as to what they should see in this country, replied: "The only advice I have to give is to see Iowa in the daytime in the harvest season." I want the Senator from Louisiana to take that advice. He will be satisfied that James G. Blaine was right; he will know that Iowa is indeed the beautiful land, and a cordiality of reception will be extended to him that will warm his heart. He will be convinced that the people of Iowa are not only attending to commercial and agricultural life, but they are engaged in the development of the highest ideals of citizenship. He will find schools, churches, colleges, homes and home lovers, builders of a mighty civilization.

He will be convinced of the truth of the epitaph upon the stone over the grave of one of Iowa's distinguished citizens in days gone by: "Iowa, the affections of her people like the rivers of her borders flow onward to an inseparable union"; he will also be convinced that—

God never made a better land
From the dawn of endless day;
He tried His hand on projects grand
Then made sweet Iowa.

Mr. THOMPSON obtained the floor.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment.

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator from Louisiana yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas has the floor.

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I wanted to join in the invitation of the Senator from Iowa to the Senator from Louisiana to visit Iowa because that would partially fit him and reconcile him to the still grander development and splendor of Minnesota. If he would continue his journey one day northward from Iowa it would acquaint him with that which he is not accustomed to.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I thank the Senators from Iowa and Minnesota very cordially for their invitations and gladly accept them. I shall be delighted to visit Iowa at the first opportunity, and when there will go also to Minnesota. I know that they are two of our greatest States, and the only thing I ask of these Senators is that, after I have visited them, they shall come to Louisiana and see the finest and best of all the States in the Union.

I had not the slightest idea when I was making my general speech on waterways in response to Mr. HUGHES that I was going to stir up my Iowa friend to make a speech on his State. I was talking about waterways for the whole Nation, and he has made a speech on the glories of Iowa. No one knows these glories much better than I do, and let me tell you where I learned of them, principally from Iowa people who settled in Louisiana, and they never have gone back to Iowa to live. They were so happy and prosperous in Louisiana that they have stayed there. Those Iowa folks are the very best men in the world who went to Louisiana and helped to develop its splendid resources. They were heartily welcomed, and we will gladly receive as many more as desire to come.

Senator KENYON, let me tell you when your people sell their lands at $300 to $350 an acre and wish to invest in the best lands in America send them to Louisiana. You can not find such opportunities in States which are fully developed. A large percentage of the lands of Louisiana are in a virgin state.

I did not intend to tread on the toes of the Senator from Iowa in the slightest degree when I said there had been a diminution of population in his great State, according to the last census. I believe it is the only State that has fallen off some seven or eight thousand in population. Just why I do not know, but the Senator has made an argument which confirms everything that I said about the wisdom of improving waterways. There is a marvelous commerce in Iowa to move, and I was trying to persuade the Senator and others to develop the waterways of this country in order that commerce might move by water—the cheapest and the best of all known means of transportation.

You have a fine river, Senator, on your eastern and another on your western border, and also good rivers in your interior. You have to-day an agricultural commerce exceeding a billion dollars every year, according to your showing; and that vast commerce requires capable transportation agents to move it. All that I asked of you in that respect and all I ask now is that we shall develop our waterways, which are much cheaper freight carriers than railways, that we shall not confine the people of Iowa or of the Union to railroads alone, but give them the competition which nature and nature's God intended they should have on their waterways, the best and the cheapest agencies of transportation on earth.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I am sure we were all delighted with the remarks of the brilliant junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] pertaining to the glorious things which exist in Iowa, and we were also delighted with the enthusiasm of the Senators from Minnesota and Louisiana for their States, but Kansas will be, as she always has been, glad to take care of the people from Iowa, from Louisiana, and from Minnesota as they gradually become dissatisfied there.

I must acknowledge that Iowa in some years past—I dare not say how many—did excel Kansas in one think only, and that is in the women it produced. As the Senator from Iowa intimated, I went to Iowa for a wife, but it was not until after she became dissatisfied with Iowa and came to Kansas. That is the only thing I can think of now in which Iowa has ever excelled the great Sunflower State, and she has now lost out on this score.

Mr. President, I am exceedingly glad that the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] has insisted upon the passage of this corrupt-practices bill before the adjournment of Congress, for if there is any legislation of the greatest importance to the Nation at this particular time, just preceding a national election, it is a good, workable, and efficient corrupt-practices act. To wait until after the election would be like locking the stable door after the horse is stolen. I have no reference to the horse mentioned by my genial friend, the distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], upon yesterday. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, ever since I have been in the Senate I have been greatly interested in corrupt-practice legislation. Among my first official acts as Senator, on April 17, 1913, a short time after the special session convened, I introduced a corrupt-practice bill known as Senate bill 1177. After three and a half years' struggle with legislation of this character in the Senate and before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, on which I have the honor to serve, it was indeed a great pleasure to me to have the privilege on May 29, 1916, to finally report favorably Senate bill 5437. Shortly after that date the House bill we are now considering, H. R. 15842, was referred to our committee and it was reported a few days later by the popular and distinguished senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN].

Mr. President, my special interest in this character of legislation was brought about because it was an issue in the campaign in which I was elected to the United States Senate. At the very commencement of that campaign at Melvern, Kans., where I spoke on the same platform with my opponent, the then governor of the State, Hon. W. R. Stubbs, I made this statement:

It is as much a disgrace for a candidate for President, by himself or others, to expend $16,000,000 to secure election, as it is for a candidate for the United States Senate to expend $100,000. No such expenditure can be honest or legitimate, and the man who makes it should be disqualified from holding the position he seeks, and certainly ineligible for a third term.

I have never changed my mind on the propositions there laid down.

Mr. President, I made that statement because at that time it was generally published and understood that the Roosevelt campaign of 1904 had cost the enormous sum of $16,000,000. I made the other statement in reference to United States Senators, because my opponent was a millionaire, and it was generally reputed that he had spent $50,000 to obtain the nomination for the Senate and would expend $50,000 more to secure the election. My opponent immediately seized upon this statement and upon the position I took as one of the issues for the campaign. I challenged him then and many times afterwards upon the stump to keep a record of every item of expenditure, and of every dollar contributed, and I would do the same. He agreed to this. I regret that he did not keep his word to do so, as well as I, for, Mr. President, I did keep account of every cent received from every source and of every cent expended for every purpose, as the records in the office of the Secretary of the Senate show. The total expenditures amounted to $5,991.32. My opponent, although a millionaire, and it was generally reputed that the election was to be bought, and it was known that money was lavishly spent everywhere, returned a statement showing an expenditure of only $2,555.97. I am sure my distinguished colleague [Mr. CURTIS] will verify his expense for telegrams alone that year, both before the primary and before the election, far exceeded the entire amount returned by him as expended during the two campaigns, for there was not a single prominent political worker in any precinct of the State who did not receive a long telegram the night before the primary and also before the general election; and at that time there were about 2,300 precincts in the State. If three workers, on an average received a telegram, at the lowest possible figure of 25 cents, this item alone would have amounted to nearly $3,500, and no return whatever was made of it.

In his sworn statement, which I have before me, there is no return for automobile hire, for automobiles used at the primary and on election day in the various 2,300 precincts, and there is no return for railroad fare anywhere about the State; while it will be seen by the return made by me, which I also have here, that this total, $5,991.32, includes telegrams, transportation, board, printing, railroad fare, postage, clerk hire, and everything else pertaining to the senatorial campaign.

Mr. President, if in a State 400 miles long and 200 miles wide, containing 2,300 voting precincts, and with a voting population of 350,000, you can legitimately conduct a campaign for the United States Senate and enter the 105 counties of the State in that campaign, there is no reason in the world why this bill should not at this time be passed. I know, from having kept track of every item, that such a campaign can be made for less than the amount which this bill permits as legitimate expenditures. "The proof of the pudding is in the eating." I know it can be done, and everybody knows it should be done.

Mr. President, my interest in this matter was such that, after I introduced the first bill, I addressed a letter to every secretary of state in the United States and to every State chairman of every political party in the various States of the Union as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
November 16, 1914.

MY DEAR SIR: For legislative purposes I would be glad to know exactly or approximately the total amount of money expended by the Republican and Democratic State central committees in your State and National campaigns for the last three national campaigns, to wit, 1904, 1908, 1912, and by the Progressives in 1912. If you are unable to give me a statement or an estimate of these figures from the books or from memory, will you please refer me to someone who can.

Assuring you that I will fully appreciate any information you can furnish on this subject, and that I will gladly reciprocate the favor at my first opportunity, I remain,

Very respectfully, ——— ———.

I received a reply to nearly every letter; but to show the absolute necessity of a law of this character, I desire to state that there were very few States in the entire Union, either through their State officials or through political organizations, that were able to furnish the information which I sought.

In 1904 only 9 States were able to give me the amount received and expended by the Democratic Party, and only 7 States were able to give me the amount received and expended by the Republican Party. In 1912 only 14 States were able to give me the information as to the amount received and expended by the Progressive Party. For the benefit of the Senate and the country, I desire to give the result of my research in this respect and to insert in the RECORD, without reading, the amounts returned from the various States in response to my inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

Mr. THOMPSON. But with this limited information, which is all I was able to get, there is shown in these few States the use of money by the Republican Party largely in excess of any other party. It is shown that in these few States there was an expenditure of $4,664,214.01 for the years which I have mentioned, so far as there was any record to show, and it is safe to say no record was kept of many of the expenditures.

But from the information we have received as the result of the great investigation in the year 1912, carried on by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] as chairman, who, I am sure, we all regret will not remain in the Chamber after next March, there is such an enormous expenditure of money coming from suspicious sources as to constitute a scandal in the political life of the Nation. So, I say that now, before the election, before the horse is stolen, is the time that this bill should be passed; and, if the filibuster being conducted on the Republican side of the Chamber will cease, we can pass this legislation and receive the approbation of an anxious public who want an honest election this fall. If this bill fails to pass, it will be the fault of the Republicans, and the public will understand the motive. If it fails by reason of their filibuster permitted by the rule of unlimited debate, it will furnish another reason for cloture, which is the next reform to be established by the Democrats of the Senate.

While all political parties have used more money than they had any right to use under the law, or in good conscience, or according to the rules of good conduct, and what is best for the Nation, we should all join together now in aiding the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma in passing this bill, which is the most vital piece of legislation yet to be enacted by this Congress, in order that we may have an effective law that will do some good in the coming election.

Now, Mr. President, without reading, I desire to have printed as part of my remarks an editorial from the Wisconsin State Journal, a Republican paper, demanding that Congress pass the Owen bill, and pass it before adjournment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

The editorial referred to is as follows:

[From Wisconsin State Journal of Sept. 5, 1916.]

PASS THE OWEN BILL.

On the first day of the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress a bill was introduced, prepared by Senator OWEN of Oklahoma, known as the corrupt practices prevention act. This bill was later amended, reintroduced by Senator OWEN, and favorably reported on May 18, 1916. The avowed purpose of this act was to prevent the control of the election of the President, Vice President, Senators, and Members of the House by the corrupt use of money.

On July 15, 1916, the Senate Democratic conference made this measure a part of its legislative program. Under the rules of the Senate permitting unlimited debate and preventing the Senate from determining when it may dispose of a matter by a vote so much time has been consumed that the enemies of this corrupt practices act are now trying to prevent any action on it by taking advantage of the impatience of Senators who are up for election and who naturally desire to go home and take active part in their own campaigns.

The Senate ought not to adjourn until this bill has been acted upon.

The country remembers the scandal a few years ago in which evidence of a somewhat overwhelming character was introduced to show the purchase of a seat in the Senate, which was only vacated after two strenuous contests.

Under the present Federal law there is no adequate control of corrupt practices in relation to the election of the President or of Senators or of Members of the House. The acts of 1907 and 1910, the amendment of 1911, and the act of 1912 do not apply to acts within a single State; they leave loopholes through which elections may be corruptly influenced without publicity and without punishment.

The Owen bill now before the Senate forbids private persons from contributing more than $5,000 to influence Federal elections; forbids any person from spending more than $50 without giving it publicity; forbids money from being sent from one State to another; limits the amount which may be expended by the national committees and by the candidates themselves; gives an immunity bath to witnesses, and then compels them to give evidence, and thereby exposes violators of the law to the law to the danger of its penalties. It makes corrupt practices under the law punishable as a felony and forbids a candidate retaining office if he be found guilty of violating the statute.

The House of Representatives has passed a corrupt-practices act along similar lines, and the matter is now before the Senate. The bill ought to become a law.

Mr. THOMPSON. In this connection, Mr. President, I ask to have printed as part of my remarks the comment made generally by the press of my State upon the statement of my contributions and expenditures during the campaign of 1912.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, that course will be pursued.

The matter referred to is as follows:

COMMENTS APPEARING IN PAPERS OF KANSAS CONCERNING SENATOR THOMPSON'S CAMPAIGN STATEMENT.

Judge WILLIAM H. THOMPSON, of Garden City, Kans., the successful Democratic candidate for the United States Senate, has just completed and forwarded to Washington his statement of campaign contributions and expenditures, as required by the new publicity law passed by Congress. While this law provides for making public all contributions, it excludes a large number of expenditures which may be made by any candidate and not accounted for, the law providing that candidates need not account for—

"Money expended by any such candidate to meet and discharge any assessment, fee, or charge made or levied upon candidates, or for his necessary personal expenses, incurred for himself alone, for travel and subsistence, stationery and postage, writing or printing (other than in newspapers), and distributing letters, circulars, and posters, and for telegraph and telephone service, shall not be regarded as an expenditure within the meaning of this section, and shall not be considered any part of the sum fixed as the limit of expense and need not be shown in the statements required to be filed."

The law limits the expenditures of candidates for Representative in Congress to $5,000 and the expenditures of candidates for the United States Senate to $10,000, but it excludes all of the above items mentioned in the quotation. Judge THOMPSON, however, has kept a complete record of every item of expense, including his own personal expenditures for railroad fare, hotel bills, livery, hack and street car fare, clerical work, postage, advertising, telephone and telegraph, and printing. In fact, every item of his expense and accounting for all these items he has only spent a little over one-half of what the law allows. His total expenditures for all campaign expenses before the primary, $1,813.62, and for 30 days after the primary until the campaign for election commenced, $342.95, and all expenses before the election, $1,872.80, and for 30 days after the election and including all items not thereto accounted for, $1,924.75, making a total of $5,953.12. His total contributions from all sources, $2,500 of which was contributed by the State committee and $572 by the national committee and the balance by popular subscription of personal friends, amounted to $3,560.75. Judge THOMPSON in his statement has given the names and addresses of every contributor from $1 up, and has given a complete statement of all the expenses and for what purpose by both himself and the State committee. This is the most complete statement filed by any candidate for the Senate or House in the United States. The only item he would have had to account for under the strict letter of the law would have been $805.42, advertising in newspapers.

Knowing now that every item can be accounted for and that a successful State-wide campaign can be made for a reasonable expenditure, it is Judge THOMPSON'S intention to introduce into Congress a bill providing that all candidates for the House and Senate shall hereafter account for every cent received and every cent paid out, personally and otherwise, and making a false statement in this regard sufficient for a removal from office. In short, he will endeavor to have the old law amended by striking out the above exception.

The principal items of expense shown by the statement are as follows: Printing, $1,862.40; advertising in newspapers, $805.42; postage, $1,040.50; personal expenses, hotel bills, railroad fare, livery and hack, $1,085.25; clerical hire, $725.; telephone and telegraph, $95. It will be observed that his statement shows that he personally expended $2,392.37 above all contributions and help received from the State and national committees.

EIGHT-HOUR LABOR LAW.

Mr. THOMPSON. In conclusion, Mr. President, I desire to have printed in the RECORD an editorial, which I have had some little trouble in getting in, but I do not think now that the Senator from Utah will deny me the privilege that he has extended to every other Senator upon the floor to have printed as part of my remarks, from the Washington Post of September 1 entitled "Stopping the Strike." While it is a little late, yet it answers the argument of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] made this afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the editorial will be published in the RECORD.

The editorial referred to is as follows:

[From Washington Post of Sept. 1.]

STOPPING THE STRIKE.

The progress made yesterday with emergency legislation in Congress makes it almost a certainty that the strike scheduled for Monday morning will be called off. There is little fear that the strike will occur, at any rate, for even if the legislation be not perfected by Monday morning it has abundantly shown the good faith of the administration and Congress in trying to remedy the situation. To permit the strike to occur in these circumstances would be a colossal blunder which the shrewd leaders in charge of the brotherhoods would hardly be capable of committing. They have not pursued a course which gives rise to any such apprehension.

There is nothing in the Senate and House bills which need delay a prompt agreement between the two Houses. The public cares nothing for the details of the bills. All it wants at this time is a law that will prevent the strike. The simpler the law the better, since it is acknowledged to be merely emergency legislation, to be followed at leisure by a thorough consideration of the labor situation in interstate commerce.

There is widespread expression of a feeling that the Government has been coerced into enacting the eight-hour law, and many persons and newspapers condemn the President and Congress for "surrendering" under duress. Mr. Wilson, however, has kept steadily in mind one great purpose, and that is to prevent the threatened strike. He is about to succeed, with the help of Congress. This fact counts for more than all the criticism that can be brought against it. Laws can be amended or repealed, but a nation-wide strike, once in effect, could not be called off before it had worked immense loss and hardship. It is the old alternative of clinging to a theory or facing and mastering a condition. The stopping of the strike will be counted to the President's credit. There need be no fear that the integrity of the Republic is destroyed or that Americans have proved themselves to be no longer independent and self-governing. In the end justice will prevail, and neither the brotherhoods nor the managers will get anything that they are not entitled to.

It should not be forgotten by the pessimists who think the granting of an eight-hour day is a blow at the sovereignty of the United States that the Government itself established the eight-hour day without any compulsion or influence from organized labor. It may develop that the eight-hour day in railroad service is a just reform, in the interest of public safety as well as in recognition of the rights of labor. Certainly the new standard will tend to cut down overtime and thus reduce the danger of accidents through the overtaxing of trainmen. If this much is clearly established, it will be worth all its cost in the shape of increased freight rates. The increase of rates necessary to cover the cost of the new standard will be so small per capita that it can not even be honestly figured in the cost of commodities. Dishonest men will use it in an effort to boost prices, of course, just as they have used the excuse of the European war or a revision of tariff rates. But vigilance on the part of consumers will soon expose and frustrate such attempts.

In a nation that counts its producers by the millions and the value of its products by the billions a change of a few cents a day in the wages of trainmen is imperceptible. The stoppage of the Nation's activities for a single day would represent more money than the wages of the trainmen for a year.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to say——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not yield at this time, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas declines to yield.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask also to have printed as part of my remarks an article appearing in McClure's Magazine of November, 1911, by A. Z. Blair, entitled "Seventeen hundred rural vote sellers."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

SEVENTEEN HUNDRED RURAL VOTE SELLERS—HOW WE DISFRANCHISED A QUARTER OF THE VOTING POPULATION OF ADAMS COUNTY, OHIO.

[By A. Z. Blair, judge of the seventh district of the common pleas court of Ohio.]

[The corruption of the voting population of large American cities is a commonplace of current political history in the United States. A similar condition has from time to time been shown in some rural communities, but never thoroughly described. The following article is written by the judge who has just conducted a trial resulting in the most remarkable revelations of corruption in a rural electorate that were ever made in this country.—EDITOR.]

The writer has just completed in his court the conviction and disfranchisement of one-quarter of the electors of Adams County, Ohio, for selling their votes at the last election. This matter has excited much attention throughout the Nation. Now that the work is finished, the writer, as presiding judge, is for the first time at liberty to describe it. In justice to the county where he has spent most of his active life and to the Nation at large he should do so. If, as he has been credibly informed, conditions similar to those in Adams County exist in other sections of the country, his narrative may be of value.

Our county in southern Ohio is populated by as old and excellent American stock as any in the United States. Whatever the case may be concerning the venality of the foreign-born population in great cities, no such condition enters into the discussion of her case. In Adams County but 1 person out of 25 is of foreign parentage, against 1 out of 3 in the country at large; and but 1 man in 100 is a negro, against 1 in 8 in the United States as a whole.

Adams County was settled by Revolutionary soldiers from Virginia, and a great part of the present population is descended from them. As originally established, after the Revolutionary War, it included most of the Virginia military lands, which had been set aside by Congress for the State of Virginia to divide into farms for her soldiers. Out of this original territory have come some of the ablest men of the Nation. Gen. Grant was born here, and here was the home of Senator Allen G. Thurman. Eight governors and five United States Senators of Ohio have been chosen from this territory. To journalism it has contributed Whitelaw Reid, the present ambassador to England, and the late John A. Cockerill; among recent legislators, ex-Senators Joseph B. Foraker and Albert J. Beveridge.

A CENTURY OF BITTER POLITICS.

This original territory of Adams County has been embroiled in political strife ever since it was settled. The Virginia military lands formed a sort of quadrangle, bounded by the Ohio, Scioto, and Little Miami Rivers, and with its northern line a little north of Columbus. It was a part of the Northwest Territory. On either side of the Virginians were settlers from the North, largely from New England. The New Englanders were Federalists; the government of the Territory was Federalist. The Jeffersonians in the Virginia military lands very soon came into conflict with their neighbors in the bitter controversies over the theory of government which followed the Revolution.

Their theoretical differences brought more than theoretical results to the residents of Adams County. The two oldest settlements in Ohio, Cincinnati and Marietta—made by Federalists—were protected by forts against the Indians. Manchester, the county seat of Jeffersonian Adams County, which was the third settlement in the State, was given no fort, and the county was the scene of bloody Indian wars. The name of a Federalist President was forced upon it; and finally the Federalist governor of the Territory arbitrarily moved the county seat from Manchester and placed it in a hamlet which he named Adamsville, but which the Virginians of Adams County refused to call anything but "Scantville" during its existence.

The intense political feeling of the Virginia stock showed itself in the fights over the framing of the constitution of Ohio and in the control of the State on its admission to the Union. Their county lay along the Mason and Dixon line—a political hotbed—and the spirit of partisanship that developed after the Revolutionary War has never abated. Political loyality has amounted almost to a passion with the residents of the county. When the original county was cut down into the much smaller county of to-day no part of it retained this spirit more strongly than ours.

There was no purchasing of votes, however, previous to the Civil War; there was no need of it; the county itself was too strongly Democratic. But the Civil War made a great change. Although the population of Adams County was Democratic, it was intensely loyal to the Union. It has been said that it furnished more Volunteer soldiers in this war in proportion to its population than any other county in the North. Its largest town, Manchester, with at that time 841 people, by actual records, furnished 114 soldiers. These young men, after associating with the other soldiers of the Union Army, came back Republicans. The parties were now closely divided in Adams County, and the same old bitterness remained and was intensified. The buying and selling of votes began at that time. I have been familiar with this condition since I was a boy, and, as I shall speak of how other people were connected with the wholesale vote buying, it is but just that I should bare to public gaze the part I myself have taken in it. Whatever the humiliation may be in the eyes of my countrymen, it is only right that I should do this.

MY INITIATION BY MY SCHOOL-TEACHER.

I was born in 1861, in Hingland County, a part of the original Adams County, about a mile north of the present Adams County line. I was an active boy, and, like most active boys in our section, I very early got into politics. The first experience I had in buying votes was at the solicitation of my school-teacher. I had at that time left school, being about 21 years old; but as this man had been my teacher for most of my school days, I was glad to help him. He desired the election to the office of probate judge, on the Democratic ticket, of a candidate who would appoint his brother-in-law examiner of school-teachers for Highland County.

With my former teacher and his relative, who was a candidate for school examiner, I had charge of the Democratic campaign in Jackson Township. This was a "money fight," as we call those campaigns in which votes are freely bought. I myself took part in the buying of votes. In the evenings the hired man on my father's farm and I would go out quietly and arrange to secure votes. Our candidate was elected for probate judge, and my teacher's relative was appointed examiner. He was advanced in politics and now holds a high position in the Federal Civil Service Commission at Washington.

My initiation into this kind of politics may seem strange. On the contrary, it was typical. At that time the practice of wholesale vote buying had become a fixture in our politics, and the generation of voters to which I belonged had come to regard it as the natural and usual thing. They knew of no other kind of election. Men discussed openly before their boys the prices for which votes were sold; and the boys, hearing the older men in the families discussing the transactions in this way, were drawn into it as a matter of course.

It must be remembered, too, that during this period, when the buying and selling of the votes of the entire county became fixed upon us, the practice was not prohibited by any law. Under the present constitution of Ohio, adopted in 1851, common-law offenses are not recognized as crimes, but only such acts as are made criminal by statute. From 1851 to 1889, when the first statute on the subject was passed, it was no offense to pay electors for their votes; from 1851 to 1891 it was not an offense for an elector to take money for his vote. In the meanwhile the two parties had firmly established the custom of buying and selling votes.

Vote buying on a large scale in Adams County began in the election of 1867—the year when Rutherford B. Hayes and Allen G. Thurman ran for the governorship of Ohio. This was a time when feeling ran very high. On one side, the Democrats fought for their inherited political faith with an intensity heightened by the fear that they would lose control of the county. On the other hand, the Republicans, with a ticket of Union war veterans, fought with much of the feeling aroused by the recent war. Votes were bought on a considerable scale then. But it was done quietly. In 1871 there was a bitter local fight over the location of the county seat, between Manchester, the largest town, and West Union, which had been the county seat for 60 years before. The buying of votes in that year was an open and accepted fact. From that time on it became established as a commonplace practice.

THE TWO CLASSES—BUYERS AND SELLERS.

When I myself began my lifelong participation in the politics of the county the custom was thoroughly established. It is, rightly, considered evidence of an extraordinary and horrible condition that we should have convicted a quarter of the voters of our county of selling their votes. But this does not by any means represent the real state of affairs. It is much better shown by a careful examination of an average election precinct of the county, which was made during our recent investigation by some of the best-informed men of each party in the precinct. These men found that 85 per cent of all the electors who cast their votes at the election last fall had at some time in their life been engaged in either buying or selling votes. Of the remaining 15 per cent, 4 per cent were either first voters or men who had lately moved into the precinct, leaving but 11 per cent who were guiltless of this practice.

From the time when I entered politics, in my boyhood, the voting inhabitants of Adams County were divided into two classes—buyers and sellers of votes. The guilt of these classes is the same, both morally and before the law; but it is a fact, well established by the court proceedings we have just gone through, that the buyers and sellers of votes have come from very different classes of the population.

The vote-buying class included, from the time of my first knowledge, many of the otherwise most reputable and trustworthy members of the population. They were men of sound metal—men who would stick by you and whom you could rely on. Church members, merchants, county and school officials were in this class. The intense feeling which started with the foundation of the Republic, and which was intensified by the Civil War, drove the men who had genuine interest in government to make party politics a continual bitter warfare. So bitter was the partisanship in this class that it was not an uncommon thing to see a young man with a family, and with no property or means of his own on earth, take the last cent out of his pocket, when the funds in his election precinct were low, or even go to the bank and borrow money, and give it to his party to buy the vote of some vote seller which was still for sale.

The other class in the electorate, the sellers, were largely of the poorer people in the community. A few of them—like old Billy Grooms, of West Union—were men with some property, generally land; but the majority of them were younger men, either unmarried, or, if married, men who owned no property. Many of them were farm laborers. They were not foreigners, however, as has been wrongly stated; most of them were of the same native stock as their neighbors. They were the more careless members of the community—the men who had not much interest in government.

Between the buyers and sellers of votes, a very large percentage of the voters turned out at election time. At least a quarter of the whole population in Adams County votes, a very much larger proportion than in most places. In New York City, for example, less than a seventh of the population votes. But everybody has voted in Adams County who could. The buyers turned out to carry on their old political fight; the sellers came out to get their money. Men who had moved into other parts of the State kept their residence in Adams County for years so as to come back at election time, either to help their party or to sell their vote. Politics was a chief source of conversation, and the excitement at election time not infrequently culminated in murder.

A RACE OF SCHOOL-TEACHERS IN POLITICS.

There was another reason why the people of Adams County were so concerned with politics. It had an influence on their lives in a peculiar way. The county lies on the north bank of the Ohio River; the little streams emptying into the river cut it with ridges north and south. And when the railroads were built east and west they went to the north of us to avoid our hills and valleys. Adams County, therefore, has to-day the only county seat in Ohio without a railroad; and it was not until the eighties that its one railroad—the present Norfolk & Western—cut across its extreme northern border.

For this reason there was no manufacturing development in the county. Its largest town to-day has only 2,000 inhabitants. The young people were compelled either to work on the farms or to get into some profession. The ambitions and traditions of their stock drove them very largely to take up the latter. I have traveled considerably through this country, and everywhere I have found in the professions men who were natives of Adams County. I doubt if any county of its size has ever produced a larger number of professional men.

The usual first step into professional life in Adams County is to become a school-teacher. There are many poor families living in log huts in the county in which you can find one or more young people with the certificate of school-teacher. The county itself employs only about 125 teachers; yet I have known times, during summer vacations, when nearly 600 teachers from homes in the county were attending the county institute. The young men among these were fitting themselves, while teaching, for careers in other professions.

Many of these teachers naturally started as teachers in the local schools; they were examined by the local officers for the certificate which every teacher in Ohio must have. The giving of employment or a teacher's certificate was largely a matter of party politics, and from the first the young people were deeply interested in one side or the other of the general fight that split the county. At times positions were put up to the highest bidder; in other cases the aspirants were compelled to do political service.

I myself came into politics in this way. For a dozen years I was a school-teacher, first in my home township of Jackson, and later for a short time in the southern part of Adams County. After that I was for a few years appointed county engineer, and during that time I prepared myself for my present profession of the law. My interest in politics continued, and I served first as a member and afterwards as head of the county committee of the Democratic Party, and later—on leaving that party on account of disagreement with its attitude during the Spanish War—in the same capacity for the Republicans.

SELLING A VOTER AT AUCTION.

In the late eighties when I began to take a more influential part in county politics, "money fights" were at their height. The "bloody-shirt" issue of the Civil War still added especial bitterness to the local feeling and the lack of an Australian ballot made the practice of vote buying as much a matter-of-fact transaction as the trade in any merchandise. I remember about 1889 standing before the courthouse in West Union, the county seat, and seeing a voter auctioned off to the highest bidder of the two precinct leaders, like a horse or a hog. The price finally bid was thirty-odd dollars. The successful bidder took his man to the polls, cast his vote, brought him back, and stood him up again on the auction block. Then he peeled the money from his bank roll and paid him.

"I want you all to see," he said to the crowd, "that when I promise to do a thing I do just what I promise."

There were about a hundred men around the auction block, including the prosecuting attorney, the sheriff of the county, and the mayor and marshal of West Union. The practice was set so hard and fast in custom that men paid no attention to it. At every election it was the commonest of sights to see men paid off after they voted. Some of them would take money only from their own party; some would linger about the polls all day and get the party leaders to bid for their vote. And the introduction of the Australian ballot in 1890 virtually made no change. Election officials about the ballot box watched the vote sellers to see that they delivered the votes they were paid for.

THE REVOLT OF THE WOMEN.

There was, though, one class of the population which rebelled against the practice. It was the womanhood of Adams County, which had never become reconciled to the custom, and whose continual hostility has resulted finally, I hope, in its abolishment. The women could see very clearly that the buying of votes was degrading their husbands and sons. The practice was so common that everybody knew of it; and it was not at all unusual to hear boys on their way to school say, as they passed by the polls on election day, "I wish I was 21, so I could get $5 for my vote." The partisanship in choosing school-teachers also affected the women very directly—not only when a member of the family was an applicant for a position as teacher, but as it resulted in a lower quality of teaching. The standards of the county generally were lower than they had been, and the women recognized it.

My own mother, from the time when I went out in the evenings to work in one of the "money fights," never ceased to protest against the idea. After I married my wife took the same view. By the early nineties many men, under promise to their women folks, refused to engage longer in the practice or to continue its support. I, with others, was convinced that some change must be made. At that time the candidates and committees of the two chief parties were induced to sign an agreement, which I prepared, to stop buying votes and to put up several thousand dollars to be used for the prosecution, under the newly enacted laws of the State, of anyone who did so.

THE VOTE SELLERS OUTWIT THE REFORMERS.

This agreement was well kept through the first election. It was to the advantage of both parties to keep it; for with both parties refusing to buy votes, they remained in the same relative position as before. But the agreement lasted only for two elections. This was due to the bitter fight made by the sellers of votes. Many of these men, it is true, made no protest, but a large number of them did. The politicians were very distrustful of their opponents—with good reason. For men whose word was as good as gold in business life did not hesitate to make any statement, no matter how untrue, in political contests.

In the first election the political managers on both sides merely went around explaining to the vote sellers that their opponents were entirely responsible for the agreement not to buy votes; that they themselves had been tricked into signing it. They had the money, they said, and believed that the poor voter should get it. They would never, they said, be caught in the same trap again. In this election the vote sellers were puzzled as to who was responsible and didn't know what to do. But in the second one they outwitted the political leaders. The latter signed a similar agreement again and began to make the same excuses once more. But this time the vote sellers had got together and figured it out. They sent representatives to the political leaders to say that they didn't know who was responsible for the agreement, and they didn't care; if somebody didn't buy their votes, they would merely vote against the first man whose name appeared on the agreement. Then the politicians immediately began to buy votes again. For the next few years the practice went on just as much as ever, because there was no candidate who dared to sign his name first on a petition against it.

NATIONAL FIGURES CONCERNED.

In all this time the vote buying in Adams County had been going on with the full knowledge of the party managers of the State. The names of men very high in the Nation were connected with it. Through my position as chairman of the county executive committee for first one party and then the other, I knew of my own cognizance or from credible information of many concrete instances.

Marcus A. Hanna, the late Senator from Ohio, and John M. Pattison, who was first a Congressman and afterwards governor of Ohio, both, to my own personal knowledge, contributed largely to the funds used for buying votes in Adams County, with full understanding of how money was used in the county.

In Calvin Brice's second campaign for the senatorship an interesting example of political methods in Adams County took place. The campaign manager of the Republicans was a popular little merchant who kept a harness shop and drug store in West Union. At one time he had been county treasurer, and his handwriting was familiar to all the taxpayers of the county. The Democrats got some one to practice his writing till he got it perfectly; then a day or two before election some one went into his store and bought some of his stationery.

On the morning of the election, at every one of the twenty-odd voting precincts in the county, a man drove up, handed a letter to the head Republican worker, and, making some excuse, whipped up his horse and drove away before the worker could read the letter.

The letter read something like this:

"Brice has put $5,000 more into county; we can not meet it. Don't pay out any money for votes."

It was signed with the name of the Republican county manager, and apparently was in his handwriting. When the Republican workers got this message they stopped buying votes. The vote sellers were on hand as usual for offers. The Democrats were well supplied with money, and in a few hours they had bought a great share of the votes that were offered for sale. Later in the morning word of this letter reached the county headquarters, and the county managers started to notify their workers that it was a lie. Every telephone wire leading out into the county had been cut and every livery team hired by the Democrats. The county was swept by the Democrats for the Brice ticket. In the evening the Republican managers got together and threatened to arrest the Democrats under the law for forgery. They found, however, that such a charge would be of no avail in connection with vote buying and abandoned it.

GRADUATES OF THE LOCAL SYSTEM.

The local politicians who worked out from Adams County into larger affairs all graduated from this system. John P. Leedom, an early leader of the Democrats in their "money fights," was afterwards Congressman, and was Sergeant at Arms in the Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, and Fiftieth Congresses; Joseph P. Smith, later President McKinley's confidential adviser and director of the Bureau of American Republics, led the Republicans against Leedom. Edward A. Crawford, now State printer of Ohio, is another man who has handled campaign funds used for buying votes, and who has been rewarded by promotion. In fact, any young man with ambition for political success in Adams County was encouraged in every way to consider the buying and selling of votes as a natural political duty—not only by the customs of the county itself, but by the men selected from the county for advancement.

But, after all, there were not many or great political prizes to be had in Adams County. There are only about 26,000 inhabitants; the largest town has about 2,000 people. The largest salaried office in the county does not now pay more than $2,500 a year, and there is no "graft" in public office: there are no contracts of sufficient size to give any. The main incentive which has led to the "money fights" at election time has been the inherited taste for partisan warfare. The contributions of money which are used in this are not recouped from the taxpayers by dishonest officeholders. They come out of the pockets of individuals in a county where individual fortunes are, to say the most, very moderate; yet in the campaign last fall $20,000 was spent in vote buying and 90 per cent of that was contributed by individuals in Adams County.

I AM CHOSEN TO THE BENCH.

In the spring of 1904 the Hon. Henry Collings, a resident of the county and one of the judges of the common pleas court of the district, died, and I was appointed by the governor of the State to fill the vacancy. In the fall of that year I was nominated for the position by the Republican Party. My opposition to vote buying being well known at the time, the Democratic politicians sought to make capital of it by getting me to head an agreement against vote buying. In this way they hoped to direct the antagonism of the vote sellers against me. I headed the agreement, and at the same time I gave notice that if there was any vote buying at the election I, as judge of the district, would see that the offender was prosecuted. As I would have had, even if defeated, a month to start proceedings in, there was little vote buying that fall, and, in spite of the hostility of the vote sellers, I, favored by the Roosevelt tidal wave, was swept into office by a large majority.

It was in the next election, in 1906, that the vote sellers really got together against me. Having now served the unexpired term of Judge Collings, I was renominated for the full term of six years. During the campaign I spoke frequently against the practice of vote buying, and the lower class of vote sellers were thoroughly aroused against me. The leaders of the opposing party saw in this another chance to play sharp politics.

On my return, after holding court in another county, to my home in West Union a few days before the election I was encountered by representatives of the Democrats and asked to sign my name to another agreement against vote buying. Their own candidates had signed it, and I gladly put my name with theirs. I had scarcely done so when I was called to the Republican headquarters and told by candidates on my ticket and some of my party leaders that I had injured them greatly, and that my action would defeat the whole Republican ticket. The meeting, after an angry discussion, adjourned.

THE VOTE SELLERS' ULTIMATUM.

In a short time I myself heard from the vote sellers. The custom of selling votes had been so long established in our county that a very considerable class of voters considered any interference with it as taking away an income to which they were entitled. In one of the precincts at one time, when we were attacking the custom, a file of vote sellers marched up and down the public way near the polling place, swearing and threatening, as men sometimes do in a strike. The same spirit was shown in their dealings with me.

About a hundred of the vote sellers of one of the precincts held a caucus to consider my action, and sent a committee to my house to interview me. The leader of this—a big, blustering fellow—did most of the talking. They used the vote seller's argument, which has become familiar to us—the usual plea for the "poor fellow." It made no difference to him who was elected; he was no better off in any case, one way or the other; the only thing he got out of it was the little he was paid on the day of election; the men who went into office got large pay, and they should divide it. The vote sellers' committee ended by demanding that our candidate for Congress and the two candidate for judgeships should put $8,000 in the hands of the Republican county executive committee for use at the polls or be slaughtered. We refused.

The committee of vote buyers at once approached the other candidates on the Republican county ticket and induced them all to resign. The vote-selling interest then approached our Democratic county paper, which is called the People's Defender. This attacked me for attempting to dictate to the other candidates of my party; it also printed my name as the first one of the candidates signing the agreement to stop vote buying, although as a matter of fact, I had signed it after the others.

All this caused the "vote sellers" to line up squarely against our ticket. But, with the aid of an awakened public sentiment, we elected our Congressmen and two judges in spite of them, and just missed electing the other members of the county ticket, who had hastily been put up in place of the Republican candidates who resigned. At the close of that election I promised the people of Adams County that if the opportunity ever came all the powers of the law would be used in cleansing the county of vote buying.

The subdivision of the common pleas district to which I was elected contains four counties besides Adams, and through the division of the court's work I was taken out of Adams County. I did not return to it to hold court, except for one or two special cases, until the fall of 1910, shortly before election. The political situation was such, as it often is before election, that it was dangerous to attempt to try any case, as scheming politicians were likely to thwart the administration of justice in order to help their party candidates. Court was therefore adjourned until after election.

The election was close. At any time within a month a contest could be instituted. The investigation of the vote buying was put over until the election was settled so that it could not in any way be used to interfere with the results. On December 13 we empaneled the grand jury.

One very bad result of our political system in Adams County was its interference with justice. Our jurors and grand juries were continually divided on party lines. More than that, whenever a crime was committed the criminal and his friends would begin at once to secure party influence. They usually went not to the leaders of their own party, but to the leaders of the opposition. It was generally believed that the opposition would be willing to do more to secure their votes than their own party would do to keep them, especially if they were members of large families. In this way the families of criminals would not infrequently change their politics.

Under the circumstances the selection of a grand jury for our work was difficult. The one in existence was discharged, and, together with the sheriff of the county and the prosecuting attorney, the court selected 15 persons as grand jurymen. These men were chosen after a long canvassing of the voters of the district. They were men of the highest character, who could be counted on to do their duty.

It was a very delicate task to abolish by law a practice so common that some of the members of our grand jury and the court officials had, at some time in their lives, taken part in it. In the first place, in order that politics be entirely eliminated from the investigation, seven of these jurymen were chosen from the Republican Party and seven from the Democratic. The fifteenth man was a Prohibitionist. The foreman of the jury was a prominent Republican—ex-Congressman L. J. Fenton. The prosecuting attorney of the county had been overtaken at the time with an illness, of which he has since died. W. P. Stephenson, Esq., chairman of the Democratic executive committee of the county, a man who had refused to have anything to do with the bribery at the election, was chosen by the court to take his place. In this way the political parties were fairly balanced, and we were ready to proceed with our work

VOTE BUYERS OR VOTE SELLERS—WHICH?

The first practical question to be met was this: Which class should be prosecuted—the buyers or the sellers? The main purpose was, of course, to break up the custom of vote buying in Adams County. The court prosecutor and jury debated at length whether they should undertake to indict the buyers or the sellers, or should proceed with whatever information they could get against either side. They decided to indict the vote sellers and to compel the vote buyers to testify. This meant that the vote buyers would not be punished, as the law provides that whichever party to bribery transactions is compelled to testify shall be immune from punishment for the offense concerning which he gives his testimony.

This step was taken for a number of reasons. It appeared, first of all, the only way to secure results. Each buyer of votes, naturally, had more information in his possession than any individual seller. To get any full understanding of the practice as a whole it was absolutely essential to trace the funds with which the voters had been paid.

It was clear, too, that no jury, either in Adams or in any of the surrounding counties would, under existing circumstances and on the testimony of vote sellers, sentence vote buyers to prison, as the law demanded. An attempt to do this had already been made in the Federal court of the district, and a grand jury, although selected from other counties, had refused to return an indictment. It was further taken into consideration that the vote buyers had tried to break up the habit and had been defeated by the vote sellers; and that, if there were any wholesale imprisonment of vote buyers, which would be required by law if they were found guilty, the heads of most of the important industries of the county would be sent to prison, all the commercial activities of the county would be affected, and much labor would be thrown out of employment.

TRACING THE MONEY TO THE VOTER.

So the prosecutor and the grand jury proceeded at once to trace the funds with which the voters were bribed. This was not difficult. The cashiers of the banks, who were always told at election time to get together large sums in small bills, testified as to who received the moneys from them. The party leaders—some willingly, some under threats of punishment for contempt of court—testified just how and to whom the money was distributed in every one of the thirty-odd voting precincts in the county. The fact that both the court and the prosecuting attorney were perfectly familiar with the local political methods and with the people was of advantage in handling the situation.

The leaders of the voting precincts were then taken, at first from two specimen precincts—one a strongly Republican precinct and one a Democratic stronghold. When these leaders were brought before the grand jury the prosecuting attorney went at them at once with a question worded something like this:

"Now, Sam Smith, you had $415 to spend on the last election. What'd you do with it?"

As the man would not know how the prosecutor had got such exact information, he would naturally be astonished and scared. He would hesitate and balk; but, finally, under threats of commitment for contempt of court he would give half a dozen names—generally of men in the opposite party whom he didn't like very well. He would be dismissed for the time, and the same process would be repeated with the other leader in the precinct.

We started this on Friday, and by Friday night we had a dozen names of men who had been bribed. We knew that as soon as each leader got back home everybody in his own party would come to him and ask him if he had given them away. He would say that he had not, which would be true. So everybody would be reassured and happy. On Friday night we picked out half a dozen men we were sure of, in three different townships in the county, and at midnight sent the sheriffs to drag them out of bed and bring them to the lock-up.

The next morning, Saturday, I had the six men brought before me. They pleaded guilty and begged for mercy. I fined them $200 apiece and gave them eight months in jail, and then I adjourned court and left the town for my home at Portsmouth, in Scioto County.

On Saturday afternoon the country folks all over the county gather about in the stores. Every one of these stores has a telephone, and in less than 10 minutes after the sentence was imposed all these meeting places had news of it. The county had Saturday afternoon and Sunday in which to think.

AN AVALANCHE OF CONFESSIONS.

On Monday morning I left Portsmouth on the early morning train and got off at Peebles, a little station from which we drive to West Union, the county seat. It was about 5 o'clock in the morning when I arrived there. Everything was snapping and cracking with the cold. There were 31 men waiting for me in the dark.

"Hello, Judge," said somebody. "You ain't goin' to be too hard on us, are you?"

We walked up the long walk from the station to the hotel in a silent procession, and at almost every window somebody poked out his head to see what was going on. All 31 of them pleaded guilty at the hotel.

When I got down to West Union at about 8 o'clock the yard around the sheriff's office was full of teams and men. The courthouse had burned down a short time before, and I had to hear the pleas in a little room about 10 feet square in the sheriff's house. Two hundred and forty-one pleaded guilty that first day. While we were trying to keep the vote sellers from breaking down the doors to come in and confess the precinct workers whom we had had on the stand the week before telephoned in and begged for the chance to tell everything they knew. They didn't know what the sellers might be telling about them. In the next few days from a hundred to two hundred sellers pleaded guilty every day.

As soon as the sellers began to plead guilty the court announced that there would be leniency for those who confessed, but that the law would be fully enforced against those who put the State to the trouble of prosecuting them. Every man who pleaded guilty was fined $25 and costs and given six months in the workhouse. The prison sentence and $20 of the fine were both suspended, leaving the charge of $10.92, of which $5.92 was for costs. Each man was also disfranchised for five years.

THREATS AGAINST MY LIFE.

While these hundreds of vote sellers were coming into court to plead there was still resistance among the lower class of vote sellers. In the first place, several letters were received by me threatening my life. A Republican newspaper of Manchester, the Signal, criticized the action of the court in electing to prosecute the sellers of votes. Its editor was promptly punished for contempt. In various places individuals went around advising the sellers not to plead guilty. The court was kept informed of this, and whenever the stream of men from any particular district stopped the men who were doing this exhorting were indicted, arrested, and brought into court, for they were all vote sellers themselves.

In this way there were by February over 1,400 who had pleaded guilty of vote selling and were fined. At that time a group of vote sellers secured an attorney who desired to appeal and test the constitutionality of the law. By special arrangement, the case was heard directly by the supreme court, and the law was decided to be entirely valid. Since then something over 200 more men have pleaded guilty and received their sentence. At the time of this writing (in August) the work is practically done. We have convicted 1,679 to date—26 per cent of the 6,505 voting in the election. A few have left the county.

In addition to these, the proceedings showed that there were at least 500 men engaged in the work of vote buying. These men handled about $20,000, which would be about $12 a vote, if distributed among the men convicted of selling. As a matter of fact, we found the prices paid averaged from $5 to $25. Practically all of this money was spent for buying votes, and our investigations showed that it was handled with scrupulous honesty. It was believed by some of the party managers that a few of the workers might have retained money for their own use. We checked up the amount of money distributed by the party leaders with the amount received by the vote sellers, and in every instance they tallied. Before we were through we accounted for practically every dollar spent in the county.

A COUNTY ONE-QUARTER DISFRANCHISED.

As we now stand, a quarter of our voters in Adams County have been disfranchised. In some of the voting precincts as many as 50 per cent can not vote; in others only 10 or 12 per cent are ineligible. In a number of cases whole families, containing as many as 30 voters in the various branches, have been disfranchised. In one instance a lay preacher and practically all the members of his congregation lost their votes.

It was our main purpose to free the country of the vicious condition which has existed there virtually ever since the Civil War, and not to punish individuals for an offense which had become almost universal. Of all those found guilty only one young man, who refused to pay his fine—a man who was living off the means furnished his invalid father and mother by charity—was sent to the workhouse. Only six—the first arrested—were put in jail, and they for but a few days, after which their sentence was suspended, as in the case of the rest.

For the next five years the offenders in the last election will not vote. This will give time for the growth of a public sentiment concerning the value and sanctity of the franchise. At the end of the five-year period, if these men should engage in vote-selling again, they will immediately become liable to a sentence of six months' imprisonment in the workhouse, with $20 fine. I do not believe that many of these men will repeat their offense. In most instances, out of the nearly 1,700, the man pleading guilty of vote selling seemed to have been brought by his experience to some sense, at least, of the character of his act.

Just how far conditions like those in Adams County are prevalent throughout the country I do not know of my own knowledge. I do know that conditions very similar prevail in most of the counties in the southern part of Ohio and in the counties of Kentucky across the river from them. Since our investigation I have received scores of letters from other parts of the United States stating that votes are sold and bought at wholesale in the writers' own community. It was this information concerning conditions elsewhere that led me to put into writing the story of our experience in Adams County. It is my hope that in this way the people of our county, whose ancestors helped to give to the world the American democracy, may now serve as a helpful example to this country at large by their purification of themselves from the degradation into which they had fallen.

Mr. THOMPSON. Now I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. All I wanted to say, Mr. President, was that the Senator from Kansas has never been discriminated against by the Senator from Utah. As a part of his remarks I have no objection whatever to the editorial to which he has referred being printed in the RECORD.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not care to discuss that question further.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought it was very uncalled for for the Senator to refer to the matter in the way he did.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not care to enter into an argument relative to that matter now. I have been trying since the 1st of September to have printed in the RECORD this little editorial article relative to the stopping of the strike, which seems to be a subject in regard to which some Republican Senators are extremely sensitive, and they have continuously objected to that article being printed. I meant no reflection upon the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator must know that he only made the request once, and that was in the morning hour. I told the Senator at that time that, if he desired to read the article, he had a perfect right to do so.

Mr. THOMPSON. The incident is closed, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. SMOOT. Nobody objected to the article going into the RECORD, if it went in in a proper way.

Mr. THOMPSON. The RECORD will show who is right about that. I made the request once on the 1st of September, twice on the 4th of September, when the Senator from Utah objected; and once before to-day, when the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] objected.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing to rely upon the RECORD.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am, too. I should also like, as part of my remarks, to have printed an article by Albert Shaw, entitled "A national lesson from Adams County," appearing in the Review of Reviews, for February, 1911.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the article referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The article referred to is as follows:

A NATIONAL LESSON FROM ADAMS COUNTY.

[By Albert Shaw.]

A country lawyer of courage and sagacity, serving as a local judge in southern Ohio, is now setting this country an example in methods of political reform that will give his name an enduring place in the annals of our great American experiment of self-government. By many different means—some of them bold and flagrant, others stealthy and indirect—the use of money has tainted the purity and honor of our politics. But of all these forms of corruption, the one most to be deplored is the poisoning of the spring of popular government at its very source.

The habitual and wholesale bribery of voters not only makes the rule of the majority a laughing stock and a farce but it destroys the dignity and self-respect of communities, and so impairs manhood as to unfit it for the best things in every sphere of social or business life. We have had in our great cities fearful examples of ballot-box stuffing, fraudulent registration, dishonesty in the counting of votes and returning of results, colonization of repeaters, false naturalization of foreigners, and other offenses against fair and honest elections. But these things, which may, indeed, defeat the will of a majority of the rightful voters, are too trivial to be mentioned in comparison with the offense of corrupting the rightful voters themselves. The bribed voter has lost his natural zest for the great American game of politics. He has forsworn that tradition of party narrowness and prejudice that has its shining virtues, because the followers of Jackson or Clay were at least honest in partisanship. The voter who has reconciled himself to the practice of selling his vote to the party or the candidate that can offer the best cash price has lost the hope and faith that make us a real "people of destiny" and that must be our reliance in any national crisis.

Sweeping reforms have at times been accomplished through the power of a concrete example, when the evil seemed most prevalent and most difficult to combat. Judge A. Z. Blair, holding court in Adams County, Ohio, has furnished such an example, and there is reason to believe that the result of his work will be felt in hundreds of counties and in many different States. Our comment, therefore, is not for the purpose of holding up that county to an unpleasant notoriety. On the contrary, Adams County is to be praised and congratulated.

With no threat or help or suggestion from the outside world, Adams County—lying somewhat off the main lines of travel and left a good deal to its own leadership and its own conclusions—has shown moral and social power to regenerate itself. When election day comes round again—as, for example, next year, when a President of the United States is to be chosen as well as many other officials of narrower jurisdiction—Adams County will have a restricted electorate of perhaps 4,000 votes, as compared with the 6,000 votes available for recent elections. But the 4,000 next year will go to the polls with a finer pride in the honor of being sovereign American citizens than has ever been felt heretofore in any county of the United States. They will have had the thing brought home to them—some 2,000 citizens of Adams County who have heretofore indulged in the practice of selling their votes will have been kept away from the polls by sentence of disfranchisement for a term of five years.

Judge Blair is himself a product of Adams County, although his home is at Portsmouth, the chief town of the adjoining county of Scioto. His judicial circuit lies in the great bend of the Ohio River at the extreme southern point of the State, and includes Adams, Pike, Scioto, and Lawrence Counties. This part of Ohio was settled in early pioneering days, when the Ohio River was the chief thoroughfare to the West. Many Revolutionary soldiers from Virginia and Pennsylvania went into those counties, together with pioneers from the Carolinas, by way of Kentucky, and some families from New York and the Eastern States. In the Civil War these counties were represented more largely than almost any other part of the country.

Since the war, however, this southern strip of Ohio, like many other rural localities east of the Mississippi River, has been at a standstill. And where country neighborhoods are not making marked progress, they are likely to give evidence of some moral and social decadence. Just a hundred years ago there was great vitality in the pioneering communities of southern Ohio along the river. The majestic forests were rapidly broken by clearings, and the virgin soils were highly productive. There was zeal for education; and strong men and women were in the lead. But after the Civil War, many of the most vigorous and progressive of these people from the river counties went to Illinois, Missouri, and the farther west. Those who remained at home had to compete with the still richer farm lands of the prairie States.

The farm country tributary to Cincinnati before the Civil War had been the most prosperous in America. But Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, and other western centers arose to destroy—for a time—the importance of the river valleys tributary to Cincinnati as producers of grain and meat. The log-cabin stage of civilization in the first generation is not harmful. But where a checking of agricultural development holds the people of the "back townships" practically in the log-cabin stage for a hundred years, there comes a marked falling off in the average of character and efficiency. Undoubtedly some of the poorer townships of these Ohio River counties have shown this kind of tendency to social decline.

This would explain the fact that it has been found, within the past month, that in certain neighborhoods having, let us say, a hundred votes, every voter without exception was actually guilty of having sold his vote in the last election and was accordingly indicted and disfranchised for a period of five years. Such a condition would have been not only impossible, but almost unthinkable, at any time before the Civil War.

What these communities need is a fresh start. They need a civic and industrial revival much more than they need the old-fashioned kind of religious revival. They have not been lacking in a certain sort of religious life—at least they have had a continuity of the church organizations of the earlier days. Yet, in the dragnet of last month, not only were hundreds of church members disfranchised for the crime of making merchandise of their votes but the list also included church officers, Sunday-school superintendents, and two or three ministers of the gospel. Yet the churches must not be disparaged; for, in the main, they have helped to keep alive in Adams County that spirit of decency which has at last so strongly asserted itself. In these rural counties drinking and gambling and other forms of social disorder have a tendency to destroy the vitality of the people; and the churches have for some years been fighting these bad tendencies. Judge Blair himself had been strongly identified with the movement against the drink evil. It seems to be within bounds to say that the moral force requisite to begin the successful assault upon the trafficking in votes had been accumulated in the effort to fight down the worst evils of the drink traffic in Adams County, and to eliminate other forms of social corruption—movements in which the women have shown greater numerical strength and deeper power of conviction and continuous effort than the men.

Judge Blair's great title to fame will lie in the fact that he has invented and applied a really effective method of reform. It is not that the laws of Ohio against bribery and corruption in elections are either good, bad, or indifferent. In fact, they are not what they should be, as Gov. Harmon now reminds the legislature. But such practices have always, everywhere, under popular governments, been manifestly unlawful. The trouble has always been, in a corrupted community, to find the leverage whereby to obtain the evidence, secure indictments, and make certain of convictions. Judge Blair himself for several years has been trying to find a way to purify the politics of Adams County, and it is only now that he has succeeded. Like almost every great thing, it all seems easy and simple when once stated. Let the outline of the method be presented in a few sentences.

To begin with, the buying and selling of votes, which had been going on in Adams County for more than 30 years, had become so open and shameless as to be a matter of common knowledge. Nobody in private conversation denied the facts. Many of those who had sold their votes seemed rather proud than ashamed of the transaction. Judge Blair had been so intimately acquainted with the political life of the county that he knew, as did many others, the condition prevailing. He knew that both parties had been guilty, and that the local politicians and "party workers" had been very generally engaged in making the bargains and distributing the money, using their respective quotas of funds contributed in greater part by candidates for office.

The law of Ohio permits the judge, in a bribery case, to grant immunity to those who turn informer and become State's evidence. Judge Blair's great thought was to take all the politicians and vote buyers in the county to the number perhaps of two or three hundred, summon them as witnesses before a special grand jury, and promise them all immunity from present or future prosecution if they would turn over to the court and grand jury their lists of purchased voters, with the amounts paid, and all the necessary facts. It was not Judge Blair's motive to subject any individuals whatsoever to drastic punishment, nor did he intend to humiliate anyone, beyond the point of incidental necessity. His one object was to break up the practice of bribe giving and taking. It was plain enough that if all the vote buyers should put the grand jury in possession, frankly, of the entire truth, they would bring no harm upon themselves and a minimum of harm upon the men whose votes had been sold.

The essence of Judge Blair's scheme was leniency toward all who confessed fully and freely, and stern threats of condign punishment against those who refused to confess. Under these circumstances it was clearly best for the politicians to put all the facts in the hands of the judge and the jury.

The next part of the scheme was to be the announcement, through all the newspapers of the county, and through all other sources of publicity, that the names of those who had sold their votes were known to Judge Blair and to the grand jury, and that indictments had been found against them. If, however, they were wise enough to come to West Union, the county seat, of their own free will and make confession to the judge—thus saving the expense and trouble of serving papers and making arrests—they would be treated with great leniency. It was a part of the scheme not to make known the information disclosed to the grand jury by the politicians, and not to make public the names of those against whom indictments had been found. It was desired that as many as possible might facilitate the movement of justice by making confession, and allowing themselves to be sentenced.

Such was the bold, simple project. Suffice it to say that it was as effective in practice as it was comprehensive in conception.

Judge Blair formed his special grand jury of 15 citizens of Adams County, and operations began on the 13th of December. To show that no party advantage was sought, the grand jury consisted of seven Republicans, seven Democrats, and one Prohibitionist. A former Congressman, the Hon. L. J. Fenton, a man of intelligence and probity, was made foreman. In his charge to the grand jury, Judge Blair made a frank statement of the situation, the following paragraph being an example of his forcible, direct style:

"Conservative leaders of both parties claim that the purchasable vote of Adams County is at least 2,000, or more than one-third of the total vote. The young people of the county are growing up with full knowledge of this open traffic in votes and conditions are becoming intolerable. The purchase of votes with which this county has been cursed for years is so common that only a few men, comparatively speaking, are not identified with this merchandise of the ballot. I have been told that the grand jury would not dare indict anyone for the purchase or sale of votes, but I believe you will do your duty. If it should develop that you do not bring indictments, then a condition of anarchy prevails in Adams County."

The grand jury took the judge at his word; all the politicians and precinct workers were gathered in; a local editor who wrote an article denouncing the investigation was sentenced to fine and imprisonment for contempt of court; and forthwith there was consternation throughout the 625 square miles of Adams County. Within a few days the indictment mill was grinding out true bills at the average rate of a hundred or more every day. The politicians gave the evidence, and the particular precinct or township under inquiry was duly warned. The judge was aided by a special prosecutor, Mr. W. P. Stephenson, whose efforts were assiduous, and by no means unnecessary. For, although a situation had been created which frightened the guilty, making them feel that if they did not confess they might be sent to prison, there still remained many points to be dealt with by a firm and resolute prosecutor who was in full sympathy with the judge. For it was not quite the uniform rule that the guilty confessed, and in a few instances there were jail sentences which were not remitted.

After the movement had fairly begun and some hundreds of indictments had been found, Judge Blair and Prosecutor Stephenson inserted the following notice in all the newspapers of Adams County:

"We ask all citizens who have knowledge of any persons who received money at the last election and who are not coming in, or who know of any person who bought votes and who has not been in court, or who has tried to shield any person who received money at the last election, to let the undersigned know at once. We will keep your name in strict confidence and you will greatly facilitate our work.

"ALBION C. BLAIR, Judge.
"WILL P. STEPHENSON, Prosecutor."

As a result of these notices, the grand jury was busy on the first two days of the new year, and by that time it had indicted exactly 1,500 voters. It then adjourned for a few days to enable Judge Blair to catch up with his work of sentencing the hundreds who were pleading guilty. The judge's method in dealing with these men was simple, colloquial, and informal. His manner and tone were kindly and often humorous. The culprit was generally asked to tell something of his family and his circumstances, as well as the facts about the vote-selling transaction; and the judge showed a rare talent for giving the needed word of good advice.

From the first, his practice was to impose a fine of $25 at once, remitting all but $5, then to pronounce a sentence of six months in the workhouse at Cincinnati—which was at once suspended in consideration of future good behavior—and finally to disfranchise the voter for five years, this part of the penalty being absolute.

The scenes and incidents of this notable movement have been both picturesque and pathetic in an unusual degree. The county town is many miles from a railroad station. Octogenarians walked for miles over rough, wintry roads to make their humiliating confessions. Women came from remote parts of the county to beg the court's leniency for bedridden husbands. The jail served for court purposes, the old courthouse having been destroyed by fire. A very few skin-flint farmers of large means were found misleading the court as to their possessions, and were fined several hundred dollars by way of example.

Such details, illustrating every phase of human frailty and rustic character, do not belong to any permanent record of the work of ballot reform in Adams County—although many of them will be cherished as illustrating the methods and the qualities of the remarkable personality who leads the movement. For there are traits of mind and character in Judge Blair that remind one of the patient and resolute country lawyer of Illinois who, 50 years ago, was President-elect and about to enter upon his great burden of national responsibility. Abraham Lincoln was much more interested in the work he had to do than in the attainment of high place. If he had been the victim of personal ambition, he could not have been the man of strength and wisdom for the country's need. Judge Blair stands well in the opinion of the people of his judicial circuit. He has a great work to accomplish, and it is of high importance that this work be done thoroughly and completely. It will have been enough for any man to do in our generation. It is of small consequence, therefore, comparatively speaking, whether Judge Blair in future time be promoted to higher offices or not. It is his great distinction that in his local office he has seen real work to do, and that—in doing it because it was plain duty—he has been rendering his State and this entire country an immeasurable service.

Our representative, who went to West Union to see Judge Blair and to take the photographs which accompany this article, came back with the impression that the judge intended to apply a similar method of voting reform in the other counties of his circuit. When questioned on this point Judge Blair was naturally reticent. There were obvious reasons why he could not speak. But on January 14 he answered the question in the most practical way. He opened court at Portsmouth, on the Ohio River, in the county of Scioto, lying just east of Adams County, and promptly announced that he would institute in Scioto the same kind of an investigation that was still going on in Adams.

And he allowed it to be quite generally believed that the same method would be applied in Pike and Lawrence Counties. Common rumor from those neighboring counties points to the serious prevalence of the practice of buying and selling votes, although we have no information that would permit even a guess as to the extent to which the practice has been carried on elsewhere than in Adams County. Assertions have been made that Judge Blair's method ought to be used by other common-pleas judges throughout the State of Ohio.

Heretofore the talk about the wholesale buying of votes has been largely conjectural. In a number of instances entire boroughs have been disfranchised in England because a high percentage of venality had been discovered among the voters. But Judge Blair's proof that 2,000 out of the 6,600 voters of Adams County are accustomed to sell their votes is the most definite piece of tangible information in that general field of discussion that we have ever obtained in the United States. To save the people of Ohio from the supposition that we are holding them up to the world's reproach or contempt, it is only fair to remind our readers that the rumors of wholesale vote selling in parts of the State of New York and of the New England States have been for years very persistent and seldom denied.

An analysis of the recent election in the State of New York shows that the Democratic victory was not due to any increase in the Democratic vote, which, indeed, was smaller than usual, but to an enormous falling off of the Republican vote in the rural counties. And the public ought to know that politicians, among themselves, agree in attributing a great part of this falling off to the fact that the Republicans were without any funds this year to be distributed liberally among local workers for use on election day in "getting out the vote." Generally the Republicans of the State of New York have had ample funds contributed to the "machine" by the great corporations and special interests. This year such money was withheld, and the Republican treasury was empty.

Undoubtedly there is a distinction between money used for getting out the vote and money used to pay the voter for voting one ticket rather than the other. But the distinction is one which has a tendency in contested campaigns to become blurred. The New York farmer who says he is a Republican and will never vote the Democratic ticket—but who also declares that he will not harness his horse and drive to town over bad roads to cast his vote on election day unless somebody gives him $5 or $10—may have learned to convince himself that he is not a bribe taker. Yet his refusal to vote unless paid is equivalent to giving a half vote to the other party.

The methods of using money wholesale on election day throughout the East, if not clearly criminal under the law, are dangerously close to it. They destroy the independence and self-respect of the voter; and they so weaken his sense of duty and privilege as a citizen that it would not be a long stride for him to change his vote and to take money from the other party, when he has once learned to abstain from voting unless bribed by his own party.

Abstention from voting, unless a fairly good reason can be given, should subject the voter to some kind of penalty—such, for example, as disability to vote at the next following election. And the acceptance of money in payment for the trouble of coming to the polls should be regarded as both morally disgraceful and legally culpable.

Adams County, therefore, no matter how low she may have fallen, has risen, unaided, in the strength of her own sense of rectitude, and now heads the list. In the presidential election next year the most decent lot of voters in the entire country will be those of Adams County, Ohio. For this rehabilitation Adams County should accord great honor to Judge Blair.

THE WAR AND COTTON.

Mr. BANKHEAD obtained the floor.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I inquire if the Senator from Kansas is through?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Kansas has concluded, and the Senator from Alabama has been recognized. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BANKHEAD. For what purpose?

Mr. STONE. I desire to move an executive session.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I will occupy not over 10 minutes.

Mr. STONE. Very well.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I think that I have been very good during the long drawn out debate of the Senate for the past 30 or 60 days. I now only intend to occupy about 10 minutes of the time of the Senate, and do not propose to discuss the corrupt-practices act, because we have in Alabama, I think, the very best law on that subject of any State in the Union, drawn by the best talent that this country can produce, and we have honest elections.

Mr. President, I did not participate in the debate when the income-tax provision of the pending bill was being considered. I did not entirely agree with the views of some of my colleagues upon section 2 of the bill. I protested against the provision reported to the Senate, which, in effect, imposed an additional burden and discriminated against the cotton producer of the Southern States by the imposition of a duty of 5 per cent on the net profits that accrue to the corporation which has supplied cotton to the munition manufacturer since the 1st day of January, 1916, entering into the manufacture of war munitions, and also sought to levy a like tribute on that portion of the crop in the future that may enter into the manufacture of munitions of war. It is well understood in business circles in the South that the average price of cotton for two years, and until within the recent past, has been slightly above the cost of production. But a more important and far greater reason for my protest was the fact that the cotton farmer during the existence of this tax in the future would be required to assume indirectly this additional burden upon the product of his labor, since, of course, the corporation which sells the cotton to the munition manufacturer would protect itself to the extent of this tax by deducting that amount from the price he would otherwise have paid the farmer.

I believe that the method provided would have resulted in the greatest possible confusion and the cost of collection would have amounted to more than the money derived, hence I contributed what I could to the elimination of the provision without taking part in the debate.

Almost every section of the Union has profited by the increased demand for the product of their respective communities and the consequent increase in market values due to conditions growing out of the war, yet the opposite has been true with respect to the farmer who grows cotton. His market, instead of being enlarged, has not only decreased, but for several months following the outbreak of war was absolutely destroyed. Cotton was made contraband of war by the English and allied Governments, who so effectively controlled the seas that they in effect denied to our people the opportunity to seek markets that could otherwise be found. When the war came on the early crop of cotton was about to go upon the market. It rapidly declined to ridiculously low prices, far below the cost of production, and so remained for several months. As a consequence business conditions throughout the cotton-growing States became demoralized, since cotton is our chief money crop, and business obligations are made with a view to liquidation at the time cotton is marketed, from early September to the middle of the following January. Immediately prior to the declaration of war cotton was selling at 13½ cents per pound. When war was declared the price at once fell to 6 cents per pound. The farmer was suddenly confronted with a serious situation. The local banks were not in position to and declined to advance him one penny on his crop as security.

My chief purpose now is to call the attention of the Senate to a situation that existed here on or about the 8th of October, 1914.

At that time so acute was the situation and so insistent was the demand for relief from whatever source it might be obtained that earnest appeals were made to Congress, then in session, and a number of measures were seriously submitted to our consideration by which it was sought to have the Federal Government come to the rescue.

Mr. President, I am one of those who did not believe that it was within the province of the Federal Government to contribute to the relief of the situation then existing. A nation-wide buy-a-bale movement, at 10 cents per pound, was inaugurated. It was suggested and urged that Congress should authorize the purchase by the Government of a portion of the crop at reasonable prices or lend money direct to the farmer, with his cotton as security, or that it issue its bonds with which to supply the funds for purposes of relief until normal conditions were restored. An attempt was made to organize a pool to supply $150,000,000 to lend to the farmer, which plan never materialized. It is generally known that during the harvesting and marketing season of the cotton crop a large percentage is forced on the market, known to the trade as distress cotton, because the producer has either pledged it as security for debts then due or has other pressing obligations that must be cared for, and is compelled to accept whatever the prevailing price may be at the time. In a speech on the floor of the Senate on the 8th day of October, 1914, during a discussion of the subject I made this statement:

> We are confronted with a situation fraught with disastrous consequences to the people of the South unless some heroic measure is resorted to. This is no time for quibbling or abstract discussion of paternalism and other such doctrines of government. While we are not actually at war, we have all the business consequences of war. The farmer can not handle the situation. It is the duty of the State government to step into the breach and work out a plan and lend its credit until this perilous time has passed. It can do so without impairing its credit and without the loss ultimately of a dollar.
> It is not money we need; it is a market. We have the cotton; nobody will buy it, and until a market is restored there can be no relief.

Mr. President, in that statement I did not exaggerate the conditions or overdraw the picture. Nothing, however, in a practical way was accomplished, so far as legislation was concerned, to relieve the farmer. I did not believe it was a subject with which the National Government could properly deal. However, by indulgence and forbearance born of an intimate knowledge of the situation through personal contact with conditions that foretold the impending disaster confronting the people of the South, the southern banker, the merchant, and other sympathetic interests extended all the assistance available to them, and in a manner bridged over the difficulties, though not without embarrassment, and in some instances assignments and bankruptcy were unavoidable; but let it be said to their credit they weathered the storm, without any permanent disturbance of economic conditions in that section. Many planters, however, were unable to carry their crop over for indefinite periods, and were forced to sacrifice it at a price far below the cost of production, and are now laboring under obligations which they could have avoided had there been extended to them some plan by which they could tide over their temporary embarrassments. They had the security.

There is none better than cotton, which the world must have and which occupies such a valuable position in the business life of this Republic. No one doubted that the price of cotton would not within a reasonable time advance to a price commensurate with the cost of production and that it could be marketed at a profit, which otherwise would have been the case during that season but for the war in Europe.

In the speech to which I refer I urged the adoption of a plan that had been carefully thought out and approved by some of the best financial experts of the country. Being convinced there was no opportunity whereby the National Government could extend adequate relief, I suggested that the States themselves had the authority, and could relieve the situation in a way that was prudent and practicable. I addressed an open letter to the people of Alabama suggesting a plan applicable alike to any cotton-growing State in the South, which time has demonstrated would have been successful. Briefly, it was suggested that the legislature, pursuant to a constitutional amendment, should authorize the issuance of sufficient short-time State bonds, bearing 4 per cent interest, with which to purchase approximately one-half the crop of each farmer, or such an amount as would relieve him and enable him to carry the remainder of his crop as long as was necessary or desirable, the price to be paid to be sufficient to protect him against loss. It was estimated that one-half of the crop in Alabama would approximate 800,000 bales, which, at 10 cents per pound, would have cost the State, if it became necessary to purchase one-half of the crop, $40,000,000, the maximum interest charge for which would have been $1,600,000 per annum. However, it would not have amounted to this sum, in view of the fact the legislature would have established a system of cotton warehouses, through which the State would have issued against the crop purchased from the farmer noninterest-bearing warrants in small denominations, to pass as currency in the payment of local debts and obligations.

These warrants would have been underwritten by the credit of the State and protected by the cotton purchased, thereby affording as ample security as can be found on the face of the earth. In event any banker, merchant, or other person should desire to convert these warrants into interest-bearing bonds, he could have surrendered them to the State and procured in exchange the cotton bonds in larger denominations bearing 4 per cent interest. Under the authority of the Federal reserve act, these bonds could have been pledged by the banks as security for which emergency currency could have been obtained that would have quickly found its way into the avenues of commerce in the South and relieved the stringency of the money market. It can be assumed therefore, that the State would never have been called upon to dispose of the entire authorized issue, and that the maximum interest charge would never have been incurred.

The plan proposed met with favor by many thoughtful and earnest citizens of the State, a large number of the newspapers advocated, and numerous mass meeting were held and petitions forwarded to the governor requesting that the legislature be called into special session to consider it. A large and respectable patriotic element of the people, including the governor, however, did not approve the plan, and no chance was given to the voters of the State to express an opinion on it. I recognize that those who opposed it did so from sincere motives. Many thought it an unsound and unsafe principle of government and a dangerous precedent to establish. However, the situation was unprecedented and called for heroic measures. I did what I could to have it adopted.

Assuming, however, that it had been adopted and the State had purchased 800,000 bales at 10 cents per pound, the interest would have been $1,600,000 per annum. It would have cost the State for principal and interest for one year $41,600,000, and if $400,000 should be added for incidental and administrative expenses, there would have been a total cost of $42,000,000. This cotton could have been sold within 12 months at 12 cents per pound, or at a profit of $6,000,000 to the State of Alabama, and the farmer relieved of the necessity of sacrificing the proceeds of a year's labor, which, at a conservative estimate must have amounted to an additional $6,000,000. If the cotton had been held until the present week, a little more than one and a half years, it could have been sold for 15 cents per pound, or at a profit to the State of nearly $18,000,000. This amount would have paid the State's bonded indebtedness and returned to the people in the way of internal improvements for roads and for the advancement of agriculture and education $10,000,000.

Mr. President, I make these statements and give these figures to justify the position then taken and to prove the correctness of my judgment at that time.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. SHERMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. OVERMAN. I simply want to make a motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield for a motion?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; if I will not be denied the floor hereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that House bill 17350, known as the Webb bill, be taken from the Interstate Commerce Committee and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, for the reason that the bill is now being considered by the Judiciary Committee, having been sent to that committee by the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I shall not make any objection to the matter interfering with the regular order unless it is going to lead to prolonged debate.

Mr. OVERMAN. It will lead to no debate. I simply ask that that action be taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the motion of the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. LANE. I do not understand the motion. To what does it refer?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is simply a motion to transfer House bill 17350, known as the Webb bill, from the Interstate Commerce Committee to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. OWEN. It is the Webb bill.

Mr. STONE and Mr. UNDERWOOD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But I desire to be heard for just a moment on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator object?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask the Senator from North Carolina to withhold the motion for the present. The chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee, of which committee I happen to be a member, is not in the Chamber at this moment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am simply making the motion because I am chairman of the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, which is considering that matter. I will not make it, however, if the Senator objects.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask the Senator to withhold the motion until the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee can be present.

Mr. OVERMAN. All right.

CORRUPT PRACTICES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15842) to revise, amend, and codify the laws relating to publicity of contributions and expenditures made for the purpose of influencing the nomination and election of candidates for the offices of Senator and Representative in the Congress of the United States, extending the same to candidates for nomination and election to the offices of President and Vice President of the United States, limiting the amount which may be expended, providing for the publicity of campaign expenses, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, a moment ago the Chair stated that he recognized the Senator from Missouri, and I yielded to the Senator from Alabama. Now, who is recognized?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the list which was made out before the present occupant of the chair took the chair, there appears the name of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. If the Senator desires to make a motion, no doubt the Senator from Illinois will yield for that purpose.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I will not interfere if the Senator wishes to go away. I will say to him, however, that I desire, at the earliest possible moment, to move an executive session to consider the treaty we had before us on yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri understands that the Chair is assured that the Senator from Illinois desires to go away on matters of business, and he has asked that he may occupy a few moments.

Mr. STONE. So I am advised.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection. I will promise to be expeditious in my remarks, so the executive session may be held. I will suggest to the Senator from Missouri that I am in favor of the matter that is pending in executive session.

This bill, Mr. President, is not one to which I am opposed in principle. The only opposition I offer is because of the time at which it is urged and the circumstances in which many find themselves who are engaged in political candidacies. The limitation of expenditure in the case of candidates for Senator—I shall refer first to those connected with the Senate—is $5,000 and in the case of candidates for the House of Representatives $2,500.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. As the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] remarked the other day, "Do not disturb them," it does not disturb me. If it is consonant with the rule of the Senate and the manner in which business ought to be conducted, I can get along very comfortably, and I will never make any point of order that there is disorder in the Chamber.

The Members who have been candidates in primaries have expended a considerable sum of money legitimately up to this time. I know that many candidates for the House of Representatives have now spent in a perfectly legitimate way in their several districts $2,500 in their primary contests, the maximum that is permitted by this bill to be expended both in primaries and in elections. In some of the States where the primaries have not yet been held—for instance, in my own State the primary will be held on the 13th day of September—they have expended $2,500 now in their campaigns, and it is not an unreasonable sum of money. Neither would it be inferred that there is any corruption or illegal use of money in those expenditures.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to the Senator that I shall be quite willing to have a provision go into this bill that it shall not be considered ex post facto in regard to any of these expenditures.

Mr. SHERMAN. That would remove a portion of the objection, but it would only leave $2,500 for the expenses from the primaries until the November election.

Another difficulty is that it provides an inflexible rule. It limits the expenses without regard to the size of the district or the difficulties that present themselves in a campaign. It takes no reckoning of the size of the State.

There is a great deal of difference in the States, not only territorially but in population. Some States are much more expensive than others in which to campaign. Some States have large territorial areas, the population not being centered in cities, and therefore not easily accessible. In other States there are cities of very large population, making it more expensive in a legitimate way to campaign in such centers than where the population of the State is more sparsely distributed.

For instance, Rhode Island has 1,067 square miles. The State of Texas has 265,000 square miles. One will require comparatively little travel; the other will require a great deal. The State of Texas, from east to west, requires a very large railway fare for a single trip; and in the large area that is sought to be traversed in a campaign, if a candidate presents himself to any considerable number of the voters it would become indispensable that he properly expend more money for travel in the State of Texas than would be necessary in the small territorial State of Rhode Island or the small territorial State of Delaware.

I do not think that a rigid rule of this kind, fixing a maximum expenditure of $2,500 in the congressional district in one case and $5,000 in the State in the other, is at all flexible enough to be fair or to give a candidate an opportunity to be heard and to meet the voters.

The candidates now—and the tendency is to increase it in States where it is not now the law—are all required to submit themselves to direct primaries. Wherever the direct primary is in force, in substance the candidate must undergo two elections, and it necessarily doubles the expense.

In my own State we have had a direct primary for some years. There are four States in the Union that have more than a million votes at the election. Those States are the State of Illinois, the State of Ohio, the State of Pennsylvania, and the State of New York. Those four States, with their voting population of more than 1,000,000 each, would necessarily require more legitimate expense than the State of Nevada, which has barely 20,000 voters, and more than the State of Arizona, where there are 23,722 voters; those are the votes cast in the election of 1912.

If that be compared with the four States in each of which more than 1,000,000 votes are cast, it can be seen that the legitimate expenses would not be fairly provided for in this fixed limitation. For instance, in my own State there are 600,000 Republicans in normal times, before the division of 1912, and for some years the percentage was kept up. A mailing list that is at all useful in that country must contain at least 150,000 party names. My own mailing list in that State contains about 215,000—those who are readily accessible, either by the city or by the rural free delivery. Those are the Republicans showing more than the ordinary activity in political affairs.

In the State of Arizona, for instance, the Senator could send out for a 2-cent postage stamp to every voter in the State for $474 a sealed letter. Outside of the clerical help and the printing bill required $474 will carry a 2-cent letter in that State to every voter of all parties—Democrats, Republicans, and others. In the State of Nevada a trifle over $400 will take a campaign letter to every voter in that State. In my own State to take a campaign letter in a primary contest to every Republican in the State of Illinois will require $12,000 in round numbers, a little more than that; if I send a single letter to every voter in my own State for the 13th day of September, 1916, it would require not $2,500 but $12,000 for a single mailing list. My own mailing list that I have used and kept for some years, containing the 215,000 names mentioned, requires $4,300 every time I send out a letter under seal taking a 2-cent stamp.

Now, in a direct primary I could reach a part of them only under such limitations as are provided in this bill; but I say such limitations are unfair when they are applied to the larger States under the conditions we campaign in there. It is an impossibility to reach my constituents under such restrictions as are placed in this bill. It is equally true of the Democratic candidates in that State, or in the State of Pennsylvania or New York. There are at least 500,000 straight Democratic votes in that State, and if a Democratic candidate sought to reach all the voters with a 2-cent postage, a sealed letter, it would require at least $10,000 alone to reach the voters from his mailing list. Outside of the mail there are the public press and such limited number as the candidate can appeal to by personal meeting or his voice on the platform. Those are the only three ways of reaching the public on either party matters or upon public matters to be used at the November election and in the preceding primary campaign. The newspapers, through political advertisements, can reach their readers, and they are powerful and proper agencies for those purposes.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to suggest to the Senator that by the publicity pamphlet amendment, which I offered in the Senate, that would put a Senator's case or a Member's case or a President's case, for that matter, in the hands of every single voter without expense, except to publish it.

Mr. SHERMAN. That will cover that part, the mail portion of it?

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. But there are the traveling expenses. My own State is nearly 400 miles from the Wisconsin line to the Kentucky border. Travel in that State is 2 cents a mile on local roads. My own traveling expense in a careful, economically conducted campaign, as I made in 1914, alone were very heavy. I began on the 3d day of July, 1914; I came home the morning of the election, and my own traveling expenses take up a material part of the expenditures. If I were a candidate covering only a district, it would be correspondingly less, but it takes up a large part of the $5,000, which is the maximum amount of expenditure limited in this bill for a senatorial candidate.

Another thing that I think is proper here to consider is the fact that 4 States as stated have over 1,000,000 votes, 4 other States have over 500,000 votes, 17 States in the Union have 200,000 votes and not over 500,000, 9 States have 100,000 votes and not over 200,000, and 14 States of the Union have less than 100,000 votes. In the smaller States I can see how the postage would be comparatively light. In the larger States it is indispensable that it be allowed, according to the relaxation suggested by the Senator from Oklahoma. But by this bill both the large and the small States are subjected to a fixed rule. A general rule presupposes similar conditions. That general rule applied to dissimilar conditions works injustice. Either, therefore, the limitations must be enlarged or the States classified and a different rule imposed on some.

Mr. OWEN. Another way would be to provide that the expenditure should not exceed a certain amount per capita or per voter. That would meet the point. But in this bill the postage and circulars were not to be limited by the $5,000. I think it is better to limit it to a certain amount to the voters.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is true; but I do not know what the rates are in Oklahoma for political advertisement. I know what they are in the city of Chicago. I very much doubt whether $2,500 would cover more than about 3 inches of nonpareil type in some insignificant corner. They are not publishing newspapers for their health in Chicago any more than they are in New York City. In Chicago and in the larger cities outside, the cities of Peoria, Quincy, Decatur, and Springfield, the political advertisements are quite expensive, where they are paid for just as commercial advertisements. The limitation probably would depend somewhat on the rate charged for space in newspapers. There is no fixed rate. It depends on the city, the circulation; it depends upon the size of the place and upon numerous things that fix a charge different in some localities from that in others.

Another thing that I think will be unfair in this kind of a limitation is the fact that the percentage of votes in some parts of the Union or some States of the Union is a comparatively small per cent of the total population. I do not allude to this and I shall not, for the purpose of making any political comments. I am only directing attention to the fact that there is a comparatively small per cent of the votes to be reached in some States and that the expense of reaching them will be correspondingly less.

In my own State in 1914 I think my expense account filed with the Secretary of the Senate aggregates about $8,700. I wish to say, Mr. President, that every cent of that was legitimate expenses. There were no unusual items in it. They are made up of the items that every person going through a primary campaign and in a direct primary and in the subsequent election would be called upon to meet. I conducted the campaign as economically as I could. I have no money to throw away any more than other Senators have.

The further provision in this bill that the political campaign committee or managing committee for the area in which the election is had concerning this particular candidate, whoever he may be, is limited to this amount. There is also a provision that the candidate himself may spend out of his own money without limitation for certain purposes; those purposes are all necessary expenses for his traveling, for stationery, circulars, advertising, postage, and for telegraph and telephone service without being subject in respect thereto to the provisions of this act.

This relaxes, as the Senator has suggested, the limitations of the bill. But what about the Senator who has no pocketbook to go through a fight of this kind? I have had the misfortune to practice law for some 30 years without ever being a very good business man. I have spent too much time, probably, in taking care of troubles that appealed to me in which there was no great compensation. I have fought some cases through without practically any pay for them.

I only refer to that to illustrate that if a candidate, by the means referred to in section 14, goes through a senatorial campaign with $5,000 as the extreme limit of his expenses, if contributed by others and managed by campaign committees, he has beyond that to take it out of his own pocket. Suppose he has not got it in his own pocket. Suppose he does not have the money. His friends can not contribute a dollar for him.

I say to you quite frankly if my friends had not paid a large part of my campaign expenses in years past in the hard fights I have been in, both State and otherwise, I could not have met the legitimate expenses of my campaign and must have risked defeat accordingly. I have been opposed to the element in my party that finally ended in scandals in the Senate. The Senator from Oklahoma voted as I would have voted if I had been a member of this body at that time, without any regard to party san affiliation. For more than 17 years I have been in a family contest, a factional contest, as it has been called, inside the ranks of my own party with that unhappy element. Those contests can not be fought with cologne water and silk gloves. They can not be overcome by reading essays on a Chautauqua platform.

A practical politician must be met by practical methods, and finally we met them by practical methods. We spent more than $5,000 in the campaign. That was all legitimate expenditure. I am glad my friends had enough money that I could contribute something myself to the defeat of that element with whom I was not in accord in my own party.

These are primary fights, and there were contests before the days of the direct primary. That was the era of delegate conventions. Those were the days when soap-box primaries ruled and when King Caucus was expected to be obeyed. So I do not think in a contest in the larger States of the kind I have named these expenditures are at all liberal enough.

When I speak of the comparison of the total population and the vote it is not for the purpose of drawing an invidious comparison. It is only the statement of the facts, tending to show that some States required greater expenditures than others to reach those voters.

For instance, in the State of Arizona its 23,722 votes are 9 per cent of the population. Georgia, with a total vote of 121,420, shows that 4.65 per cent of the total population vote. In the State of Mississippi 3.6 per cent of the population vote. In North Carolina it is nearly three times as much, because it is 10 per cent, which is something like a normal average in many States, even in latitudes farther north than that. In Oklahoma 12.23 per cent of the population vote. In the State of South Carolina 3.16 per cent of the population vote, which is the lowest per cent, compared with the total population, of any other State in the Union.

Now, compare some of the other States. In Illinois 20 per cent of our population vote; in Indiana 23 per cent of the population vote; in the State of Iowa 23 per cent of the population vote; in Kentucky nearly 15 per cent of the population vote; 18.75 per cent of the population vote in the State of Maryland; nearly 17 per cent vote in the State of Minnesota; 20 per cent vote in the State of New Hampshire. Wherever the per cent rises the number of voters necessarily increase. That number of voters require in some way to be approached by a candidate. He can be approached in only one of the three ways I have suggested—one by the mails, another by the public press, and the other by the candidate himself by word of mouth, by his personal presence, either on the platform or by personal solicitation.

These are the three methods, and in a large State like Texas or New York, compared with a small and densely populated State, the maximums that are fixed are unfair. I do not think in the larger States that a legitimate campaign can at all be waged unless a person takes the money out of his own pocket. This limitation enlarged by section 14 of the bill therefore puts a premium upon the person who has means and imposes a signal disability upon the man who is without means.

Another thing I do not particularly like. This proposed act is to be imposed upon the larger States by the votes of Senators of the smaller States of the Union where these limits are reasonable, where if these sums were expended it would probably mark the limits of legitimate expenditure.

But I am quite sure, Mr. President, that the condition in some of the States, under their local laws, is such as to make it unnecessary to spend the large sums of money that would be necessary in New York, Pennsylvania, or Illinois. One of the reasons I think so is because in the constitution of Oklahoma I find these provisions:

ARTICLE III—SUFFRAGE.

SECTION 1. The qualified electors of the State shall be male citizens of the United States, male citizens of the State, and male persons of Indian descent native of the United States, who are over the age of 21 years, who have resided in the State 1 year, in the county 6 months, and in the election precinct 30 days next preceding the election at which any such elector offers to vote.

Then there is a provision that no person who shall be guilty of a felony shall vote unless he shall have had restored to him his civil rights. Then I find further on an amendment, section 4a. A change is made in the qualification. The section which I have just read was adopted in 1907. It was that portion relating to the elective franchise in the constitution when Oklahoma was admitted into the Union, but in 1910, some three years afterwards, section 4a was added, which is as follows:

SEC. 4a. No person shall be registered as an elector of this State, or be allowed to vote in any election held herein, unless he is able to read and write any section of the constitution of the State of Oklahoma; but no person who was, on January 1, 1866, or at any time prior thereto, entitled to vote under any form of government, or who at that time resided in some foreign nation, and no lineal descendent of such person, shall be denied the right to register and vote because of his inability to so read and write sections of such constitution.

That is commonly known as the grandfather clause. That was in force until, within a few hundred feet of this Senate Chamber last winter, as I remember, the Supreme Court of the United States gave a decision. It was in a case pending, brought to that court by a proper process and reviewed. They held that this provision, 4a, of the amended section of the Oklahoma constitution was utterly void, the court saying in substance that it was in contravention of the fifteenth amendment. Possibly if this bill be now applied to that State, the election expenses will be higher than they were in former years. It might result in some enlargement of the elective franchise. The literacy test provided in section 4a, the amendment of 1910, is broken down, so that the same test applies to all or to none as the case may be.

Pursuant to this, a statute is in force in the State of Oklahoma governing elections. Now, I wish to call attention to the fact how simple a thing it is in Oklahoma to control the election machinery. It begins with the governor; it ends with the precinct election officials. If the governor is of a given political party, all the rest of the control necessarily follows. It is true there is a provision that only two of them shall be of the same political party; but I understand a decision of the supreme court of that State has nullified this provision, and now practically gives power to the election board to appoint anybody whom they please.

So we begin with the State election board, appointed by the governor, consisting of three members. They in turn appoint the county election board, and the county election board in turn appoints all of the precinct election officers for the holding of the election in the various localities. The elective county officers have no part in naming precinct election officers. The people have no home rule in the control of their own elections. They are controlled by officers named at the State capitol. So this is comparatively simple alongside the more complicated election laws of some of the other States.

I do not want to go more into detail in this matter. I am only suggesting that if this election act were postponed so that it would apply after this election it would then give time for candidates to adjust themselves to the conditions with which they are surrounded. There are 435 candidates for the House of Representatives who must be elected. They have engaged in primary contests; they have gauged their expenditures under existing law. The primary is over; they must now approach the November election. Consequently, I think it would be fair to let this campaign go to a finish, except upon the conditions which existed at the time it began.

I know that many of the States have provisions for the initiative, the referendum, the recall, and many other modern devices that are supposed to forward the purity of elections and to provide for popular government. Such schemes are beautiful on paper. Wherever tried sufficiently to test them, they destroy popular government in large populations and convert elections into a jest and idle clamor.

The tendency, Mr. President, all the time is to increase the legitimate expenses of elections, rather than to decrease them. Device after device has been heaped upon the candidates in almost every State in the Union. Busybodies who seldom run for office themselves spend their energies providing for more elections. If they had faith in their schemes they would become candidates in elections now held and improve existing conditions, instead of merely multiplying elections. There are no simple election laws any more.

In the city of Chicago a primary ballot contains over 3,000 names. In my own city, which is 180 miles out of Chicago, a city of 75,000 population, the last time I went into a primary election I took my ballot into the booth to vote. I looked at the ballot and I counted the names. There were 302 names on the ballot. I had more than the ordinary citizen's acquaintance, and, to save my life, out of the 302 names, by giving one the benefit of the doubt, I knew but 25 men. On the other 277 men I voted absolutely blindly in my own city. In the city of Chicago the evil becomes very manifest.

The only way you can conduct a campaign there is by organization. It begins with the precinct and the ward—with the 35 wards in Chicago and 6 election commissioners' districts outside. The same thing holds true in every large city. The expenses are legitimate. You can not reach the people in any other way. You must take the metropolitan press or you have got to take political organizations in such large centers of population.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. OWEN. There is a very easy remedy for that condition of that multiplied number of names on the ballot, and that is the short ballot by which the difficulty would be obviated.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not catch the last part of the Senator's observation.

Mr. OWEN. I say the short-ballot system effectually meets that difficulty; and it is perfectly obvious that the democracy can not operate through a ballot containing many hundreds of names. So a short ballot is essential.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; that is true. The short ballot would palliate the evil. I remember when we were framing the election laws in the fervor of "the uplift" several years ago I tried to except from its operations school directors and members of boards of education, and I came near being hanged, drawn, and quartered. I tried to except, and did except, presidential electors. I never thought that political parties, in which I believe, as I have already announced, ought to be subjected to the catch-as-catch-can plan of getting its electors. I was branded as an enemy of the people because I opposed the nomination of electors by a direct primary.

Sometimes anybody can be nominated in a direct primary. I say that with all due deference, and I have supported the direct primaries within reasonable limits. Men have carried populous counties in Illinois, with a fairly intelligent population compared with other parts of the Union, who, if themselves were subjected to a test by a competent alienist, would be found to be subnormal, to say the least of it. Still you have got to go out before the people in a direct primary, with over a million votes cast in the State—600,000 in my own party and 500,000 in the Democratic Party—you have got to go out with the $2,500 limit on you in the district and a $5,000 limit on you in the State. You must go before the people, who are just as intelligent as they have ever been, and explain to them in some way who it is that is running for office. In the city of Chicago there are 3,100 candidates on a single primary ballot. Every time a business man sees a candidate come around the block he flees from him as though he were a pestilence. The busier the man in a city, the more successful he is, the less use he has for any candidate.

Now, how are you going to get around it? You have either got to let the people vote blindly or you must get to the voters in some way. So it seems to me that these limitations are unreasonable.

I will vote for some fair publicity act or corrupt-practices act, but I will not vote for this proposed law as it now stands, because I think it is grossly unfair to the candidates.

I am aware that nearly all the members of organized labor from whom we hear are in favor of direct primaries, the referendum, the recall, the initiative, and other presumably popular devices for making it more expensive for a person to offer himself for public office or to stay in office after he is elected.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. OWEN. If the Senator would only mention the remaining part of the proposed program, namely, the publicity pamphlet, the short ballot, the preferential ballot, and the corrupt-practices act, it would not add to the expense nor difficulty, but would save expense and difficulty.

Mr. SHERMAN. It would be, Mr. President, some small mitigation of the evil; but when will the short ballot come? It has not been adopted in my State; it has not been adopted in the State of the Senator from Oklahoma; it has not been adopted over in Indiana nor in Ohio; and in the large States wherever the direct primary is in force at this time there is no short ballot. In 10 or 11 States farther south the process is a simpler one, because politics there does not involve a contest in the November election in the acute form it does in some of the other States. The primary fight there is the strong one; and generally it is the vital fight. When the primary is over, ordinarily the politics struggle in those States is at an end.

Now, when I think of simplifying the ballots I come to the conclusion that for this election there will be no simplification of the ballot in many of the States. There will not be in my State. The same laws will be in force in Illinois for the primary to be held on the 13th of September, 1916, that have been in force for several years; and so it is with most of the States which have not yet held their primary elections.

The publicity pamphlet is a doubtful expedient in a large State. It would have to be published in from five to seven languages in States like New York and Illinois.

The preferential ballot is a mere name as yet and would only add confusion to the bewildering chaos, unless the election laws of the States were radically overhauled and some of them disinfected with a little horse sense.

Mr. President, I understand from the Labor Day address of Mr. Gompers, which I have examined with some care, that he claims he has done a great variety of governmental deeds. I will specialize for a few minutes on Mr. Gompers.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the Senator does that, the Senator doubtless recalls the fact that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] said that Mr. Gompers did not meddle with politics, and I called attention to the fact that he had in New Hampshire meddled with politics on a certain important occasion in his efforts to defeat me for reelection. Has the Senator noticed any activity of a political nature on the part of Mr. Gompers of late?

Mr. SHERMAN. I reply to the Senator from New Hampshire that it has been with great sorrow that I have noticed the error of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I have observed great political activity of Mr. Gompers for several years. I was taking the gentleman at his word; but, then, a short time after the nonpartisan proclamation was issued with a great blare of trumpets that he was a celebrated nonpartisan, he was caught red-handed in a most shameless and unbridled political partisan attempt. I understand from the Labor Day address of Mr. Gompers, he has declared that he will deliver the whole of the labor vote of the United States to President Wilson. Well, let him to so, if he can.

He gives a list of the labor laws that have been passed since April, 1913, when the special session of Congress convened. I shall not undertake to recite them here, but, after dwelling at some length upon the variety of good things that have been done, he says that he intends to support, and he calls upon all the labor unions of the country to support, the Democratic ticket. Still Mr. Gompers is not in politics.

Mr. Gompers's son, Samuel J. Gompers, has a $3,000 appointment under this administration. He is a "deserving Democrat." Gompers senior is not in politics. Mr. Gompers senior has blacklisted everybody at primaries and elections who refused to take orders from him. Yet he displays no political activity. It is likely merely Gomperian activity.

That declaration came while the proposed wage-increase law was a live question in Congress, as it is yet. All other questions might be ephemeral; but the principal thing that remains, elemental and permanent in its result, is the fact already alluded to in this Chamber, that Congress has assumed the power to regulate and fix the wage relations between employer and employee.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. STONE. I hold no brief authorizing me to speak for Mr. Gompers. I have read in the papers in the last two or three days some reputed or reported expressions of his favorable to the reelection of Mr. Wilson. That is all I know as to his attitude. I do not rise to have any controversy with the Senator from Illinois as to whether or not Mr. Gompers properly gauged or estimated the situation. Unquestionably my friend from Illinois and I will not agree as to that; but would the Senator from Illinois deny to Samuel Gompers, because he happens to be permanently identified with a labor organization—the greatest labor organization of its kind in this country or in the world—the right of a citizen, purely as a citizen, to say that he favors the election of a certain candidate for President or the defeat of a certain candidate for President, or the election or defeat of a certain candidate for the Senate or for the House of Representatives, speaking from his viewpoint. The men associated with him in this great organization, or, at least, many of them—how many I know not—may not agree with him. I do not understand that he is attempting from what he says in a political way to speak for the organization of which he is the head, but to speak his individual views. I can not believe that the Senator from Illinois seeks to put any limitation or restraint upon Mr. Gompers or upon any other man in speaking what he thinks and what he believes is best for the country and best for the great industrial organization he represents. Certainly he has a right to give the best thought he has to that subject.

Mr. President, I can not understand why any Senator should make a personal, hostile, unkindly criticism of a citizen of our common country, a prominent citizen, because he expresses his views with respect to current questions, unless, perchance, the purpose be to disparage him and to weaken the effect of what he might say upon the country as a whole or upon the vast number of men with whom he is especially identified in this great industrial organization of which he is the head.

I beg the Senator and all Senators to pass that by, and leave to Mr. Gompers or to Mr. Anybody Else, whether he belongs to a labor organization or not, the liberty of telling the American people what he thinks, just as the Senator from Illinois can do, or the Senator from New Hampshire can do, or I can do.

All of us stand in the great world outside upon terms of equality with our fellow citizens. I did hear the Senator from Illinois the other day say that he would have no dispute with Mr. Gompers unless Mr. Gompers could in some way come into the Senate and become the equal of the Senator from Illinois, so that they might debate on terms of equality, as the Senator expressed it. Well, Mr. Gompers is not in the Senate. He probably never will be here. He probably does not wish to come here. He probably could not come if he wished. I do not know. But about this the Senator from Illinois will agree with me—that when he and I walk out of this Chamber to mingle with the American people, we can not lift ourselves up with any idea that the men and women we meet are not our equals. We must meet them as our equals, for they are our equals, if our American democracy is what the Senator from Illinois and I wish it to be.

I beg the Senator not to upbraid and criticize and condemn Mr. Gompers, nor, as I said, Mr. Anybody Else, unless, standing outside of this Chamber, he sees proper to tell his constituents or his fellow citizens what he thinks is best for the promotion of the public welfare.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, while the Senator from Missouri disclaims holding a brief for Mr. Gompers, I never heard a lawyer take up as much time for a client he did not represent as the Senator has used.

I will agree on one thing that he says—that Mr. Gompers probably never will be in the Senate. If he does not run any better than he did as a delegate for the New York State constitutional convention the last time he ran, I am quite sure he will never get in the Senate or any other public office. I looked at the returns, when they came in, in 1914 in New York State; and in the city of New York when he was a candidate my recollection is that he was the tailender in the race, although he claimed he had all these mighty elements for him.

To go back, I will take up in turn the series of questions propounded and pay some attention to them, although I do not want to occupy much time. I always go on the idea that when a fellow has a lot of interrogatories in him and is filled up with something, he had better let it all come away from him at once; and I think the Senator is relieved because he propounded a multitude of interrogatories. I do not know whether they will enlighten the Senate much if I can answer them. Some of them I can not; some I can.

Suppose Mr. Gompers undertook to deliver the entire labor vote. He claims that there are 2,000,000 members of the American Federation of Labor. If he could deliver them, it would not be because he is Mr. Gompers but because he is president of the American Federation of Labor. As Mr. Gompers he could not deliver them any more than myself individually or the Senator from Missouri individually. If he walked abroad in the panoply and majesty merely of his American citizenship, he would not deliver them any more than we would deliver them, in the absence of political organizations, and from the mere fact that we happened temporarily to be occupying the position of Senator. Merely as citizens we would not deliver very much. I never was able to deliver anything. I have been beaten in my own precinct every once in a while, and that by the element in the party to which I referred a while ago. I was continually defeated until a few years ago, when matters seemed to change. So it is not merely as an American citizen that these things count.

I apprehend that Samuel J. Gompers is not on the pay roll in the Department of Labor—that is, Gompers junior—merely as an American citizen. He is there because his father is president of the Federation of Labor.

Mr. Gompers is not consulted when the Carranza government in Mexico is recognized because he is Mr. Gompers. It is because he has been plowing with the I. W. W.'s in Mexico, disturbers of the peace, rioters, incendiaries, persons guilty of arson of various degrees, from burning farmhouses to whole cities. On our own side of the border Mr. Gompers is associated with those gentlemen, and has been for a long time. In his Labor Day speech at Lewiston, Me.——

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SHERMAN. In a moment. In his Labor Day speech at Lewiston, Me., on the 4th day of September, 1916, he took occasion to refer to the fact that he is responsible for this administration's recognizing the Carranza government. I am glad to have another count in the indictment against this unwarranted usurper, this gentleman who receives the confidence of the people, prostitutes that confidence, and abuses the power vested in him.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois now yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do.

Mr. STONE. Will the Senator allow me to do him a friendly service?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. STONE. When the Senator took the floor he said he would try to conclude by 5 o'clock. He is making an exceedingly interesting and able speech, and I am afraid he will become so absorbed in it that he may not keep track of the clock.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will take up the time that the Senator occupied in asking questions a while ago, and when I have taken that much time I will be through. I would have been through long ago but for the interruptions. I must leave, however, in a few minutes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the Senator observed that Mr. Gompers has now invaded Mexico and is organizing the so-called workingmen of that delightful Republic?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir. He claims to be in communication with them, and he soon expects to bring about a state of civil and industrial peace. By proclamation and resolution he intends to restore order in that nationality. If so, he will do more than anybody has been able to do up to this time with all the rulers of Mexico since Cortes invaded that country in 1519. Why, even Porfirio Diaz could not keep peace in Mexico. He was in trouble all the time. But here comes this self-sufficient autocrat, who will immediately go down there and by a proclamation restore order. He will stay on this side of the border when he makes the proclamation. He will never risk his precious person on the other side. I will be willing to wager any respectable sum on the locality in which he will be found.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. FALL. I hold in my hand the August number of the American Federationist, containing an article by Samuel Gompers. On pages 640 and 641 of this periodical there is set forth a letter from Samuel Gompers, under date of September 22, 1915, addressed to the President of the United States. I call the attention of the Senator to this letter of Mr. Gompers upon the recognition of Carranza and requesting the recognition of Carranza. It is dated September 22.

The statement preceding it by Mr. Gompers is that the Mexican situation was presented to the President by himself, as the president of the American Federation of Labor, as the first efforts of people long accustomed to despotism and denial of the rights of free citizens to realize ideals of freedom.

The letter to President Wilson follows. I will not undertake to read it, as it is of some length. Following the letter in this article, Mr. Gompers says:

> On October 19, 1915, the United States Government notified the representatives of the de facto Mexican Government in the United States that it would be pleased to receive formally in Washington a diplomatic representative of the constitutionalist government.

The Carranza government was recognized. Mr. Gompers in this article assumes the credit for persuading the President of the United States to recognize the Carranza government. It might be interesting, Mr. President, along with the Senator's remarks, if this letter were printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask to have that done, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

The matter referred to is as follows:

> WASHINGTON, D. C., September 22, 1915.
>
> SIR: In accord with the direction of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor, the following is respectfully submitted to you and which we hope will commend itself to your favorable consideration and action:
> There has been going on just across our southern boundary a battle which is part of the world-old struggle for freedom. Although that struggle may be associated with many things that are not in accord with our ideals, yet I am sure you recognize that these things are the first crude efforts of a people long accustomed to despotism and denial of the rights of free citizens to realize ideals of freedom. Nations, as well as individuals, as you well know, can not at once assume wisdom in the exercise of freedom. They must learn to be free. They have the right to this freedom without unwarranted outside interference even from those who seek their welfare.

The revolt of the people under the leadership of Madero against the Diaz government was an effort to realize ideals. The support given to the ideals of Madero was a proof that national virility and resourcefulness had not been crushed out by the rule of despotism. It was a proof that there were yet ideals and yearnings for the opportunities that rightfully belonged to citizens under a free government.

Under the Madero government there were beginnings of a labor movement, and an effort of the workers to organize for the realization of their ideals and for the betterment of themselves and their fellow workers. This hope was overshadowed by the barbarism of Huerta, but again grew strong and steady when Carranza asserted himself as the leader of the people.

Gen. Carranza is recognized as the friend of the working people and the real leader of the people generally of Mexico. He has granted to the wage earners the right of organization, and has secured them opportunities for carrying out the legitimate purposes of organization. He has been thoroughly in sympathy with the ideals of greater opportunity and freedom of the masses of the people. The working people have been supporting him. They have adjourned as lodges and trade-unions to enlist in the Carranza army with their union officials serving as the officers of their regiments.

The workers of Mexico have tried as best they could with the resources available to present their request and their right to be allowed to work out their own problems. They asked you and our Government for a little more patience and a little more time to prove that the Carranza government really represented the people of Mexico. You granted that request, and time has proved that Gen. Carranza is really the representative of Mexican democracy; that he represents their efforts to establish a government of the people and for the people. Gen. Carranza has demonstrated his sympathy with the ideals for which Madero gave his life, and has refused to compromise these ideals with Mexican revolutionists who were seeking their own personal interests. He has endeavored to secure for the Mexican Republic the dignity and the respect that ought to be accorded to any sovereign government.

The sympathies of the workers of the United States have been very deeply touched by the struggles of our fellow workers of Mexico. As recent events have drawn all of the countries of the two American continents more closely together, so the workers of these various countries have been more thoroughly aroused to the common interests and the common welfare of the wage earners who are citizens of the countries.

It is with the desire that we Americans who have so much liberty and so much of opportunity should use our influence to aid those who are less fortunate, that as representatives of the labor movement of America we urge upon you recognition of Gen. Carranza as the head of the Mexican Government.

The matter we know is receiving your most earnest and most conscientious consideration, and we are sure that your sympathies are very strong for any genuine effort to secure larger liberty for the people; therefore we wish you to have the assurance that the course we, as the representatives of the organized labor movement of America, urge upon you, has, we are sure, the hearty approval and indorsement of the great rank and file of the citizenship of our country.

Very sincerely, yours,

SAMUEL GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor.

Hon. WOODROW WILSON,
President of the United States,
White House, Washington, D. C.

Mr. SHERMAN. It shows that what Mr. Gompers stated in his Labor Day speech on September 4, 1916, is borne out by corroborative evidence. This letter furnishes one of the links in the chain of testimony showing that undoubtedly he has had something to do with influencing the Executive to the recognition of that so-called Government.

I am perfectly willing for Mr. Gompers to have the credit of that recognition. He claims it. Let him have it. For all that has followed in its train, all the double-dealing, all the deception, all the riot, all the pillage, the murder, the arson, the unspeakable civil conditions that have prevailed in that unhappy country, and the deaths of our soldiers at Carrizal at the hands of Carranza's soldiers, Mr. President, since the recognition of the Carranza de facto government on the 19th day of October, 1915, down to the present time—if Mr. Gompers wants to take that responsibility upon his shoulders, a part of it or all of it, let him have it.

The Senator from Missouri asked if he was not acting in his individual capacity, and whether it was not his right and ought not subject him to criticism. If he were doing so merely as a citizen, it would not. Neither would I take time in the Senate to remark upon it. Neither would I join him in a public debate on this question. It does no good. I will answer it here where I properly can, and in the campaign to come where I properly can, and I shall do so at proper times and places. I can only say this:

If a priest undertook to deliver his parishioners, if a minister undertook to deliver his congregation, if he left his holy office, forgot his priestly robes, and undertook to vote his congregation as a political unit and to deliver them to the Republican ticket or any other ticket, I would say that he had prostituted his holy calling. I would criticize the priest, I would criticize the minister of the gospel, as unsparingly. He would have abdicated his function. He would have ceased to be the spiritual counselor and guide and would have sought to become the political autocrat delivering the votes of his congregation or his parish. The ecclesiastic would be lost in the partisan. The pulpit would be filled by a politician.

That is exactly the attitude of Mr. Gompers. Mr. Gompers seeks to deliver the labor vote. He always has done so. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is entirely correct. Mr. Gompers has been in politics from the beginning. He interferes in everybody's primaries, Democratic and Republican alike. He has done so for years. Generally, he is a Democrat. Ninety-nine per cent of him is a Democrat. I do not know of any time that he has ever indorsed a Republican ticket.

I have no objection to his doing as he pleases in any particular. That is his right. I object to his brazen, unauthorized attempt to deliver the whole of the labor vote of the United States connected with the American Federation of Labor merely because he is intrusted with the power given him as the president of that federation. That is what I object to. I have a right to criticize that, and I am doing it.

I am perfectly willing for Mr. Gompers to undertake to deliver the labor vote when yoked with his political associates. Who is the political manager of this campaign? Who is it that furnishes the maneuvering, the advice, the organization? Who directs the energies of the Democratic Party? It is the head of the Post Office Department, a former Member of Congress, Mr. Burleson, of Texas. He wields all the mighty power that goes with that department, with all the postmasters appointed and to be appointed.

One of his chief assistants, Mr. Roper, is now at the Democratic national headquarters. Nobody else could be so persuasive. Nobody else could so liberally fry the fat out of Democratic postmasters like Mr. Roper, because he has been the official headsman for nearly four years; and if the brethren do not come around with the coin of the realm they will be put on the unfair list.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. THOMPSON. Will not the Senator from Illinois be fair enough to say that Mr. Roper has resigned from the position of First Assistant Postmaster General?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. Temporarily.

Mr. THOMPSON. No; for good.

Mr. SHERMAN. He has resigned—why, of course; and, as the Senator from Pennsylvania says, it is a temporary resignation. If the President should be reelected, I apprehend that Mr. Roper will be cared for in some berth where his exchequer will not suffer, before the arrangement has been worked out. No worthy laborer in the Democratic vineyard will come to want, much less Mr. Roper.

Now, so long as Mr. Burleson is taking care of the political end of it and Mr. Gompers is taking care of the labor end of it, I shall assume that those two gentlemen are the team that intend to deliver enough votes to elect the ticket. Those two Dromios are traveling along very harmoniously.

I have said all that I care to say at present about Mr. Gompers, except that I have had a great many resolutions from various labor organizations all the way from San Francisco to Philadelphia. They have denounced me without stint. If there is anything that I thrive on, it is abuse. Anybody does. When they understand both sides, they will commend me. Any normal human being will always react, just like the senior Senator from Missouri.

I had a resolution from a federation in Philadelphia yesterday morning, and it utterly denied my right even to criticize Mr. Gompers. It in substance said:

Mr. Gompers represents us, and if he needs any criticism we will criticize him. You keep your mouth shut.

That is the reason why I am opening it to-day, just among other things to show that I shall not obey the resolution. I believe in free speech for others and myself.

Now, I have a copy of the San Antonio Daily Express, dated Wednesday morning, October 20, 1909, published at San Antonio, Tex. It can be found readily in the files of the Congressional Library; it can be found in the Carnegie Library; a copy of the files of this paper can be found in the library of my home city and in at least five public libraries in the city of Chicago. So it is common property, only it has lain all these months unthought of. I deem as an impartial political historian as well as an antiquarian that it becomes my duty to dig out these remains and give them in this campaign to the public.

This is dated Fowler Station, Bosque County, Tex., October 19, 1909.

There was a labor investigating committee at that time acting under the authority of the Texas General Assembly. There was not a Republican member in the whole of that legislature.

They were investigating the convict labor of Texas. They went upon the farm which is in this report described as follows:

The Burleson & Johns farm, which lies partly in Hill County and partly in Bosque County, the Brazos River being the dividing line between those political subdivisions, is a splendid estate of about 5,000 acres. The State cultivates about 4,000 acres of it—3,200 in cotton, 800 in corn. It is the property of Congressman Burleson and his kinsman, Mr. Johns, of Austin. The principal tract lies in a big horseshoe bend of the Brazos River, in Hill County.

The men worked on this farm, Mr. President, are convicts of the Texas Penitentiary. They worked on the share plan. The State, I believe, takes 60 per cent of the proceeds and Mr. Burleson and Mr. Johns get 40 per cent of it. That arrangement was in force in 1909, when it was under investigation by the Legislature of the State of Texas. The contracts were made, and for some time prior to that Mr. Burleson was drawing the profits from that kind of an arrangement. He is now a political partner of Mr. Gompers, who intends to deliver the labor vote in this campaign.

It is my duty to apprise Mr. Gompers of just what kind of associates he has in this attempt. I have had in years past some criticism because I did not act quick enough to prohibit convict labor. We had to have a constitutional amendment in my home State to do so. Before that time we condemned the contract system, and at last abolished it. I know of no man on the Republican ticket, I know of none sitting in any cabinet position or assuming to deliver the labor vote in places connected with the contract system of years ago. More than 34 years ago it was abolished in Illinois.

Here about four years before his chief was inaugurated Mr. Burleson was engaged in drawing profit from a contract made with him and his partner by the State of Texas in which the convicts were farmed out for pecuniary gain. Labor unions have criticized that for many years, and, fortunately, in most States it is pronibited by law. Bills have been pending here for a long time to prohibit interstate commerce transporting convict-made goods and to close the customhouses of the country against the importation of foreign convict-made merchandise.

Now, that would be enough in this campaign, Mr. President, to cause Mr. Gompers some serious thought. He finds himself with a strange industrial or agricultural bedfellow. I will assume he does not know it. He has probably no more knowledge of it than he had of the MacNamaras, whose criminal deeds he said, after they confessed, he knew nothing about.

That is bad enough; but, Mr. President, the same unfortunate convicts working in the Burleson cotton fields were lashed—whether properly for good reason or not, I need not stop to inquire—but they were punished by a lash 5 feet in length; whipped repeatedly, as a State overseer said, for laziness. It is true they were negroes sent to the penitentiary for various felonies of which they were convicted in the State of Texas.

That does not justify, though, cutting their flesh open, and as the evidence taken before this legislative committee shows, standing them up on a stump 4 feet high in the burning sun until the ants out of the rotten stump crawled into their wounds. Finally one of them died. Durham was the State foreman at the time this unfortunate convict died. Thomas Durham was indicted. He was employed by the State of Texas in the capacity of custodian or overseer of the convict-labor farm of Burleson & Johns. The record shows that Durham was indicted and was charged with the direct responsibility of the death of the convict. The trial of the case occurred September 3, 1911, when Durham was acquitted, because the State could produce nothing but the evidence of convicts. This is not convincing sometimes, especially when they are negroes, before a Texas jury. The convict was dead of his injuries, though, at the time of the trial. Durham was absolved from criminal consequences. I will not criticize the jury, but it was purely convict evidence, and they saw fit to liberate him.

What happened afterwards? I commend this to my friend Mr. Gompers. Mr. Durham was appointed postmaster at Longview, Tex., by Burleson September 18, 1913. I say by Burleson, because it was his recommendation that appointed him, and not the President. The Congressman from that district protested against his appointment. The respectable citizens, a large number of them, and among them some of the most reputable citizens found in Longview, protested against Mr. Durham's appointment; but, nevertheless, the Postmaster General recommended him and he was appointed. He served until the time of his death and his successor, R. G. Brown, was appointed September 16, 1914. Mr. Durham was acquitted in 1911 and he was appointed in 1913, just two years afterwards.

Out of such labor, out of such profits from a State convict farm, out of such a tainted source, Postmaster General Burleson has become the wealthiest member of the Democratic Cabinet to-day. He has more worldly possessions than any other Cabinet member. He is Mr. Gompers's ally; he is Mr. Gompers's friend. Was this unknown when he was appointed? It will not be unknown from now afterwards. If the labor unions are as zealous about their belief and their rights as I think they are, they will begin to pass fewer resolutions about my advising them not to follow Mr. Gompers's advice on anything political and more resolutions on convict labor asking that Burleson be removed as Postmaster General. If there is any tainted money, of which Mr. Bryan made some comment in his talk, it certainly is found among the worldly possessions of the Postmaster General under this administration.

Mr. President, I am about to close, very greatly to the relief of the Senate, no doubt. I wish to add in conclusion that I suspect that Mr. Burleson can deliver more of the convict votes of this country than Mr. Gompers can of the labor votes, and I will let them make a neck-and-neck race to see who comes out ahead in that controversy.

President Wilson's administration is asking for the free labor vote. He ostentatiously asserts his devotion to organized labor. Why does he invite a convict-labor contractor to a seat in his Cabinet and still keep him when it is known to the world?

I wish to insert in the RECORD without reading the whole of the article, from which I made a quotation, from the San Antonia Daily Express.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the San Antonio Daily Express, Wednesday, Oct. 20, 1909.]

RESULTS OF THE INVESTIGATION AT BURLESON & JOHNS FARM—CONVICTS ARE NOT WHIPPED SO OFTEN NOW.

FOWLER STATION, BOSQUE COUNTY, TEX., October 19.

Upon its visit to the Burleson & Johns farm, upon which State convicts are worked upon the share plan, the subcommittee of the legislature, Senators Greer and Representatives Gilmore and Lee learned:

1. That whipping is the form of punishment in vogue upon the farm. It is not resorted to as often as formerly. The law provides that convicts shall not be whipped except upon orders from designated authorities, and not then until all authorized methods of punishment have failed. However, there is no dark cell upon this farm, no facilities for solitary confinement, no ball and chain. Hence the resort to whipping when admonition and persuasion have failed to correct a fault.

2. That conditions in respect to food, bedding, the care of buildings, and general treatment of convicts have recently improved.

FORCED TO WADE RIVER.

3. That convicts who cut wood last winter were obliged to wade the Brazos River in going to their work and returning from same. This was learned from the testimony of convicts, following up a lead learned upon the outside. There has been a change in the management of the farm since last winter.

4. Convict testimony was taken corroborating former testimony concerning the death of a convict at another farm from whipping, and the statement that this convict was forced to mount a burned stump and stand under the rays of the sun while ants crawled upon him and into his wounds.

The committee declared that the equipment and conditions at this farm were better than at any farm they have thus far visited but that they are far from satisfactory. It is taken into account, however, that it is uncertain how long the convict forces will be left on any of these farms, and therefore it is not reasonable to expect such equipment as doubtless would be provided if there was more permanency to the arrangement.

Many of the convicts with whom the members of the committee talked in the barracks, as well as two of those who testified, stoutly declared that they had not been warned not to disclose grievances, but upon the contrary had been told that they might feel free to tell the committee anything. Nevertheless, when asked if they were telling all, they said that they were afraid to testify, because they had found that convicts who told things to committees or inspectors invariably suffered for it. They added that they thought the committee would find the prisoners in all parts of the system reluctant to testify.

The testimony of the convicts was most favorable to the present sergeant, J. L. Brooks, who has been in charge of the farm since September 5 of the present year. Before the present commission he had had 16 years' experience in handling convicts in south Texas, but was out of the service for 3 years.

Asked if he had done any extra fixing up in anticipation of the visit of this committee, and when, Mr. Brooks frankly replied:

"Ever since I have been here."

Asked if there had not been special fixing just before the committee's testimony, Mr. Brooks answered:

FIXED UP FOR THE COMMITTEE.

"I saw a statement in a paper a day of two ago that you were coming, and I did a little extra screening around. We did some whitewashing only this morning. You can see the signs of it."

However, convicts who testified said that Mr. Brooks had the barracks whitewashed once a week, and that conditions at this time are about the same as they have been ever since he took charge. They said that Mr. Hicks, who preceded Mr. Brooks, had improved conditions, these improvements dating principally from about eight months ago, and that Mr. Brooks had gone still further, especially in the matter of food, clothing, and bedding. Mr. Brooks, they said, has the food better cooked and provides more of it; he also furnishes socks and underwear, which was done heretofore only in the winter.

At the request of Chairman Gilmore, the penitentiary management is having a record kept of the menu for each meal at each prison and camp. This record was started September 5, the day Mr. Brooks took charge at the Burleson & Johns farm.

The Burleson & Johns farm, which lies partly in Hill County and partly in Bosque County, the Brazos River being the dividing line between those political subdivisions, is a splendid estate of about 5,000 acres. The State cultivates about 4,000 acres of it—3,200 in cotton, 800 in corn. It is the property of Congressman Burleson and his kinsman, Mr. Johns, of Austin. The principal tract lies in a big horseshoe bend of the Brazos River, in Hill County.

SHOWER BATHS FOR PRISONERS.

The headquarters are on high ground, under the shelter of the hills which flank the bottoms. Good water is supplied from an artesian well, and shower baths are provided for the prisoners. The committee found the bathing arrangements objectionable, however, because the showers are located in an old board building, through which the wind may circulate, and which must be very uncomfortable in cold weather.

Convicts testified that they dodged the baths in winter; also that the State did not furnish towels, and that convicts who do not own towels were in a bad way to dry themselves after performing ablutions.

The buildings, sparkling with whitewash, made a pretty appearance in their setting of greensward, oak grove, and the hills for background—they look pretty and homelike at a distance. But it is a case where "distance lends enchantment to the view." They are constructed of rough boarding and are somewhat antiquated.

The main building, which is about 100 feet long and 55 feet wide, fronts east. About 20 feet of the front end is taken up by the kitchen and the guards' dining room. Back of that is a corridor. Then comes the convicts' dining room and sleeping quarters. A latticework separates the hallway from these quarters, and another lattice divides the convict dining room from the bunk house. The dining room is 15 by 80 feet and is unceiled, catching the slant of the roof. The bunk house is ceiled. It is 24 feet high over all, but only about 20 feet to the slopes on either side.

In the center of this room are the bunk racks. They are constructed of rough lumber, whitewashed, and remind one forcibly of potato bins or the racks for lumber in dry kilns. They are about 15 feet wide and 60 feet long. There are two rows of beds on each of the three tiers, a double bed and a single bed on each of the three tiers. Practically all the men on each tier sleep together. Each man has a little box for his belongings at the foot of his bed. The beds are reasonably clean; the mattresses seemingly have been refilled recently with shucks; the sheets and pillowcases are of coarse canvas.

THE TIERS OF BUNKS.

The first tier of bunks is about 3½ feet from the floor; the second is about 30 inches above the first, and the third 30 inches higher. The last mentioned has the rest of the way to the ceiling.

The ventilation is not good. On the south side of the building, the side that the breezes come from in this climate, there are six windows, about 3 by 7 feet each. These open into the dining room, between which and the bunk house the lattice intervenes. There is one window in the west, also opening into the dining room. There are only three windows on the north side of the building, and there are four on the east, opening into the corridor.

When the committee visited the building all the sash were in the windows and the lower sash on the south side were raised. On the north side the windows were down and the stoves were going.

The convicts said that in summer the sash were taken out. However, the tops of the windows are lower than the uppermost tier of bunks; the bottom of the upper sash is lower than the second tier of bunks. Convicts said that the house was very hot in summer. In cold weather the windows are closed. There is only one ceiling ventilator, about 4 by 4 feet, with slats cutting off about half the space.

The convicts wash at a perforated pipe about 12 feet long, below which is a trough, in one corner of the room. In the other corner are the toilets, four in number—square boxes, with lids, covering openings in the floor, beneath which are tubs on the ground. These tubs are emptied and sunned daily, two sets being used. Notwithstanding the free use of disinfectants, the odor is very disagreeable. It would seem that with an abundant supply of water sanitary closets might be installed. The room is lighted with kerosene lamps. There are long benches around it, upon which the prisoners sit.

Eighty convicts now occupy this building; there have been as many as 128. These convicts are all white. The committee was struck by their youth. Many of them are minors; few are above 25 years of age. Most of them have been brought direct from county jails to this camp, and few have ever been in either of the State penitentiaries. This is true even of some convicts whose terms will soon expire.

There is no school, no teaching of any kind, at this camp, and no religious services have been held during Capt. Brooks's incumbency. The physician comes out once a week; oftener if sent for.

Mr. Brooks told the committee that the rations were issued by one of the guards, and that he supervises the issuance every two or three days. Other duties prevent him from issuing the rations in person. He had whipped only two men since coming here, and neither of them severely. Their offense was laziness. The punishment was inflicted in consequence of his personal observation and upon orders. He does not give the men tasks. They are not unduly crowded at work and are not made to run. The guards do not curse or abuse the convicts; he thought the convicts would complain if they did so. He regarded corporal punishment as necessary in some cases.

Mr. Brooks said he had no recommendations to make; he regarded the present system as good enough.

During the testimony of the convicts the lash was brought out and measured. It is 5 feet long, 3½ inches wide, and three-tenths of an inch thick at the business end. The upper part is three-ply.

TELLS OF KILLING OF THREE CONVICTS.

One of the convicts told the story of the killing of three convicts at another camp by beating substantially as it was told to the committee when it took testimony at Huntsville. One convict told how a sergeant at another camp beat him with a quirt because he had failed to curse a stubborn ox, and beat him again because he cursed it as ordered.

Other features of the testimony have already been touched upon. The committee was favorably impressed with Capt. Brooks.

The menu for September 5, 6, and 7 at this farm, according to the records, was as follows:

Breakfast: Bacon, flour bread, coffee, sirup, gravy. Dinner: Bacon, corn bread, beans, sirup, soup. Supper: Coffee, rice, sirup, corn bread, bacon.

Breakfast: Gravy, coffee, flour bread, sirup, bacon. Dinner: Beans, corn bread, sirup, soup, bacon. Supper: Coffee, corn bread, rice, bacon, sirup.

Breakfast: Gravy, coffee, flour bread, sirup, bacon. Dinner: Beans, corn bread, sirup, bacon, soup. Supper: Rice, coffee, bacon, sirup, corn bread.

It will be noted that there are no fresh vegetables in these menus, not even potatoes, and that there isn't much variety of food.

The committee is accompanied by Nape Oxford, of Stephenville, official stenographer; Sam Hawkins, penitentiary inspector, by request; and Master Leon Gilmore, son of Chairman Gilmore. The committee left here for Cameron.

Mr. SHERMAN. I also wish to place in the RECORD the report of the penitentiary investigation committee of the Legislature of the State of Texas, beginning with the date line, Monday, October 25, 1909, at Huntsville, Tex., together with parts of the evidence and accompanying extracts that are material to the question that I have discussed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be observed.

The matter referred to is as follows:

REPORT OF PENITENTIARY INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE, MONDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1909, AT HUNTSVILLE.

The penitentiary investigating committee met at 1.30 in the afternoon, as per former adjournment, Chairman C. E. Gilmore presiding. The following members were present: Senators Paulus and Greer, Representatives Lee, Bowman, Moller, and Gilmore.

The committee went into executive session to discuss plans for the work.

Testimony of Senator H. B. Terrell and S. C. Branche, cashier, was taken up by the committee.

The subcommittee appointed by the chairman to visit the outside camps, composed of Senators Weinert, Paulus, and Hudspeth, and Representative Moller, reported that the subcommittee, with Senators Weinert and Paulus in attendance, had visited the following outside camps: Eldridge (Faber), Texas Planting Co. (Bonus), A. P. Borden (Wharton), Dyer & Bertrand (Richmond), and J. A. Robertson (Stimonton), and submitted the evidence taken as their report to the full committee.

The subcommittee appointed by the chairman to visit outside camps and composed of Senator Greer, Representatives Lee, Bowman, and Gilmore, reported that the subcommittee, with all members in attendance save Mr. Bowman for two days, reported that they had visited the following outside camps: Burleson & Johns farm, Henderson & Tomkins farm, Rogers & Steele farms, Calvert coal-mine force, and the Wood farm, and submitted the evidence taken at these camps as their report.

The committee adjourned to meet Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock.

REPORT OF SUBCOMMITTEE.

The subcommittee appointed by the chairman of the penitentiary investigating committee to investigate certain outside camps where convicts are worked and composed of Senator W. J. Greer and Representatives Brown F. Lee, J. R. Bowman, and C. E. Gilmore began its labors at the Burleson & Johns farm (near Fowler, Tex.) on Monday, October 18, 1909.

Representative Bowman was not with the subcommittee on the first day, but joined it at the Calvert mines.

The following testimony is the work of this subcommittee, and reported to the full committee at Huntsville on October 25, 1909. The last farm was visited on Friday, October 23, 1909.

(Oct. 18, 1909, at Burleson & Johns farm.)

Capt. J. L. Brooks, being sworn, examined by Representative Gilmore, testified as follows:

"I have been the sergeant of this camp since the 5th of September last. We have tolerable fair arrangements for bathing. We have a shower bath for the men, and each man is required to bathe once a week. Our clothing is all marked, and each man has his individual suits and he gets the suit that belongs to him. We use the stools in the building for the men at night and have tubs under these stools. We have three stools in the building. There are 80 men in the building now. We have two sets of these tubs, and after one set is used one night we haul it off between a quarter to half a mile and empty it and put lime in it and leave it to air until the next morning and then carry out the ones used that night and bring back the ones that have been out all day and night. We use lime as a disinfectant in the building. Mr. Rogers issues the rations to the men. I look after that personally occasionally. Yes, sir; I believe the rules of the commissary department make it my duty to see about the issuance of the rations personally, but since I have been here I have been crowded up with time and have not seen every issuance weighed every day. At the end of the month when requisition is made for more supplies I make the requisition myself. At the end of the month, to find out how much I have on hand I check it up by weighing the bacon and other things, and, of course, I count the flour. Yes, sir; I have checked my commissary at the end of the month, taking from it what we had used from what was on hand to see whether it checked or not. I am not a man of family. My assistant is a man of family. He does not take anything from the commissary for his family, except he lives here in the yard and takes his meal at home and at different times I have allowed Mr. Black enough beef for one meal, because he eats at home all the time. No sir; he does not take bacon, flour, or anything of that kind from the commissary. Yes, sir; I have at one time during all the time I served as sergeant, received additional pay or presents from the owner of the plantation. It was not here, though. I can not call to mind just how long ago it has been, but it was before this last law. No, sir; they have never since then given me any presents, such as hat, suits of clothes. I never received either directly or indirectly any assistance from them at all."

Examined by Representative Lee, he stated:

"I said there was 80 convicts on this farm. There are no negroes, all white men. I can not give you the dimensions of the building they are confined in at night. Yes, sir; it is a good large building. I would rather not estimate the dimensions; we can measure it if you think necessary. All of the men are confined in the main prison building at night except one, which is the cook, and he sleeps in the dining room. I have no sick convicts on the farm. One man complained yesterday and I left him in. He has not complained until yesterday. I have one crippled. He got crippled a week or 10 days ago. He got crippled by falling out the door, he and another trusty were on the steps and the trusty slipped and fell and he fell out over the trusty and bruised his knee. I have been here since the 5th of September. Capt. Hicks preceded me as captain of this camp. He was in Huntsville the last time I heard of him. No, sir; I don't think he was there in the service of the State.

"I don't know why he was let out here exactly, but suppose it was on account of his health. I have one assistant sergeant and eight guards on this farm. Yes, sir; all of these men receive their pay from the State. I have whipped two men since I have been here. I whipped them on the 3d of this month. They were both punished at the same time. I can give you the names and number of licks I gave them by looking at my record. [Witness looks at record.] This shows B. F. Luce punished, 18 licks; offense, laziness. The other man's name is Joe Oliver, punished on the 4th for laziness, and given 17 licks. This book is my time book. Yes, sir; both of these men were punished for laziness.

"Question. How did you determine that they were lazy?

"Answer. In the field they would look around over the field and wouldn't try to do anything nearly, and I would talk to them about it and they didn't seem to pay any attention to it. Yes, sir; it was from personal observation that I determined that they wouldn't do the required amount of work, and hence I punished them. Yes, sir; they are the only men I have punished. I punished them in the presence of the other convicts. I did not punish them in the field; it was in the prison building. The order for whipping these men has not been filed here. The time roll is in duplicate, and I sent one of them in. I didn't say this order had not been signed up. I said it had not been filed. No, sir; Mr. Hawkins does not sign up the blanks and leave them with me; he fills out all this other there. I made the application to Mr. Hawkins to whip Joe Oliver and J. S. Luce. I have not a copy of my letter to him. I stated in my letter the offense for which I wanted to punish them. I don't keep copies of those letters. That "O" marked there indicates a sick day. This sheet of this record is for October, 1909. Yes, sir; Louis Kincade is marked seven days; that is the man I spoke about having the bruised knee. No, sir; in whipping them I don't catch them and throw them on the floor to strap them. I didn't have to throw either of them. Yes, sir; their body was exposed. I whipped them on the rump. I didn't break the skin. It was red and bruised up a little. These are the only two men I have whipped since I came here. I don't believe I have had any other trouble since I came here. This is a share farm.

"Question. Who represents Burleson & Johns here?

"Answer. Mr. Johns comes out once in a while and talks to me about it. I generally represent both sides here. They keep a stock man here by the name of Ford. Mr. Ford never suggests to me about the working of the men. Mr. Johns never does, either, except in the working of the land.

"Question. When did you clean up with the expectation of the committee to come?

"Answer. I have been cleaning up ever since I have been here. I saw the account in the paper Saturday, I believe it was, that you were to meet in Dallas, and I made a little extra preparation around. Yes, sir; made a little this morning, too. The men were at work to-day until 10.30 this morning, when it began raining. I nearly always bring them in when it rains. Sometimes when it just comes a little shower I don't bring them in. One morning I was loading cotton with six or eight men, and it came a right smart little shower on us. I shipped 80 bales of cotton that morning. I don't divide the cotton. The financial agent and Mr. Johns does the dividing. I weigh the cotton and then ship it to Mr. Brock at Waco and send him a copy of the weights, and Mr. Johns a copy, and also the financial agent a copy. Mr. Brock is the man I ship the cotton to at Waco. Mr. Brock bought the cotton. He paid $12.75 for it. We have ginned 116 bales of cotton on this farm this year so far. I can not tell what the rest will be, for I can't tell what the bolls are going to do. I don't know how many bushels of corn was raised on this farm; it is all fed up. We didn't raise any wheat at all. This country has experienced one of the terriblest drouths ever. There is a copy of the weights and bales of cotton shipped from here this year. This retain copy shows cotton shipped from Burleson & Johns farm to James T. Brock, Waco, Tex., October 8, 1909. Tabulated bales, number, weight, number of bales running to 82, and all marked 'J. B.' Capt. Hicks said that there was 20 bales of cotton picked when I came here, and I had the rest picked. I take the men out to work about daylight, good. It is light enough to see a man well. Then we work until noon. Then give an hour for noon. Then go at it and stay until near dark.

"Question. How many hours is that?

"Answer. This time of the year it is in the neighborhood of 10 hours; maybe a little over or a little under. We try to take an hour for noon. We do not push them a great deal in their work. I didn't whip these men because I didn't think they were getting cotton enough. The way the cotton is this year I don't require any number of pounds, because we have to go over so much ground; but I have been in the service so long that I know whether a man is working or not, and whether I weighed his cotton or not I could tell if he is trying to get it. I have been working convicts 16 years to-day. During that time I have been absent from the service three years. I have worked down in the lower country. I worked negroes down there. The inspector has been here twice since I have been here. You will find the date of his visits on the book there. Inspector Sam Hawkins on the tenth month and fifteenth day, he was here last Friday. He was also here on the 26th day of September. He stayed here about two hours. He was not out in the field; just here in the building. He didn't go to where the men were at work; the men were in the building. It was about bedtime when he got here. The men were locked up, but he went in there and stayed with them an hour or so.

"Question. What recommendation have you to make to this committee that, in your judgment, would be for the betterment of the convicts on this farm?

"Answer. I don't know that I am able to say. It seems to me like under the present system that it is good enough, so far as I am able to see. When it is necessary, I believe in corporal punishment. No, sir, the necessity of it is not left largely with the guards under me. I never have yet whipped a man on the say so of a guard. My guards do not make complaints against the convicts here. If the guards have ever cursed and abused the men, I can not get a hold of it. If they have done so, I believe the convicts would tell me about it. I have always instructed them if they had complaints to make to come to me with them. I often get right down with the convicts and have a talk with them about their troubles. I am here and talk with them each day, and always stop and listen to them. We have never had religious services since I have been here. Dr. Lillard is the physician for this camp. He resides at Morgan, about 10 miles from here. I have had him here twice, and he calls twice a week, anyway. I don't work my men when they have chills and fever. There is no kind of school on the place for the convicts. There is no effort made to teach them here at all. I have a cook for the camp. I look after his work every day. The food is good and the quantity plenty for a man that works on the farm. I think a man is entitled to good wholesome food and plenty of it to give him strength to carry on farm work."

Examined by Representative Gilmore, he stated:

"I kept a record of what I gave the men for each meal—breakfast, dinner, and supper—for 30 days. I have a copy of it here. You may see it. I have been discharged from the service once during my connection with it. I was discharged for some letters I wrote to the financial agent in regard to some bacon. I don't remember the exact date, but it was in 1894 or 1895. I have never been discharged for any other purpose. I used the strap in punishing on this farm. I am familiar with the prison rules and know what they provide. They provide for stocking and dark celling and such as that as a punishment. They say resort to whipping as the last means. I always try to follow the rules. I never punish them any other way.

"Question. These two men that you whipped, did you use either of those punishments?

"Answer. No, sir; except talking to them. I warned them if they didn't improve in their work and try to do the right thing, I would have to punish them. I meant when I told them that that I would have to whip them. I resort to the strap after talking to them. We have no dark cell here, and no other mode of punishment. We have no ball and chain or shackle out here to put on them. I never tried bread and water nor isolation. The inspector has never left orders to whip men already signed for me to fill out. I would discharge a guard for cursing my men. I have done so. I don't remember the dates; possibly five or six years ago, under E. H. Cunningham. I don't know how many guards I have discharged. It is my opinion that the guards do not curse the men. There has been no complaint made of that kind. If a man has a chill, he has fever afterwards, and you can look at him and tell he is sick and not able to go out. I don't send them out every time they have a chill. If he has no fever, you can tell from his eyes and appearance that he is sick and not able to do a day's work."

Examined by Representative Lee, he stated:

"Question. I examined the place where you bathe your men during the summer time; it is a shower bath?

"Answer. Yes, sir. They bathe once a week. It is a small house, about 12 by 16. I don't know the exact measurement. I suppose that is about right. There is room for 12 or 14 to bathe there at a time. I was not here last winter. The house is pretty open. Yes, sir; I suppose that bathing in that house in a tub during the winter is a pretty cold proposition. It is not quite as cold as bathing out of doors. The wind is kinder broken off up there."

J. C. Zachery, being sworn, examined by Representative Lee, testified as follows:

"I was registered here as 28 years old when I came here, but I am considerably older than that. I was raised in Louisiana. I was convicted in Montague County of an assault with an intent to rape. I got four years and six months. The female that made the charge was supposed to be under 16 years of age. I was convicted about the 1st of February, 1907. I was brought directly to this prison, and have been here ever since. Yes, sir; I have spent two winters here. Last winter I didn't cut wood across the river. I had to cross it myself. I waded it. Yes, sir; in cold weather and all kinds; every night and morning. I generally pulled my shoes, pants, and drawers off to cross. The water was not the same depth all the time. It would generally come from the knees up to the waist on me. When we crossed we were not furnished towels to dry ourselves with before putting our clothes back on. We didn't cross the river that way in 1907. It was the winter of 1908. Yes, sir; that was last winter. Capt. P. M. Hicks was sergeant at that time. He is not here now. He left about the 6th of September, and Capt. Brooks has been here since. I don't remember how long Capt. Black has been here, but it was in the spring of 1908, some time, when he came.

"Question. Since you have been at this prison, tell this committee what has been the general treatment of the sergeant and underofficers toward the convicts?

"Answer. Well, as a general rule, they have been treated very well under the circumstances. I don't know hardly to explain my meaning. They have been very kind and good to us for the last year and 10 months, ever since the first sergeant I was under here left. Capt. Rick was his name. He didn't treat the men so well. He didn't treat us near as well as the rest do. Then he allowed the guards more privileges in abusing the men. I mean by that in cursing the men and driving them in the field. That was pretty often that the guards did that. I mean by driving the men that they would push and rush us, trying to get all the work out of us that they could get. That was not so bad after Capt. Hicks came here. The present sergeant is very good in that line. The guards now do not curse the men. I have never been punished. They do not punish men very often here. When they punish us they use that concern yonder. Yes, sir; that strap. I have seen Capt. Rich give one man a good many licks with that strap. Capt. Hicks didn't whip very much. I don't know the length of that strap. I would estimate it at something like 5 feet. I can take this rule and measure it. It is 3 feet long, 3½ inches wide. It is 3 ply to within 4 inches of half way, and then 2 ply in the center for about 4 inches, and then a single ply on down to the end. It is about three-sixteenths of an inch thick. I am not a very good guesser at weight. I guess it weighs about 3 pounds. That is the only kind of punishment I have ever seen inflicted since I have been on this farm. I don't know, sir, how many licks I have seen given to one man with that strap. There has been so many given I could not count them. They used to do that pretty often, but after Capt. Hicks came he didn't do it very often. Yes, sir; I have seen the skin broken with that strap and the blood run from the place where the man was hit. Yes, sir; and sores start from it. They hit us on the cheek of the behind and over the kidneys. I was never whipped myself. I don't know whether any men have been whipped in the last two months or not. I think Capt. Brooks has whipped two. The prison building is now cleaner than it has been in the last month or two. The inside of the building has just been whitewashed to-day. Capt. Brooks has it whitewashed every week. It is my opinion that since Capt. Brooks has been here the building has been as clean as it is to-day. Before Capt. Brooks came here the building was in an awful fix. We get plenty of fresh air in there. The sunshine never reaches the beds. They sun the beds every 10 days or so. They change the sheet on our beds every week. Our mattresses are made of shucks and are placed on boards. Our fare is common, but substantial, and has been cooked very well for the last month or six weeks. Capt. Brooks has made considerable change since he came here. We get plenty to eat all the time. I didn't see the cornbread you had for dinner. There are four men have died in this farm since I have been here. One died from typhoid fever and one was killed by lightning, and two others that were sick when they came here died afterwards. One man they said, had been down with typhoid fever for three months when they brought him here, and he came in on Sunday and died the next Monday. In the summer of 1908 there was three or four cases of fever but them came through all right. They kept these men in the hospital to the right of the main building. During the time that they had fever the building was kept pretty clean. They do not run us on the turn row. They do not push us in our work now, but they did when I first came here. There is no comparison in the conditions of the buildings now and what they were six months ago. They are much better now. They did not sun the beds six months ago as often as they do now. Sometimes they went for two and three months without being sunned. That was before Capt. Hicks left here and while he was in charge. We never had any bedbugs in there. Six months ago I have known men to go hungry. The men were not properly fed. The meat was not good. The bread was musty and half cooked. This change has been brought about since the 6th of September. Prior to that time the food was very bad. I have made complaint myself about the quality of the food and about being hungry. At that time we had on the table to eat about the same things that we have now, but it was poorly cooked, and we didn't get enough of it. We had beans and corn bread meat, and had coffee night and morning. I don't know whether or not any sugar or coffee or anything else ever went out of the commissary to other parties.

"We have plenty of clothes. They furnish us underwear. They do not furnish underwear all the year; only in the winter. We didn't wear socks all the time. They didn't furnish us socks. This man has given us socks since he came here. Last winter they gave me only two pairs of socks. Capt. Brooks gives us a pair of socks every Sunday. I don't know when all these new clothes were brought in. Just as they get low on clothing they order more."

John Hudson, being sworn, examined by Representative Lee, testified as follows:

"I was 21 years old the 4th day of last July. I was sent up from Tarrant County for manslaughter and given two years in the pen. I have been here 20 months and 17 days. My record has been all right, I reckon. I have never been punished or had any trouble. I have a month to serve from day after to-morrow, sir. Yes, sir; I only have a little more time to be here.

"Question. We want to ask you something about the present conditions of this prison and how you have been treated in the past?

"Answer. Well, since I have been here there has been a mighty good sergeant. He has not punished anyone since I have been here at all. Capt. P. M. Hicks has been the sergeant. Yes, sir; he would punish them sometimes, but he didn't whip them hard. I have never been whipped. I don't know how many men I have seen him whip. I have seen him whip two or three at a time. They were whipped for fighting one with another.

"Question. Did you ever see him whip a man until he bled?

"Answer. Yes, sir; I believe I have seen him whip one man, and he only hit him five or six licks. That man's name was Grantham. He went out of here in July.

"Question. Are there any other men in prison that have been whipped so severely that they bled?

"Answer. There was a couple whipped a while back, but I don't know how they were. The guards do not curse and abuse the men since I have been here.

"Question. Has anything been suggested to you or mentioned to the other men that they must not tell about the bad treatment?

"Answer. No, sir; only they will not let any mail go out to that effect. Since we heard that this committee was coming they have not told us not to tell anything. We can tell anything we want to. The building has only been as clean as it is now since this sergeant came here. He made them clean it up and keep it clean as it is now. The beds are kept as clean as they are now. The sheets and pillowcases are washed once a week. Since this man has been here they have given us plenty to eat, but before that we were not. We were just cut short on bread and meat before that. That has been off and on all the time since I have been here. Part of the time we would get plenty. The food has been prepared just so you could eat it and that is all. We get plenty to eat. I cut wood across the river last winter. I worked in the plow gang most of the time. The boys that cut wood waded across the river. They would take their shoes and pants off. I don't think the river ever froze over. I waded it when it was freezing weather. It was not so cold all the time. We bathed in cold water last winter. Yes, sir: up in that little house near the well. Yes, sir; that is a pretty cold place in cold weather. We kinder dodged bathing when we could. We didn't bathe in tubs; we had shower baths. They did not warm the water any just run it right out of the tank. They do not permit us to bathe in the prison building. I suppose they would permit us to take a towel and rub off in the building. They do not furnish us towels when we bathe. If you have a towel up there, you have to take your own. No sir; those are not the towels that they furnish us. If a man has no money to buy his towels with, he is up against it. Yes, sir; we do that in the winter. They do not work us in the rain, but they keep us out at work until it begins raining. When we come in we keep our clothes on until they dry. They didn't keep the building warm last winter. I had enough bedclothing to keep warm. They furnished it to me. When it is not too cold, they raise part of the windows in the building. Much of the time they are all down. I have on socks now. I have had these since cold weather. We don't wear socks all the year because we do not have them. They gave us two pair of socks last year. They give us underwear in the winter, but not in the summer."

P. Hubbard, being sworn, examined by Representative Gilmore, testified as follows:

"I was sent up from Houston, Tex., on a charge of burglary, and given 12 years. I have been here 6 years the 10th day of last April. The fare here is now a heap better than it was awhile back. It began to improve when this captain came here. It is the same grub, but it is cooked and seasoned better. Yes, sir; I cut wood last winter over across the river. Biggest part of the time we waded the river. The water was from knee deep to waist deep. When I waded the river I pulled my shoes and pants off. Sometimes on Saturday when the men were coming in to bathe and change clothes they didn't pull off their clothes. Yes, sir; they wade the river in cold weather. I didn't wade it when it was freezing weather but it was very cold. Hicks was sergeant here then. That was last winter; in 1908. I was punished twice by Sergt. Gains. He put me to driving oxen, and I had a bull that was not cut, and he was fighting me, and Capt. Gains came down and said that was the way he wanted me to drive these oxen, and began calling them G—d— s— of b—, and cursing them for everything he could think of, and two or three days afterwards he came down, and I was cursing them and talking to them like he told me to, and he punished me for cursing. I would be afraid to tell of any complaint I had to make. My reason is that I have been in here a long time and have never seen a convict tell anything to anyone that come in to visit them, or anyone going out, that they didn't get punished for it if they ever found it out. I have known of this committee coming. They have not told us not to tell anything. This captain told us if we had anything to tell the truth.

"Q. Now, your name is not to be used in the newspapers, and now if there is anything going wrong here we want to know about it, and we don't want to put you in a position where you will suffer, and we hope that we will not do anything that will cause you to be punished, and if there is any wrong being done here we want to see if we can correct it. Now, with that statement from us, is there something you can tell us about wrongs being done here that we may correct them?

A. There is a whole lot that has been done here, and I know you gentlemen will do what you say, but I am uneasy about telling it. I am here for a long time yet, and my punishment would be so severe I couldn't stand it. If I was only here for a short while I would tell you and take my punishment. I am 25 years old. I have been in over six years. I am in for burglary and theft. I got 10 years for burglary and 2 for theft. I pleaded guilty in both cases. If I was only here for a short time I would tell you what I know and take my punishment and lose my good time. Gains didn't have any orders for the whipping he gave me, and didn't take any good time off."

L. M. Dowd, being sworn, examined by Representative Gilmore, testified as follows:

"I am here from Montague County. I was sent up for two years for murder. I have been here something over eight months. I don't know that I have anything to tell the committee that I think the committee should know. If I did know anything I don't know that I would be afraid to tell them of it. Our treatment here and our food is as good as it ought to be, from what men say that come from other places. The food is better now than it used to be. The building is better under this man than it was under the other. The guards do not curse and abuse us. I have never been punished. I have seen men punished. I don't remember the exact day, but it was only two weeks ago that I saw men punished. I don't know how many licks they were struck. I saw them after they were whipped, but I didn't notice whether the skin was broken and bleeding. Their names were Joe Oliver and a fellow by the name of Luce. I said some of the guards curse, but they do not curse any of the men that I know of. I have been here about eight months. They push us in our work. Sometimes they run us on the turn row to keep up with some older men here. It is only occasionally that they do that. They get around pretty peart. I don't know just how far it is from the building to where we go to work. The furtherest point is about as far as from here to Fowler. It is about three miles. We don't run out there; we walk fast, though. Some of us have to trot to keep up. We come back about the same way. We go three miles and do a day's work, and then come back that far to the building. We generally leave here about daybreak.

"Sometimes we leave our work about sundown and sometimes later. When we are actually engaged in the work they hurry up the ones that are behind. They make us keep up with the squad. They have not placed any tasks on us since I have been here. The beds we sleep on are just a common shuck mattress. They are pretty rough when a fellow is used to better. Our sheets and pillowcases are made of ducking. We get meat three times a day and biscuits once and corn bread twice. We get all we want to eat now. I didn't see the corn bread the committee ate for dinner. When Mr. Hicks was here they had preaching once a month for a while. They held the services inside the buildings. They have no school taught here where we can see it. There is no one to teach the convicts if they wanted to study. I came here in February. We bathed up there at the bathhouse. The house is pretty open. Yes, sir; there are cracks all over it. It was pretty cold bathing. The water we used was not warm, it came right out of the well. They furnished us underwear last winter. I got one pair of socks last winter. When they were gone I had two pair that I brought with me, and when they wore out I went without. This sergeant has given us two pairs of socks. Some of the men have worn theirs out already and he has given them more. Mr. Hicks didn't make the men go out to work when they were complaining. There has been nobody died here since I came here."

J. S. Lowry, being sworn, examined by Representative Gilmore, testified as follows:

"I have been in prison since the 23d of December, 1906. During that time I have been at Rusk, Huntsville, Midway, and here. I have known during my time in prison a man by the name of Foster. I saw him whipped. I don't know how many licks he was given. They whipped him three or four times a day. The guards did the whipping. Their names were Robert Whitley and Preston Kittlebrand. H. L. Gentry was the sergeant. Yes, sir; he knew of the guards whipping Foster. I said I didn't count the licks. They whipped him four or five times a day. They beat him up until they saw he was going to die and kept him there two or three weeks and sent him to Huntsville. I saw the guards make Foster get up in a tree. The tree was full of ants and they got all over him. Yes, sir; I saw him. They kept him there 30 or 40 minutes. There was two or three other men murdered in cold blood down there on the farm. The first man's name I do not remember, but they called him 'Hot Bread.' That was in May, 1907. He was murdered because he couldn't keep up with the squad and the guard tied a rope around his neck and tied it to the horn of his saddle. He lived about three days after that. Jim Kittlebrand, the dog sergeant, did that. He was buried on the hill near the prison. I don't know where Kittlebrand is now. I know he is on the black list. The next man was by the name of Dunn. He was beaten to death by Bob Whitley and Boos Kittlebrand. He lived until about 9 o'clock that night. They didn't have the doctor with him. They buried him up on the hill, too. The sergeant was there on the camp. Gentry was the sergeant at the time. There was another fellow—a Mexican—that died this same night. I don't remember his name or his nickname or anything by which you could identify him. He was whipped with Mike Lunn in the field and the guards whipped them until they gave out and then tied them down in the field with their face up to the sun. Guards Whitley and Kittlebrand did that. Yes, sir; I saw these cases. I was right in the squad with them."

Examined by Representative Lee, he stated:

"The ants got on this man Foster when they put him in the tree. The old stump was infested with ants, and they came out and got on him. The stump was 2 or 3 feet high. I was working with the squad at that time. I can't say that I know of anything else to tell the committee to enable them in their work. Everything is getting better now. It has been getting better since the committee started. I am a trusty here. I was punished in November, 1907. I was punished by Rich, the sergeant, and he was drunk. He is not in the service any longer. The guards do not drink whisky here to my knowledge. They have in the last year or so. I was in line at the time, but was told about it by the trusties."

Capt. Black, being sworn, examined by Representative Gilmore, testified as follows:

"Yes, sir; I will give you my promise under oath as an official here, that I will not discriminate against or permit the guards under me to discriminate against these men that have testified before you on account of their doing so."

Examined by Representative Lee, he stated:

"I have been in the service of the State in the penitentiary system for about 17 years. I have been on this farm 18 months. I am the assistant sergeant here. Yes, sir; I have charge of the guards, in a way. I do not permit the guards to curse and abuse the men. If I should catch them at that, it would be my duty to report the matter to the sergeant. I do try to protect my men from things like that. The building is now in a little better shape than it was when this man took charge. Ever since he came here he has been making headway toward cleaning up everything. I don't have anything to do with the feeding of the men. Our men are not pushed or rushed in their work. We just let them take an average gait. We do not push them and try to get all the work we can out of them. We just keep them moving along and don't let them stop. We do not run them on the turn rows. The captain has told them not to rush, and so have I. There has been two men shot since I have been here. One was killed and the other crippled. Ed. Williamson was the one that was killed. Foster, a guard, killed him. Williamson run and the guard hollered at him, and he didn't stop, and he shot him. It was on the bank of the river, and he shot two and killed one. He did not hit the other man. I think he followed him up and got him. The man that was killed was across the river from him. The men were about 40 yards from the guard when they run. The other man that was shot was named McGuire. Garrett shot him. McGuire said that the other fellows that were with him said the guard had told them to run and he would let them get away, and that he had not spoken to the guard about it, but thought it was all right for him to go too. He did not kill McGuire. He is here on the farm now. McGuire said he thought it was all right for him to run for the other two men said that they had it made up with the guard to let them go, and he thought it was all right for him to go, too, though he had never said anything to the guard about it, and he run and got shot. Garrett was not discharged from here. McGuire, the man that was shot, is still here. C. J. McGuire is his name, as I remember it. No, sir; the guard is not in the service now."

Examined by Representative Gilmore, he stated:

"I am a man of family. I get a salary of $50 per month here.

"Question. I presume you feed your family from the State commissary?

"Answer. I do not; with this exception, the sergeant allows me a little beef, because I take my meals at home. I got no other supplies from here. Since I have been in the service I have never accepted any pay or presents of the owner of the plantation."

Capt. Brooks, recalled, examined by Representative Lee, testified as follows:

"I have been here since the 5th of September. I don't know how much quinine I have used since I have been here. The doctor prescribes, and the night man gives it. Sometimes we give it to the men with chills and fever without the doctor prescribing. The doctor does not furnish that quinine. The State furnishes it. I don't know how much calomel has been given. We generally give a man 10 to 15 grains. That is given in four doses, two hours apart. Generally when calomel and quinine is given it is under the direction of the doctor. I can show you better than I can tell you about who has been treated since I came here. We do not give them quinine every day to keep malaria out of their system. This record shows the day this man stopped work. He stopped work on the 13th of the month and returned to work on the 15th. The doctor called once each day."

Examined by Representative Gilmore, he stated:

"If there has been any recent order issued by the superintendent with reference to the employees feeding their families from the commissary, I have not seen it. This is the first camp I have ever had any women on. Yes, sir; I pledge my word of honor as sergeant of this camp here that I will not permit the men to be discriminated against, nor will I discriminate against them for testifying before you. I have no other motive than to do the right thing by all of the men."

J. B. Maurice, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

"There has been no one punished here for testifying. We are worked from 12 to 14 hours every day. We leave the building before daylight, have 30 minutes at dinner, and come in after sundown. The gin on the farm is in a bad state. The buildings are tolerably good, but the gin is absolutely worthless. Men are treated fine here. Conditions have improved very much since the committee were here. Feed is much better. We attribute this improvement solely to the committee. This is a good sergeant."

Morris Ennison, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

"Conditions are about the same; no one has been punished for testifying; Capt. Brooks is a square man. He treats me right. Men get plenty to eat. Sometimes the meat is not cooked done."

Arch Baker, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

"No one is punished for testifying. Guards here do not curse the men. At Henderson and Thompkins farm I heard guards throw up to the men who testified before the committee. Conditions are much better since the committee came around. We all like Capt. Brooks very well. We leave the building at daylight and return at dark from our work, having 30 minutes for dinner."

E. B. Aiken, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

"No one punished, so far as I know, for testifying. They feed us enough. The meat could be cooked better. We go out to work at daylight, have 30 minutes at dinner, and come in at dark. Men seem to be treated pretty well here."

Lonnie McKinney, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

"No one punished for testifying. We do not gamble. The sergeant stopped it right after the committee came around. The sergeant treats us very well. The meat comes up raw sometimes. Guards nor sergeant curse us."

D. J. Humphrey, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

"Conditions about the same. No one punished for testifying. Feed very well, such as it is. Meat not cooked well at times. Sergeant a nice man. Guards do not curse the men. Some work us pretty hard. We would certainly appreciate a baseball game on Sunday. When the inspector, Mr. Mercer, came around he did not examine the naked bodies of the men to see if they had been whipped. We had to ask permission of Capt. Brooks before we could talk to the inspector. The inspector told us we would have to first see the captain if we wanted to talk to him. The inspector told the men he would give orders for 20 licks, and if that didn't do he would give orders for 120, and if that didn't do he would give the 1,020; he'd keep on giving them the leather until he got them all right."

J. B. Maurice, being recalled, testified as follows:

"The inspector went into the building. He said to the men, 'I have turned you all over to Capt. Brooks, and if 20 licks don't do I'll give orders for 120; and if that don't do, by the eternal gods, I'll give 1,020; as long as you get a—s, I'll furnish the leather.'"

Arch Baker, being recalled, testified as follows:

"The inspector said 'He was out to protect the captain as much as he could. The leather is here, it has not been removed; I am going to give orders for as many a—s as Capt. Brooks calls for. If 20 licks don't do, I'll give orders for 120.' He did not examine our naked bodies. He did not give us an opportunity to talk privately to him. He addressed us in an arrogant manner."

J. L. Brooks, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

"I am sergeant at the Burleson & Johns farm. It has 3,300 acres in cultivation. The biggest portion has Johnson grass. We have some heaves among the stock. Inspector Mercer was here January 17. He said: 'I'll give one order, and if that don't do I'll give 100; if that don't do I'll give 1,000.' He did not examine the naked bodies of the convicts. I think by what he said he meant orders and not licks. He said: 'We are going to make a crop here, but I want to do it with as little leather as possible.' The State has no stock of any kind; this is a share farm. The State gets 60 per cent; owner gets 40 per cent."

J. D. Blake, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

"I am assistant sergeant on this farm. I was here when Inspector Mercer came around. Mercer said he would give orders for 20 licks, and if that didn't do he would give orders for 120, and if that didn't do he would give orders for 1,020. He impressed it upon the convicts that he was the inspector, and that they must obey the rules. I was in the building at the time that Mercer was there. He did not examine the naked bodies of the prisoners. The men were whipped with the regulation strap, which was made since the committee came first."

T. K. Lillard, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

"I am camp physician of the Burleson & Johns farm. I was in the building when Inspector Mercer was in there. He said, 'He had given orders for 20 licks.' I didn't pay any attention to what he said, but think he said he hoped to get through with less punishment than had ever been given. I took charge September last. No deaths since I took charge. Five cases of pneumonia last month and 10 cases of grippe."

Mr. FALL obtained the floor.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FALL. I do.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask the Senator to yield to me that I may submit a resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico has the floor, and he has yielded to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Missouri, I understood, intended to move an executive session. I wish to have this matter disposed of.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from New Mexico has yielded to me for the sole purpose of making a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business. If the Senator from Florida has any request to prefer, let him make it to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. If the Senator from Missouri will withhold the motion——

Mr. STONE. I will withhold it.

Mr. FALL. I yield with pleasure to the Senator from Florida.

PRICES OF PAPER.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to offer a resolution.

Mr. President, I have here a letter from the Public Printer of this date, which shows that he has been able to get only one bid on 310,000 pounds of machine-finish printing paper, and that bid from a broker, at 11 cents per pound, or a total of $34,100 for the lot. I ask to have the letter printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

Last year the same paper was furnished the Government Printing Office under contract at 3.75 cents per pound. This shows an increased price of 7.25 cents per pound, or nearly three times the amount paid last year. The total increase on the 310,000 pounds amounts to $22,475.

Another bid for only 1,000 reams of the same lot of paper is for 7.9 cents per pound, or almost double that paid last year.

For several months past the Public Printer has not been able to obtain any real competition whatever in his open-market purchases of paper required for the public printing and binding. Even for those items that he has under contract, some contractors are now refusing to deliver in excess of the estimated quantities, though the Attorney General has held that their contracts obligate them to deliver such quantities as may be required for the public printing and binding during the year. The Solicitor of the Treasury has been requested to bring suit against such defaulting contractors, but these suits can not procure paper that is now needed to continue the work of printing the necessary records of the Government. Whether there is collusion among paper manufacturers and dealers to limit the competition and increase the price for paper required by the Government, I am not prepared to state, but the circumstances are sufficiently suspicious to warrant a special investigation of the matter. The resolution adopted by the Senate on April 24, 1916, applies only to an investigation of the price of news print paper. That investigation has been about completed by the Trade Commission. I believe that the information called for by this resolution will be of great service to the Government, especially as the Joint Committee on Printing will soon be called upon to invite proposals and award contracts for furnishing paper for the public printing and binding for the year beginning March 1, 1917. These proposals are usually submitted in January and the contracts awarded about the 1st of February of each year.

I offer the resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be read and see what it is.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the resolution be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 269), as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission be, and the same is hereby, directed to investigate the increase in the prices of the various kinds of paper required for printing and binding during the last year and to ascertain and report at as early a date as practicable whether there have been any violations of the antitrust acts by any corporation in connection with such advance in prices, with special reference to the prices demanded for paper necessary for the public printing and binding.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. FALL. Mr President, if the resolution is going to lead to debate, I must object to its consideration at this time.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think it will be debated.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Florida object to adding the words "and also whether or not the paper so used was manufactured in the United States or imported from the Dominion of Canada"?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from New Mexico that I shall not occupy the time of the Senate more than two minutes. I simply want to call the attention of the Senate at this time to one or two facts.

I have not any doubt but that there has been inserted into the RECORD to-day without reading articles that will cost the Government of the United States between $5,000 and $7,000. It is a practice that we have tried to stop in the past, and I do not know when it will ever be stopped.

But there is a more serious situation than that. To-day the Government Printing Office has not enough paper on hand, if we were going to stay in session, to print the RECORD more than about 30 days. We generally have about six months' supply of paper on hand, but to-day it has run down to the very lowest ebb and we are compelled to buy the paper now at three times the ordinary price. A great deal of it comes about by Senators putting in the RECORD editorials, articles in magazines, and everything they can gather together that they have an idea the public want to read.

I hope that the resolution will be passed.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think there is a great deal of unnecessary matter going into the RECORD, but, at any rate, this investigation, I think, will clear up the situation somewhat. It has been exceedingly difficult to get more than one bid for furnishing certain varieties of paper to the Government Printing Office, although 30 concerns were invited to bid. I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHAFROTH in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as part of my remarks the letter which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE PUBLIC PRINTER,
Washington, September 7, 1916.

SIR: There is required for use in the Government Printing Office 152,000 pounds machine-finish printing paper, No. 1, white, 24 by 38 inches, 38 pounds; 76,000 pounds machine-finish printing paper, No. 1, white, 38 by 48 inches, 76 pounds; 48,000 pounds machine-finish printing paper, No. 1, white, 24 by 38 inches, 48 pounds; and 34,000 pounds machine-finish printing paper, No. 1, white, 24 by 32 inches, 34 pounds, for the purchase of which an invitation to bid on the specifications was issued, under date of August 24, to about 30 concerns interested in the manufacture or sale of paper of this description, with the result that only two bids were received, one of which covered all of the various lots described at a price of $0.11 per pound, the quotation being limited to acceptance within six days from September 5; the other bid covered one item only of 1,000 reams of 24 by 38 inches, 48 pounds, at a price of $3.792 per ream. Both prices were based upon samples submitted by each bidder.

In view of the fruitless effort to interest manufacturers of paper in submitting quotations for Government requirements, I feel that the situation is imperative enough to request that some action be taken whereby the Government will be enabled to purchase paper for public printing and binding work at a reasonable price, and in the meantime I respectfully request authority to purchase the 1,000 reams of 24 by 38 inches, 48 pounds, machine-finish printing paper, at the price of $3.792 per ream, and if the price of $0.11 per pound for the other items of machine-finish printing paper hereinabove described is acceptable that you authorize and direct the purchase.

In the event that you decide to disapprove the purchase of any of the items herein described, I respectfully urge that you issue definite instructions directing the procedure to be adopted in obtaining the necessary requirements of paper for public printing and binding work, as I am without authority to compel manufacturers of or dealers in paper to submit bids under existing conditions, and I regard the matter as important enough to justify your most serious consideration and prompt action

Respectfully,
CORNELIUS FORD,
Public Printer.

CHAIRMAN JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRINTING,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

RECESS ORDER RESCINDED.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order of the Senate providing for adjournment at 6.30 be vacated for this day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I wish now to move an executive session.

Mr. OWEN. I will be glad to lay aside the unfinished business for the purpose of having an executive session, the unfinished business, however, not to lose its place because of that.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I have the floor, and yielded to the Senator from Missouri to allow him to make a motion for an executive session.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 2 hours and 52 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and the Senate took a recess until 8.30 p. m., when it reassembled.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

To the SENATE:

The Vice President being absent from the Senate and the undersigned being also necessarily absent therefrom, be, as President pro tempore of the Senate, hereby names the Senator from Kentucky, Mr. JAMES, to perform the duties of the Chair on the 7th day of September, 1916, this substitution not to extend beyond an adjournment.

JAMES P. CLARKE,
President pro tempore of the Senate.

Mr. JAMES thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 44 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADDITIONAL CLERK FOR COMMITTEE ON THE CENSUS.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield to me to report from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate a Senate resolution with an amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. FALL. I yield if it is simply for the offering of a report and not for action upon it or for debate.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I do not think it will lead to any debate. I merely wish to report a resolution and to ask for its immediate consideration. It is a formal matter.

Mr. FALL. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution reported by the Senator from Tennessee will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 265) as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Census be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ an additional clerk at the rate of $100 a month until otherwise provided by law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?
